At no time did he shrink from any responsibility, however perilous; any labor, however arduous. Although prior to the election of Mr. Lincoln he was recognized in Tennessee as the ablest man of his party except Andrew Johnson, yet it was as governor of that State he became a national figure. The rapidity with which he organized 120,000 men for the Confederate army, despite the fact that 40,000 Tennesseans enlisted in the Union Army, stamps him as a man of extraordinary executive ability. In an account of the battle of Shiloh, by Col. William Preston Johnston, son of Albert Sidney, in the Century Magazine for February, 1885, the writer says his father's army "was weakened by the necessity of keeping thousands of troops in East Tennessee to overawe the Union population of that section, so as to guard the only line of railroad communication between Virginia and Tennessee."

He says further, "This hostile section penetrated the heart of the Confederacy like a wedge and flanked and weakened General Johnston's line of defense, requiring as it did constant vigilance and repression." And he adds that, of all the executives in the vast territory, "an empire in extent," constituting the department of Albert Sidney Johnston, "the only governor who furnished his State's quota of troops was Governor HARRIS, of Tennessee." These words are in reply to the criticisms of General Johnston by Southern newspapers for the loss of Forts Henry and Donelson and the retreat of the Confederate army from Bowling

Green and Nashville, and were intended as a vindication of that distinguished officer, but it will be seen that they are at the same time a high tribute to the executive ability of Governor HARRIS and to the unflinching loyalty and heroism of the Union patriots of East Tennessee, with whom the Governor had to contend.

Nor were Senator HARRIS's activities confined to recruiting a large army. During nearly the entire war he served as an aid on the staffs of the various commanders of the leading Confederate army of the Southwest, periling his life for a cause he deemed just—a feature of his character wherein he differed from nearly all the political leaders who aided in precipitating the civil war, for history records that these gentlemen almost invariably preferred bombproof positions to the perils of the battlefield. Had he chosen arms for his profession he might have made a great general, and rivaled the fame of that distinguished soldier, Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, on whose staff he served. Whatever Generals N. B. Forrest, William B. Bate, B. F. Cheatham, John C. Brown, and others did for the military fame of Tennessee and for their mistaken cause is largely to be shared by their coadjutor, the chief magistrate of Tennessee. And to the arbitrary and herculean labors of Governor HARRIS to force the highlanders of East Tennessee into a service abhorrent to their consciences is largely to be attributed the most heroic and sublime manifestation of physical and moral courage and patriotism recorded in the annals of American history.

But when this "man of blood and iron" attempted the coercion of the descendants of the heroes of Kings Mountain and New Orleans he encountered a people whose courage and determination were equal to his own, and who, so far from yielding to his imperious will, backed up as it was with regiments and brigades, furnished to the Union Army a larger number of soldiers, in proportion to population, than any section of the United States; and I take pride in stating that I represent a district whose quota to the Federal Army of white soldiers exceeded that of any district in the Union. And these loyal heroes and their leaders, Generals Samuel P. Carter, Joseph A. Cooper, Alvan C. Gillem, James P. Brownlow, and others did as much for the military fame of Tennessee as did the heroes and their leaders of the opposing side; and after Tennessee's vast mineral and other resources shall have been developed under free labor, the verdict of impartial history will be that they loved their State as well and served it better. Thus from the crosses of war came the heroes who have shed imperishable fame on Tennessee. "Wine issues from the trodden grape; iron is blistered into steel."

With the downfall of the ill-fated Confederacy, for whose success he had performed such herculean labors, Governor HARRIS retired from participation in public life until in October, 1869, when he came to Nashville to aid in the defeat for the United States Senate of his old rival and enemy, Andrew Johnson. With the termination of the war an incident occurred illustrative of Senator HARRIS's personal integrity in connection with the public funds of the State, and I give the facts somewhat in detail because they have been distorted and misrepresented by certain of his political and personal opponents and in turn by those who would do injustice to Republicans.

The school fund of Tennessee in 1862 amounted to $2,679,018.33, all deposited in and constituting a part of the assets of the Bank of Tennessee. In 1862 the Confederate legislature of the State directed that this fund should be invested in Confederate bonds, and it was so invested. That was an end of the Tennessee antebellum school fund, as at the close of the war the Confederate bonds were without value. In these assets, before they were removed south on the approach of Buell's army to Nashville, was $720,380.94 in coin. The fact that the reports of the bank on January 1, 1862, showed this sum in coin among the assets is probably the basis of the unintentionally untruthful statement that has been often published that $700,000 of the assets were turned over to the State authorities in 1865 and wasted. But the truth is the coin so turned over amounted to only $446,719.70. Part of the original sum was paid in salaries of State officers, part of it loaned before its return to Nashville, as the receipts in the boxes showed. These receipts and memoranda accounted for the difference between the $720,380.94 in coin, as shown by the report of January 1, 1862, and $446,719.70, the amount returned to Nashville and turned over to the State authorities in 1865, less the necessary expenses incident to their return to Nashville.

By act of the legislature of January 9, 1865, the governor, secretary of state, and comptroller were directed to invest the coin so returned, the $446,719.70, for the benefit of the school fund. In obedience to that act 7-30 United States bonds were bought, and the premium on gold being large at that time, the bonds purchased amounted to $618,250. These bonds were in the custody of the State treasurer, R. L. Stanford. In violation of the law, which required that they be kept at Nashville, he deposited them in a Memphis national bank which subsequently failed. When the action of the treasurer became known, the governor, by authority of the legislature, sent a committee to Memphis which recovered for the State $368,433.85. How much of the remainder, $249,816.15, has been recovered, I can not say, as there has not been a final termination of some litigation growing out of the matter. The treasurer, when detected in his violation of law in sending these bonds away from the capital, was the president of a Johnson political club in opposition to the reconstruction policy of Congress. He was not a Republican or ex-Confederate. He had been an officer in the Federal Army, and owed his election as treasurer to the influence of his personal and political friend, President Andrew Johnson. When his offense was made public the treasurer committed suicide. The probabilities are he had not intended to become a defaulter. He thought to speculate on State funds without the State losing by it.

When the war ended, Senator HARRIS left the United States, going first to Mexico and then to England. In 1866 he returned to Tennessee. Had he not been an honest man, he could have taken as much of this coin with him as he and his servants could have carried in his overland trip through Texas to the City of Mexico.

Totally differing from him on the leading questions of currency and tariff, and above all on the injurious consequences of his teachings in favor of secession, I do not think that the final influence of his energies, talents, and courage upon the public mind of his State and country will be beneficial. But nevertheless there was much in him to admire. His directness of purpose, his courage, his scorn and contempt for political trimmers, his generosity to the poor (for his purse was ever open to them), his industry, his iron will—these were excellent qualities, and to them he largely owed the great popularity he had with the people of Tennessee and his success in public life.

But there were some questions on which we had kindred sympathies. For the oppressed people of Ireland, for the struggling patriots of Cuba, for the vindication of the rights of American citizens in foreign lands, he had strongly pronounced opinions. And our sympathies were kindred in opposition to that greatest of modern humbugs, mis-called "civil-service reform." Senator HARRIS was too manly to pretend to favor the law while secretly endeavoring to have it violated, but he was openly opposed to this un-Democratic, anti-Republican system of life tenure in office-holding. He was as much in favor of honesty and efficiency in the public service as the pretentious people who shout loudest for reform. He knew that—

A man may cry Church! Church! at ev'ry word
With no more piety than other people—
A daw 's not reckoned a religious bird
Because it keeps a-cawing from a steeple.

We live too near the great war in which he was so potent a factor and the party strife growing out of it to expect that all should do justice to his good qualities of head and heart. He was as little influenced by a personally revengeful feeling as any man of positive opinions I ever knew. He could hate what he believed to be political heresy and yet cherish kindly personal feelings toward those whom he knew held such views. In this respect he was more liberal in spirit than many of the leaders of his party or of his provincial supporters in the lowlands of middle and western Tennessee.

Senator HARRIS was not a man of education or culture as these terms are usually understood, nor was he an orator according to the generally accepted definition of that term. He was what neither education nor culture nor oratory can make—he was a tireless and fearless worker. He was not a scholar as implying knowledge of books, but in a larger sense he was not untaught. He had a marvelous knowledge of men and how to control them. His speeches were terse, vigorous, full of enthusiasm. They were practical, dealing in facts, never above the comprehension of the popular assemblies he addressed, and calculated to produce the effect which is both the purpose and result of true oratory—that of challenging attention and producing conviction.

In breadth of intellect I do not think he was equal to Jackson, White, Grundy, Bell, or Johnson, who preceded him in the Senate, but as a party organizer and leader he surpassed them all. As an organizer of campaigns he never had an equal in Tennessee, and often during the past ten years his party would have been badly beaten under the leadership of any other man. Tennessee has furnished more names that stand high on the national rôle of honor than any State save Virginia and Massachusetts. Not to mention Tennesseans who, like Claiborne, of Louisiana; Sharkey, Yerger, and Cocke, of Mississippi; Gwin, of California; Tipton, of Indiana; Sevier, of Arkansas; Benton and Barton, of Missouri; Henry Watterson, of Kentucky; Houston, of Texas, and Commodore M. F. Maury, who attained influence and celebrity, either local or national, in other States, Tennessee has given to the National Government a number of Presidents and Cabinet officers entirely out of proportion to its wealth and population.

We have furnished one Secretary of the Treasury, two Secretaries of War, one Attorney-General, and four Postmasters-General. To this House Tennessee has furnished two Speakers and to the Senate two presiding officers, one of whom was ISHAM G. HARRIS. Besides having had three Presidents, Tennessee has had two unsuccessful candidates for the Presidency, each of whom received the electoral votes of several States. We have had two associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States. In addition to this Tennessee has furnished many representatives to the diplomatic service. But of this brilliant galaxy few were equal in force of character and ability to the late Senator HARRIS. His political convictions in the most important period of his life were on trial in the midst of remorseless war, when thousands of his friends were going down before the iron tempest of battle. He should be judged by the times in which he lived. That he possessed many manly qualities none can deny.

"Let us pass him to the grave as we would have others pass ourselves, forgetting the frailties incident to our nature and which appear to be inseparably connected with our being."

Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I did not know that arrangements had been made to-day to pay tribute to the memory of the distinguished statesman who most ably and honorably and for so long a time represented the great State of Tennessee in various high offices, or I should have prepared a suitable eulogy to his great fame and memory. But I can not, sir, allow the opportunity to pass without at least paying a word of tribute to the name and fame of Senator HARRIS. It was not my good fortune to know him closely as a companion or as a friend; but I thought I knew him as an able Senator and statesman, as a rugged, sturdy, honest man; and yet, as a member of the funeral party which accompanied the remains of the distinguished Senator to his late home at Memphis, when I approached the confines of the State which he had so honorably represented I soon learned my mistake—I then ascertained that I had but partially and imperfectly estimated the man.

When we reached the State of Tennessee, I found that his friends were legion and that they had all abandoned both business and pleasure and were present to pay their sad tribute to his fame, to his memory, and to his greatness. I remember the large concourse of people that met us at the capital of the State and the distinguished honor that all seemed anxious to pay to the statesman's memory. Rich and poor, high and low, everybody, seemed to be the friends of Senator HARRIS. They knew his work, they knew the great and valuable services that he had performed for them in his representative capacity in many ways, and they were there to add their last tribute to the great man who had been called beyond the borders that no eye can pierce. And when we reached his home, there was an impression made upon me that I shall never forget. I remember that distinguished gentlemen, representing all departments of business, all vocations in life, all professions, turned out as one man to meet the funeral party and to shed a tear at the loss of their neighbor and their friend. I remember, Mr. Speaker, as we entered that great church and took our places within the chancel the words of his pastor and that beautiful service of song, the words of which ring in my ears even to-day:

Lay him low, lay him low;
Under the clover, or under the snow,
What cares he? He can not know.
Lay him low, lay him low.

Mr. Speaker, we did lay him low; we accompanied his remains to that beautiful field of the dead, and I remember as the sun went down beyond those great shade trees that he had helped set out, and amid the scenes he loved so well, that we did not lay him into a cold, damp, stuffy grave, but rather in a repository that was literally smothered with flowers, brought there by people of all ages, all distinctions, all colors; and I said to myself, "Surely, Senator HARRIS, it is blessed to die under such circumstances as this, when all your neighbors and friends have come here, with one accord, to pay their sad tribute to your memory, and are saying, 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.'"

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the first public men that I have any recollection of hearing mentioned were Governor ISHAM G. HARRIS, President Buchanan, Abraham Lincoln, and Jefferson Davis. I was only 8 years old, but remember distinctly hearing my father speak in the highest terms of Governor HARRIS, although my father was an intense Whig.

I went out to Camp Alger a few days ago, and it reminded me of the first gathering of volunteer soldiers that I ever saw, thirty-seven years ago, assembled at the call of Governor ISHAM G. HARRIS, of Tennessee. When those volunteers of 1861, those that were left of them, returned to their desolate and ruined homes in the spring of 1865, my childish heart prayed that the day might never come again in the history of this country when there would be a call for volunteers to go forth to fight other volunteers of our own blood and brotherhood; and, thank God, so far that prayer has been answered.

After so much has been said of the life and character of Senator

HARRIS by those so much more able and better fitted to do justice to his fame and memory, I feel great delicacy in attempting to speak here to-day, for fear that I may rather detract than add to the interest of the occasion.

Senator HARRIS's early years were spent in the beautiful and intellectual little city of Paris, the county seat of Henry County, noted then, as at present, for its public men of national reputation. Such a home and surroundings were well calculated to develop the talents of the young and ambitious HARRIS. While his home was at Paris he was twice elected to represent that district on this floor. His beloved wife died there only a short while before the death of her illustrious husband.

On account of the long and intimate association of Senator HARRIS with the people of the Eighth district of Tennessee, I should feel that I had not discharged my full duty if I did not at this time and on this occasion give some expression of the esteem in which he was held by his old friends and associates.

Senator HARRIS was in public life almost continuously for over fifty years, and in all that time never suffered even a temporary defeat, while at times he had to and did overcome an adverse party and political majority. Of how few of our successful public men can the same be said? While courteous and affable, he was not that character of man known as a good electioneerer, a good hand shaker. He was rather blunt and plain in his manner and address, but always sincere and candid. He was a man of great moral and physical courage. He was not a political diplomat. He never sought to accomplish his purposes by scheming or machine methods. He spurned an attempt at indirection.

It was never charged against him that he belonged to any political ring or that he was in any sense a party boss. His was a most positive character, bordering on the dogmatic. He had enemies, as all such men have, but he was never revengeful. He never sought to popularize his views by other means than clear and forcible arguments, tersely stated. He used no circumlocution, no confusing platitudes. When he stated a proposition, no one, however simple or untutored, could possibly misunderstand him.

While there is perhaps no single great legislative enactment bearing his name, there was no man in the Senate during the last twenty years who had or exerted a greater influence in the national legislation of that period than Senator HARRIS. There was no man in the Senate of the United States during his long period of service whose word was more implicitly relied on. No one ever questioned his sincerity or honesty. It is useless to give details or circumstances to justify this statement, as no enemy, personal or political, ever questioned his honor or integrity.

While Senator HARRIS was twice a member of this body, three times governor of Tennessee, and twenty years a Senator, all the details of his public career have been so fully stated by others who have gone before me that it is unnecessary that I should make further mention of them at this time. I suppose that if all his acts of usefulness during his long and eventful public life were stated in detail it would require volumes to contain them.

Senator HARRIS was endowed with a most remarkable memory. I will ask the indulgence of the House to relate an incident that goes to show how great a memory he possessed. In the campaign of 1876 Governor HARRIS and Gen. WILLIAM B. BATE, now the honored senior Senator from Tennessee, were to deliver addresses at an old-fashioned Democratic rally and barbecue held in Linden, Tenn., then and now my home.

I was selected, together with Dr. S. A. McDonald, to go to Waynesboro, the county seat of Wayne County, 30 miles distant, and pilot Governor HARRIS through the country to Linden. Dr. McDonald and I were on horseback, while Governor HARRIS and his son were in a buggy. About halfway between Waynesboro and Linden, while riding some 200 yards in advance of the buggy, we saw a covey of birds by the side of the road.

Dr. McDonald alighted and picked up a stone, threw it into the covey, and killed two of the birds. We waited until his buggy came up and gave the birds to Governor HARRIS. We went on to within 8 miles of Linden, and stopped over at the home of Dr. McDonald for lunch and to feed and rest the horse the Governor was driving. The birds were at once dressed and cooked, and Governor HARRIS ate them. Twenty years after this date, at the time Senator HARRIS was elected to the Senate for the fourth consecutive term, I was in Nashville and, with Gen. M. H. Meeks, called on Senator HARRIS at his hotel to pay our respects and to congratulate him on his election without opposition.

I had not met him since that trip from Waynesboro to Linden. At the time I piloted him through the country as above stated I was very thin in flesh, but at the time I met him at his hotel I had become stout. When I presented myself, the Senator took me by the hand and looked me steadily in the face, as was his custom. I said to him that I was the young man "who, twenty years before, had piloted him from Waynesboro to Linden," and asked him if he remembered me. He replied, "Oh, yes, I do; and I remember those birds that Dr. McDonald killed and that I ate for my dinner that day."

The incident had long passed out of my mind, but the Senator remembered it quite well. He then gave every incident and detail of his visit to Linden, and what occurred after he arrived, and the names of old friends he met while there, and related all that took place on the day of the barbecue, with much more circumstantial detail than I could have possibly done.

Only a short time before his death I heard him go over the details of court trials in which he had been engaged that had taken place more than fifty years before, giving all the minute particulars as though they had occurred only the day before.

For many years before he died he was regarded by the whole people of Tennessee with the warmest feelings of affection. He was lovingly called "the old Senator." When "the old Senator" made a promise, no one ever entertained the slightest doubt but that he would most faithfully keep it.

No public man has passed from this life within the last fifty years who was so universally mourned throughout the State of Tennessee as was Senator HARRIS. Expressions of heartfelt and sincere grief know no party lines. At an informal meeting which took place at the Ebbitt House, in this city, on the night after his death, was gathered every Tennessean in the national capital to give fitting expression as to the great loss our beloved State had sustained in his death.

In that meeting were men of all shades of political opinion. In that meeting were men gathered together from the highest to the lowest walks of life. The gray-haired statesman of wide national reputation sat beside the humblest Department employee, all drawn together by a common sorrow; all grieving over the loss of a loved and cherished friend. No one could tell who was Republican or Democrat in that assembly, but anyone could easily see that all were sincere mourners. Such distinguished Republicans as Hon. A. H. Pettibone, Hon. W. P. BROWNLOW, Gen. George H. Maney, and many others were present and took conspicuous part in the proceedings, all evincing a genuine and unaffected sorrow.

No man that ever lived had truer friends than Senator HARRIS, and no man ever lived who was more faithful and devoted to his friends than was Senator HARRIS.

Though dead, yet does he live. His life and teachings are today exerting a great and lasting beneficial influence over the minds of our young people. He has left us an example that we will do well to imitate. His life and accomplishments are a hope and a comfort to those worthy and ambitious youths of our land who are hampered and cramped by poverty.

He was in the most literal sense a self-made man. Beginning life without money or influential friends at the tender age of 14 years, by his own unaided efforts he won the highest positions within the gift of the people. He is a conspicuous example of what can be accomplished in this goodly land of ours by untiring effort and perseverance. His life will be a beacon light to worthy thousands who are now struggling against the cold and chilly waves of adversity and poverty.

Mr. Speaker, Senator HARRIS did not live in vain, and he has not died in vain. Full of years and honors, he sleeps the sleep of the just.

[Mr. SWANSON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that the deaths in the present Congress have been more numerous than the average in preceding Congresses; but it has seemed to me that the stricken ones were unusually prominent. Out of this House went that man of long service and great usefulness, William Steele Holman. From the Senate were taken Senator Earle, of South Carolina (a new man in the body, but eminent in his State), two great Senators from the State of Mississippi, and the great veteran Senator from the State of Tennessee. In these notable deaths our attention has been directed pointedly to the fact that a number of great men of the older period, of the generation to which but few now living belong, have passed from us lately; and scarcely can we hope that the present and the oncoming generation will be equal to the task of filling as well as they filled the places which they vacated.

It is not much that I can add to what has been said in sketching the career and outlining the salient points of the character of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee. It has been said very truthfully that he was one of the foremost men of his day and generation—gifted with great ability, a man of superb courage, honest and direct in all his methods. Through a long period in the service of his State and his country, his triumphs have been such as but few men reach and scarcely any can rival.

At first blush it might seem to us that, starting as he started, poor and obscure, is a disadvantage in the great race of life. To the comparatively weak, the timid and the fearful especially, poverty and the lack of influential family do indeed amount to great hindrances—hindrances that often make miscarriage and shipwreck of all the voyage of life. But, however it may be in other countries, it is true, I think, in this, that a considerable portion of the men really strong by nature are made stronger by early contact with poverty and early experience of privation. We often look upon the careers of our great men in retrospect and say to ourselves that they would have been much greater, that their achievements would have been more marked and their success more signal, if they had started in life with better advantages; if their early opportunities had been superior to what they were; if family influence had given them aid which they were denied.

I believe, however, that such an idea involves a superficial and incorrect view of the possibilities of life in this country and of the achievements of our great men. In a country like this, where the people do their own governing—where the people are the great power, the source of all power, and where those who fairly attain high position and honestly retain it long must be entrenched in the confidence and support of the people—it seems to me nothing so well fits a man for an illustrious career, nothing so securely binds him to the interests of the great masses of the people, as the hard but valuable experiences in youth of a life of penury, of toil, of sacrifice.

This country can attain its high destiny—the people of this country can be measurably prosperous and happy—only when those who administer the laws, those who are clothed with great power, capable of great things good or bad, are true to the interests of the masses. Steadfast fidelity to the public interests generally can be found in large measure only with those who partake of the feelings and sentiments and experiences—who enter experimentally into the lives—of the great body of the people. Those who have been brought up in affluence, those whose early opportunities were great, those who have had the pathway of life made smooth and easy for them from beginning to end—they can not, from the very nature of things, enter into the lives, appreciate the motives, understand the difficulties, estimate properly the rights and the duties of that stern, that noble citizenship which belongs to the common people of our great Republic.

With very few exceptions—there are some notable ones—the men who have made illustrious the history of this country, who have been benefactors of human kind in their age and generation, who laid the foundations of this Republic and builded the nation, who sustained it in times of trial and who will sustain it in all the years to come, they have been and are those who came from the plain level of the people—the men with the experiences which are common to the masses, and therefore with the sympathies which must reside in those who represent properly, and who only can thus represent, the great body of American citizenship.

This man was peculiarly strong in that respect. His early struggles with poverty, his early privations, his early triumphs over difficulties which assail so many in a country like ours, marked him and fitted him for the great career which he rounded grandly. Without high ability, without superb courage, without unshaken honesty, without fidelity to friend and candor in dealing with the foe, he never could have been as great as he was; and perhaps he never could have developed in high degree any of the great, the inestimable, the noble qualities which he exhibited if he had not had that stern, hard discipline in youth and early manhood in which such qualities are developed if the germ of them exist at all.

But a few years ago, Mr. Speaker, when the great party to which the departed Senator belonged was considering, away back in the school districts, in the small conventions and the chance assemblages of the masses of its people, questions of vital party and national importance; when a great question was brought up within the lines of the Democracy to which he was devoted as to whether the few or the many should control within the party; as to what should be declared as the party creed; as to who should be in command and who, for the good of the party, should be retired—I recollect that then he was one of four great Senators, men of influence and might in the party, men of influence and might in the country, who were instrumental in assembling, in an unofficial way, in his well-loved city of Memphis, a large number of representatives of the party, to consider, quietly and as American citizens, what ought to be done, what the needs of the party and the country were in the crisis through which we then were passing.

To Senator HARRIS, Senator George, Senator TURPIE, and Senator JONES of Arkansas—they are the four whom I remember particularly and preeminently—from the standpoint of those who think as I think and who try to act as I try to act with regard to these great public questions, a world of gratitude is due. Then there took form in the great party, of which Senator HARRIS was an exemplar and a leader, that which was in the minds of the masses. The movement then inaugurated and put fairly upon its feet gathered strength and force until a year later the efforts of those who thought as he thought were crowned with success, and the representatives of the party, meeting in national convention, declared at Chicago what the true party creed was and is; what the true party creed should be.

Very much indeed did this dead Senator add to the reputation of the State, already great, which he honored and which honored him. High, no doubt, will he rank in all time to come among the great men of that great State. High will he rank, as long as the annals of Congress are read or known, among the great men of this nation. He possessed in marked degree qualities which it has sometimes seemed to me are not too common, not too generally found in public men. He was thoroughly devoted to any cause in which he was enlisted. He was thoroughly open and direct in his methods, and his position, once taken, was held with Spartan tenacity. He may have seemed impetuous in advocacy, as has been remarked here this afternoon; he may have seemed impetuous in action, but it was the impetuosity of courage and conviction.

The subject considered, the conclusion reached, the die cast, he may have appeared impetuous in execution. Nothing remained but to make known the decision and to act upon the lines deliberately chosen. In action there is no time for consideration of whether there should be action. When the charge is sounded there is no time for considering whether it should have been sounded. Senator HARRIS distinctively recognized this, as every great man in history has recognized it, and acted upon it. Careful and cautious in reaching his conclusions, thorough in his investigations, his conclusions once reached, his determination once arrived at, the time for action once at hand, he was impetuous in the charge—there was no halting and no hesitancy about his course. He struck home, struck quick, and struck hard. It was this quality, among others which he possessed in a high degree, that made him the conspicuous figure that he was and that he will remain in the history of our country.

Beautiful and feeling tributes have been paid to his memory by those who knew him personally far better than I did. Distinguished men from his own State have delighted to praise him by telling the truth about him. Distinguished men throughout the land, while they may not have known him so well, delight also to join, though far distant they may be, with their tribute. And the great mass of the people the country over, forgetting whatever faults he may have had—and all men have faults—recognize that his virtues triumphed over his faults and in their splendid glow obscured them almost entirely from view.

Among all the great men of the land, Tennessee's venerable Senator ever will stand as one of the most able, most courageous, most useful. Such a standing few men attain. Such a standing reflects at once honor upon the man who attains it; honor upon those connected with him by blood, by position, by association; honor upon the community which honors him, and which he in turn honors. Such a man, with such standing, was ISHAM G. HARRIS.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Speaker, Senator HARRIS was in public life many years before I was born. I was not privileged to be socially intimate with him for the reason that his home was in the distant end of the State, but from my earliest childhood my father taught me to love and respect him, and as I grew to manhood I learned to look up to him as a leader, a patriot, and a statesman worthy the exalted love of a great people. I have frequently asked myself: "Why do the people love this man so devotedly?" and I found its solution when I came to know him and his works better. It was because he never abused their confidence.

No man has ever lived to say that ISHAM G. HARRIS deceived him. I have wondered also why it was that his political foes held him in such high esteem, and I have concluded that it was because they always knew where to find him and he never struck below the belt. He was a man of magnificent courage, physically and morally. Never in his long and splendid public life did he palter with truth or hesitate between two opinions. He dared to be right. What lofty courage it sometimes requires! He never betrayed a trust, and he made candor the cardinal principle of his life.

Senator HARRIS was stricken with his fatal illness shortly after I entered upon my duties at this capital, and I was denied much of his wise counsel which I had so much depended upon to equip me for duty here; but as a Tennessean and one of his constituents and disciples I am joint heir to a rich heritage of benefit that flowed out of his great and eventful life. His mind retained its vigor until the last. When the hand of death was upon him and he awaited with calm fortitude the dire event, I called upon him and found him greatly interested in the four-days adjournment question then pending, and with wonderful precision and almost supernatural clearness he laid down the principles involved, which I afterwards found the law books verified. He had not investigated the books; it was intuitive, evolved out of his own innate wisdom.

Mr. Speaker, when this great spirit had winged its flight to other spheres, we took up the wasted tenement it had so long occupied and bore it lovingly to Tennessee where his people might do it honor, and the multitudes of people, regardless of politics, creed, or race, who crowded past his bier bore eloquent though tearful testimonial to the universality of that love which they all bore him. On that occasion, when the best men of Tennessee were assembled to pay tribute to his memory, Col. John J. Vertrees, of Nashville, presented resolutions, which I ask to have printed here, together with the remarks he made, and I offer them in lieu of further remarks myself. They pay masterful tribute to the memory and deeds of a great man, and I ask that they be printed here that they may be perpetuated in the forum he so long honored.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McMILLIN). If there is no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

APPENDIX.

Memorial and resolutions adopted at Nashville, Tenn., July 12, 1897, under the direction of committees from each grand division of the State, presented by Mr. J. J. Vertrees, of Nashville, for citizens of the State.

Great men are jewels of the Republic. In peace we proudly boast of their characters and their achievements. In the hour of danger we arouse to action by their names and heroic deeds. It is therefore the duty of those living in a republic to pass down to posterity with truthful and fitting testimonials the name of every really capable, honest, courageous public man.

Senator ISHAM GREEN HARRIS was such a man. On the 8th day of this July, in the eightieth year of his age, he passed away.

In 1847 he was elected State senator and introduced into public life. In 1897 he died a United States Senator, after fifty years of almost continuous public service. While his countrymen mourn his death, it was not untimely. Neither in length of days nor in lofty bearing was his death untimely. By reason of strength his years were fourscore, and they were full of that worth which entitle his name to live. We do not mourn for him as citizens of a republic which has been deprived of the full harvest of a strong and useful life, but grieve for him as a friend, and lament that we are deprived of his leadership, his influence, and his strength.

It were idle for us to testify in phrase and speech to the high esteem in which Mr. HARRIS was held by the people of Tennessee.

That he served them fifty years and died with the harness on, enjoying the highest distinction which it was within their power to bestow; that from 1847 to 1897 he repeatedly contested with our ablest men for public honors, and never once suffered defeat; that a nation mourns his loss, and for the first time drapes the Senate Chamber on the occasion of a Senator's death—proclaim the strong hold which he had upon the confidence and affection of his countrymen.

Mr. HARRIS had foes. He had a multitude of unflinching friends, and, of course, had foes. He was not without faults, but the faults were as nothing to the virtues which were his. He who stands immediately by the mountain's side may here and there observe the irregularities which appear to mar the patch of surface which his vision may command; but he who views it sufficiently afar to see the mountain itself—to observe the grandeur of its sweep, its loftiness, its massiveness, and its reach—forgets the gnarled tree and barren spot upon its majestic side. So it is with the character of a great, strong man. So it was with Mr. HARRIS.

He knew little of books, but much of men. He was sagacious. He was wise. He had the resistless and self-sustaining power which is born in the union of courage and will. He was himself a power because of the fact that whenever responsibility was his, decision marked the act.

He was governor of Tennessee during the critical period which marked the war between the States. He was emphatically a "war governor." No governor was more resolute, impetuous, and aggressive than Mr. HARRIS. He declined the proffer of a seat in the Confederate senate for the reason that it would deprive him of the companionship of Tennesseans in the field. He became an exile in foreign lands when the fates announced that the Union should be preserved. He never apologized nor recanted. Nevertheless, he realized and patriotically accepted the consequences. For the last twenty years he was a Senator of and for that Union he had previously labored so ardently to dissolve. It was no merit to him, neither would it be meritorious in any Tennessean worthy of the Senatorship, that every act and word and vote as Senator was loyal and patriotic, and delivered with an eye single to the preservation of the Union, strength and prosperity of the States. It was well understood by the people of Tennessee when he was elected that Mr. HARRIS could and would pursue no other course.

When he was elected, loyalty to the Union was what the people of Tennessee demanded, and when he accepted the Senatorship the loyalty which never shrinks was the only thing they had any right to expect. It is not, however, to his loyalty that we would refer, but to the fact that this sagacious and patriotic man, whom those who knew him not are wont to describe as "unreconstructed" and imperious, has exhibited a conservative and wise appreciation of conditions which many others, called wise, have not. Senators and Representatives from the South have often been goaded and taunted with the past. "Rebel" and "disunion" and "disloyal" have been exasperating missiles which have been kept in political stock; and the Representatives from the South have often been provoked into retort.

This is not true as to Mr. HARRIS. Courageous, resolute, and even at times imperious, he has borne in dignified silence all offensive allusions to the past. The past with him was truly a dear and cherished memory, but as a United States Senator he sought neither to vindicate nor to defend. His every word was of the present and of the future of the people whom he served and whose happiness he labored to promote. The silence of Senator HARRIS was like the silence of General Lee, and reveals a greatness of spirit and patriotic purpose possessed by few.

In another respect Mr. HARRIS was conspicuous. He was a most candid, punctual, and truthful man.

In him there was no deceit—no promises broken, no pledges unfulfilled. Mr. HARRIS, like other public men, was not exempt from the aspersions of party rancor and the malignity of defeat; yet the accusation was never even made, to our knowledge, that he had broken a promise or betrayed a friend.

Mr. HARRIS was always with the majority, yet he never followed them. He was too sagacious, wise, and practical to be a mere follower. He was too independent, honest, and brave to follow, or even seek to ascertain the popular will. But he was a Democrat of the strictest sect. He had real faith in the people. He was one of the people himself. Consequently, his sagacity perceived at once what was for their good. He subordinated his opinions upon party questions to his deep-rooted views of government and to his confidence and faith in the honesty of the people themselves. His common sense was so clear, so honest and extraordinary, that it not only commanded and secured him leadership, but it inspired in him an unusual confidence in the sense and judgment of his fellow-men.

He revered the constitution of his State and country. Infringement of constitutional safeguards and limitations was to him political sacrilege. To cross the barriers which constitutional law had erected against the aggressions of power or the invasions of centralization invoked from him protest and denunciation, strong, earnest, and masterful. To hold intact the constitutional and reserved rights of the people was with him a political faith intense and enduring. His hand and voice were ever ready to defend them from attack at any cost. If need be, he would have willingly yielded his life for their preservation. Accurate and comprehensive in his conceptions of the fundamental principles of free government, he is entitled to a place with the foremost men of the day. In history the name of ISHAM G. HARRIS will rank with those whose lives and deeds have made the annals of our country illustrious.

Mr. HARRIS was not only candid and sincere, but he was personally an honest man. For a long period prior to the war between the States the Government was administered by the men of the South, and it is our pride that during the long period of their domination they were conspicuous for their integrity and their freedom from the practices by which officials can amass wealth. Mr. HARRIS was a worthy representative of this class. In dramatic oratory, in aggressive power, and in imperious will he was a statesman of the old South. In unswerving and clean-handed honesty he was also one.

In one respect he was much misunderstood by those whom he vanquished and overcame. By such the continuous victories of his career were largely ascribed to the manipulation and control of an organized and well-supported political "machine." Nothing could be more inexact. He neither promised, nor organized, nor flattered. He wrote but few letters, and they were chiefly replies. He was always supported by an army of friends, but their organization and enlistment were due to no dextrous manipulation of his. His candor, his faithfulness, his probity, his sagacity, his loyalty, his power as a man, were qualities which drew men to him, commanded their allegiance, and, unconsciously but surely, organized and inspired his "machine."

To this should be added his affection for the people of Tennessee. As a Senator he labored as earnestly to aid, promote, and assist a Tennessee Republican, when political conditions admitted of it, as he did a Democrat. And the only wish expressed by him, and often repeated, was to be removed before the end, that he might die in Tennessee.

RESOLUTIONS.

It is, therefore, with a melancholy but patriotic satisfaction that his countrymen do now resolve:

That in the death of Mr. ISHAM GREEN HARRIS the Republic has been stricken, and Tennessee has lost an able, honest, capable, loyal, and courageous son; and

That it is due to his memory that his virtues be publicly commemorated; and

That it is due to the living, and to those that come after us, to declare that it is the sense of his countrymen who knew him, and who are also not unfamiliar with the fame of great men who have gone before, that the truth, candor, honor, honesty, courage, and successful career of Mr. ISHAM GREEN HARRIS entitle his fame to live, and that they do reflect honor upon and give renown to Tennessee; and

That the respect which has been shown by the nation officially to his memory and the universal expressions of confidence and regret by the press of other States is grateful and gives consolation to the people of Tennessee; and

That while the history of this State teaches that a strong man has ever been found for every great occasion, and that in the death of one of her sons Tennessee has never suffered a loss beyond the stature of all her surviving sons, yet the many virtues, unblemished and successful career of ISHAM GREEN HARRIS were such as to excite no higher desire than that the successor of Mr. HARRIS in the Senate shall have the strength to bend his bow.

[Mr. KING addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. Speaker, it was the profound remark of a wise old Mohammedan caliph that men are more like the times they live in than they are like their fathers. Mind and character are cast in the mold of environment; they take form and color from their surroundings; they are fashioned to the hour by the plastic hand of circumstance. Types of character come and go with the varying phases of social, economic, and political conditions, of national growth or decay. Times change and men change with them. The rough-hewn characters who lay the foundations of empire in the midst of pains and perils are but feebly stamped upon the lineaments of a softer age. We are not born of the dead past, but are children of the living hour. Upon its Procrustean bed the tyrannical present fits each generation to its own whim or need.

ISHAM G. HARRIS was a survival of a type which has passed or is fast passing with the conditions that gave it birth—the old frontier or pioneer type. He was born in the early years of the century, when Tennessee was but young in the Union, when the smell of the wilderness yet lingered in the air of its new-born civilization, when the character of the age drew its sap and vigor from the forest mold. He possessed all the essential qualities of the hardy and heroic statesmen-warriors who on the Watauga and the Cumberland made a clearing for civilization and free government. He was of the mold and fiber of Andrew Jackson; a character of massive simplicity, of heroic force and clearness; fearless, resolute, masterful, and imperious, he was born to lead, and, by the sheer force of his personality, to rule.

The composition of his nature was not complex or intricate—its elements were few and simple. To know him at all was to know him well. Long years of close and intimate association only strengthened and deepened the earlier impressions. You were never startled or surprised by the revelation of new and unexpected traits, except that the softer and gentler side of his character was not kept on public exhibition. In his many acts of kindness and generosity, indeed, his left hand was hardly suffered to know what his right hand did. Otherwise all his traits and qualities were stripped to every eye.

His intellect was not subtle or ingenious, but robust, vigorous, direct, guided always by unfailing common sense. His judgment was wonderfully swift and wonderfully true. He was not widely or deeply read—though he knew accurately the political history of his own country—but he knew men, and he understood the springs of human action.

His long public career, unbroken by a single defeat, is worthy of study, for it is stored with lessons to the rising generation, in which may be learned the secret of failure or success. He lived a life full of stormy conflicts, in which were given many a hard and bitter blow—blows which left behind them lasting enmities and unforgiving animosities. Yet from the first to the last of his long career victory clung to his standard, and amid all the great and rapid political changes of his time popular confidence never wavered from the man who adhered with stubborn, defiant, combative tenacity to his earliest creed.

Many a man, his equal in intellect and in many other qualities of leadership, would have gone down in any one of the many storms through which he passed triumphantly and with honor. His success was a triumph not so much of intellect as of character. The people had marked him as a man worthy of confidence, and he justified their faith, not by seeking to find and follow the popular opinion, but to instruct and guide it. He dealt with perfect candor both with individuals and the public. He was, I believe, the most truthful man I have ever known. His statements of fact were never colored or warped from the line of accuracy by prejudice or self-interest.

Perhaps the highest tribute that could be paid him is to be found in the negative fact that, though he lived for years under the full blaze of a passionate and hostile criticism, no accusation tainting his honor has ever adhered to his fame. No charge of double-dealing, of deception, or even of a lack of full and perfect candor was ever laid at his door. His bitterest foes have been forced to admit that ISHAM G. HARRIS was a man to be trusted when he had given his word.

Such qualities as these won and retained for him throughout all his stormy life the unshaken confidence of the people. He had few of the arts of a popular politician. His manner was lacking in warmth and cordiality, and, except to those who knew him well, he often seemed distant and reserved. With a marvelous memory for fact and incident, he had a poor memory for names and faces, and he never affected to remember a face he had forgotten.

His enemies, who could not or would not understand his success, attributed it in large measure to his matchless skill in the management of a well-organized machine. Yet in truth no man ever profited less by such methods. His methods were perfectly open, straightforward, and direct. He made no promises. He sought no alliances. He wrote few letters and made few suggestions as to the management of his own political affairs. He went straight to the people and appealed to them from the hustings, and there he won all his battles.

No man in Tennessee was ever more powerful or effective as a public speaker, and he was preeminently so in joint discussion, where all the latent power and fire of his nature was stirred by the presence of a strong antagonist. In the days when the Whig and Democratic parties in Tennessee possessed an unusual array of brilliant orators, ISHAM G. HARRIS was the peer of the best. He met in joint debate such masters of political controversy as Neil S. Brown, Robert Hatton, John Netherland, and others, and no antagonist ever bore away from him the prize of combat. He was not a phrase maker or a rhetorician, but he possessed the faculty of sinewy, terse, incisive speech, with intense earnestness of manner, an impressive delivery, and a gift of plain and logical presentation. His manner of public speaking may be described as argument, warm and glowing with earnestness and passion.

In the discharge of public duty he was rigidly conscientious. He loved to do things well—not brilliantly or with splendid dramatic effect, but well. It was not enough for him to gain the approval of his countrymen. His conduct and the results were subjected to the merciless analysis of his own judgment and scrupulously tested by his own estimate of the scope and measure of his duty.

It would not be true to say that he took no thought of his own fame; but no man ever made less effort to gain a factitious popularity. No man ever did less purely to win public approval. He did not delight in the applause of the moment. He valued only that solidly built esteem formed to endure the impartial criticism of the future and against which the pitiless years may beat in vain.

He trusted the people as implicitly as they trusted him; he trusted not only their good intentions but their intelligence and capacity for self-government. Believing, with never a shadow of doubt, in the truth and righteousness of his own principles, he was never apprehensive as to his own political fortunes. But even to the people he never stooped his high, imperial crest. He never wheedled them or cringed to or flattered them. His kingly manhood stood erect in the pride and dignity of its character, and he faced the people confidently and without fear. It was a confidence both in himself and in them.

He was never troubled with doubts. His opinions once formed were never clouded by any vague misgivings. His beliefs and his purposes were always as clear as the noonday to his own mind. He never groped in the fog or stumbled in the dark. He knew his way and walked with confidence.

In the course of his long and eventful career the fiber of his character was many times put to the sternest trial. When the war of secession began, he was serving his second term as governor of Tennessee. He was a thoroughgoing secessionist. He believed in secession, both as a constitutional doctrine and as a practical remedy. He believed that it was impossible for the Union to endure and the institutions of the South to be preserved, and with characteristic courage he accepted the inevitable. Tennessee was slow to yield to the secession movement, and Senator HARRIS'S enemies have often said that he dragged it out of the Union against its will. Certain it is that the tremendous force of his personality was a powerful factor in bringing the State under the banner of the Confederacy.

As governor of Tennessee his resourcefulness, his marvelous energy, his intuitive judgment and decision of character, his thorough knowledge of men, his genius for administration, made him the greatest war governor of the South. In spite of the fact that his capital was in the hands of the enemy and that a large part of his State was loyal to the Union, he gave to the Confederacy 100,000 soldiers thoroughly organized and equipped. It had been his purpose upon the expiration of his term as governor to take command in the field; but because his successor could not be inaugurated owing to the capital being in the hands of his enemy, he served as governor to the end of the war. He was, however, with the army of Tennessee from the time of the fall of Nashville, rendering gallant and conspicuous service. He was volunteer aid on the staff of Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston at the battle of Shiloh, and in the thick of all that bloody fray. He rallied in person a Tennessee regiment which was retreating in disorder and led it back to the position from which it had been driven. He was by the side of General Johnston when fatally wounded, and bore him from the field.

The end of the war found him broken in fortune, an exile from his country, the proscribed representative of a ruined cause. But he returned to face the new duties, problems, and responsibilities of the hour, and he faced them with courage and practical wisdom. It was not in his nature to repine. He cherished no illusions as to the results of the war. He saw what had been irretrievably lost and what might yet be saved from the wreck and ruin. He turned from the dead past with sorrow and faced the future with high resolve. His dearest hopes had been entwined with the fallen Confederacy; but he knew that the cause he loved had died on the field of battle and he did not withhold his beloved from the grave. Thenceforth the destiny of his people was to be cast with the Union, and under its flag and law its future must redeem its past. To the Union, therefore, sincerely and ungrudgingly, he gave his renewed allegiance.

He reentered public life as a candidate in the Presidential election of 1876. His name was in that year presented to the Democratic convention as one of the electoral candidates for the State at large. There developed in the convention an unexpected opposition to his candidacy. There was still some prejudice against him among the "Old Line Whigs." There were those who feared that his conspicuous activity in the secession movement would alienate a considerable body of Union Democrats, and there were the usual number of pusillanimous spirits who always visit the blame of their misfortunes upon the leader of the unsuccessful cause.

All these sentiments found voice in the convention. He was nominated in spite of this opposition, but, stung to the quick, he appeared before the convention and in a speech full of patriotic fire declined to allow his name to be the cause of discord in the ranks of his party. All opposition was swept away in the enthusiasm which his speech evoked, and in spite of his declination the convention again selected him by an almost unanimous vote. He adhered, however, to his decision and announced that he would canvass the State on his own responsibility. So effective were the series of speeches which he delivered in that memorable campaign that by the time the legislature assembled there was not an opponent to dispute his election to the Senate.

Upon his subsequent career I need not dwell. It is enough to say that during all the years of his service in the Senate he held fast to his fundamental conception of Democracy, a strict construction of the Constitution. To that doctrine, as to the Ark of the Covenant, he fixed his faith and hope.

During all these years he was the acknowledged leader of the Tennessee Democracy, infallible in council and invincible in the field. The growing infirmities of age never dimmed his mind, weakened his intellectual energies, or abated his zeal for the principles he loved.

In the great battle of 1896, though weakened by disease, his interest in the campaign burned with unwonted energy and power. Perhaps it was because he realized, as I know he did, that amid the tumults of the next Presidential contest, the "thunder of the captains and the shouting," his voice would not be heard. He felt, like Ossian, that this was the "last of his fields." He determined to give the last remnant of his strength to liberty and the people.

Charge once more, and then be dumb;
Let the victors when they come,
When the forts of folly fall,
Find thy body by the wall.

His last days were characteristic of the man. He had known for weeks that death was upon him. He accepted it serenely and without a murmur. It is natural for men when the hope of life has passed or is passing away to seek consolation in the sympathy of those about them, to touch their hearts to pity by allusions to the dread event, and find a wretched comfort in the sorrow of their loved ones. Not so with him. He trod the wine press alone. For long weeks and months he looked steadily in the face of the king of terrors, and his own stout heart, which had sustained him through life, sustained him in death. Calmly, silently, and heroically he awaited the "inevitable hour."

A character both unique and great has passed. His conquering spirit, his iron will, his brave and true and generous heart will be with us no more amid the scenes of this mortal life. In the soil of his own beloved State his ashes have been laid to rest, and sorrow's tears will keep green his grave, while love and honor will sentinel the hallowed spot where he sleeps his last, long sleep. We may not hope to see another who can draw his bow or wield his sword, for "he was a man, take him for all in all, we shall not look upon his like again."

APPENDIX.

MEMORIAL CEREMONIES.

Mr. W. J. Crawford, permanent chairman of the committee on arrangements and temporary chairman of the great meeting of the people at the Auditorium, said:

"LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: In behalf of the committee charged with the preparation of a memorial service befitting the dignity and character of the late Senator HARRIS, I take the liberty of calling this assemblage to order, and find pleasure in presenting the presiding officer on this occasion in the person of a man who is known, honored, and beloved throughout this country."

"When in early manhood he served his country in an humble capacity in a foreign clime, and still later, when he by his peerless courage and indomitable will won the hearts of his command as well as the stars of a major-general, and subsequently when full of years and full of honors, broadened and dignified with a ripe experience, he guided the helm of state and represented the Commonwealth in the Senate of the United States, he was and always has been prominent and preeminent by reason of the fidelity, courage, and integrity with which he served his cause and his people. When the people of this State and this country assemble to attest their respect for the memory and services of Senator HARRIS, it is eminently proper that he who for many years shared his burdens and his battles should preside over the ceremonies, and it is especially appropriate on an occasion such as this that the people should be given an opportunity to delicately express their high appreciation of one who has always served them with modesty, with manliness, and with ability—your senior Senator, Gen. WILLIAM B. BATE."

[Senator BATE pays a tribute to his late colleague in the United States Senate.]

Senator BATE in assuming the chair said:

"Having been invited to preside over this memorial meeting, and as others have been designated to deliver addresses suitable to the occasion, it is not expected of me to present other than a few words by way of introduction to that which is to follow."

"Descending from a pioneer parentage, ISHAM GREEN HARRIS was born in that beautiful and romantic part of Tennessee where the waters of Elk River flow under the spurs of the Cumberland Mountains, which overlook the picturesque and productive valleys of Franklin County."

"By birth, by early training, by education and development he was essentially, and all in all, a Tennessean—and as the bud unfolded into the blossom of practical life under the genial and inspiring influences of that day which so splendidly developed Tennessee and Tennesseans, his natural attributes and tendencies strengthened and matured into ripe manhood and clung to him through his long and eventful career and, now that he is gone, leave a resplendent memory."

"Possessed of strong natural ability that was eminently practical, and backed by a will power and energy and an ambition that had a spur within, ISHAM G. HARRIS began the battle of life."

"The time in which he lived afforded rare opportunities for men of metal and merit to push to the front and gain distinction, and he readily and rightly availed himself of it. But to follow his career would be to go through a large part of the history of Tennessee during the last half century, and the time allotted to introductory remarks will not allow it."

"The chief and culminating point in his history, and that which most attracted the public gaze, was the course he took at the outbreak of the war, while he was governor of Tennessee. The time, the occasion, and the office he held gave him such opportunities as have rarely fallen to the lot of man. They opened the way for service to his country in a great crisis, and he gave it courageously, faithfully, and acceptably."

"The keynote which he struck at the outset of hostilities when called upon, as the governor of Tennessee, by President Lincoln for men and means to use against the South, was such a prompt, laconic, and emphatic denial that it not only found favorable response in Tennessee, but was applauded to the echo throughout the South."

"The war being upon us, and the State of Tennessee having formally seceded from the Union, Governor HARRIS, as governor, mustered in and organized more than a hundred thousand soldiers for the Confederate service. Hence he is known to history as one of the 'war governors.'"

"Without going into detail, it is sufficient to state that from the first reveille to the last tattoo in Confederate camps, Governor HARRIS was an active factor in our great unequal contest."

"Being by nature, as he was by profession, a Democrat in its broadest and most liberal sense, he was easily a favorite with his people and was one of the leaders who was rarely if ever out of touch with them. Hence it was an easy matter for him to be elected to anything within their gift."

"Since peace came unto us he was four times elected to the United States Senate from Tennessee. The State has honored him and he has honored the State. The Senate likewise honored him by electing him President pro tempore of the Senate, and he thus became its presiding officer in the absence of the Vice-President; and in this, as in other official places held by him, he became master of the situation and brought credit alike to himself and the office he held."

"In no part of his life was Senator HARRIS ever a drone in the human hive, but an active participant in its make-up and management."

"As an actor on the stage of life he played a leading part, and when the curtain fell at the close of the last act in the drama it but removed the actor from sight, leaving fresh and pleasant memories of his sayings and the impress of his doings upon those who saw and heard him."

"But 'Thy scythe and glass, O Time, are not the emblems of thy gentler power,' for even 'the Old Guard' must surrender to thy inexorable demands. Senator HARRIS, one of the last of the Old Guards—and they are getting scarce now—stood for twenty years in the Senate a sentinel to guard the Constitution of our country. But this faithful old sentinel has been called by the decree of fate from his post of duty, and his mother, Tennessee, has put him to rest in her bosom within the sacred precincts of your own Elmwood.

"It is well—

"And if through patient toil we reach the land
Where tired feet, with sandals loose, may rest,
Where we shall clearly see and understand,
I think that we will say, 'God knew the best.'"

When Senator BATE had concluded his brief speech he asked the audience to rise, and then called upon the Rev. Dr. N. M. Woods, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, who offered prayer.

The invocation was impressive, asking the blessings of Heaven upon the exercises, and praying God that the good lessons to be learned from the life of Senator HARRIS might be impressed upon all present.

Professor Arnold's orchestra rendered a selection when Senator TURPIE had concluded. The governor of Tennessee, Hon. Robert L. Taylor, was the next speaker, and Senator BATE introduced him as the representative of the State upon the occasion when citizens of the State would honor the dead who, when living, labored so ably and conscientiously to honor the Commonwealth of which he was a Senatorial representative. Governor Taylor was accorded the closest attention while he delivered the following graceful utterance:

"MR. CHAIRMAN, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: I come to drop a flower of love and reverence on the grave of ISHAM G. HARRIS in the name of the State which he served so long and so well. If all the noble deeds he has done for his country and his fellow-man were flowers I could gather a million roses from the hearts of Tennesseans to-night. Whatever else may be said of him, he was an honest man. His heart was the temple of truth and his lips were its oracles. He loved his native land, and loyalty to the public duty was his creed. He lived a long and stormy life; he died a hero.

"The summons came to him in the triumphant hour of the State, when the centennial bells were ringing out the old century and ringing in the new. In the glorious noontide of Tennessee's joyful jubilee, when the trumpets of peace were pouring out the soul of music on the summer air, he heard the solemn call of another trumpet, which drowned all the melodies of this world. He saw the shadow of an invisible wing sweep across his pillow, a pallor came over his face, his heart forgot to beat; there was only a gasp, a sigh, a whispered 'I am tired,' and tired eyelids were drawn like purple curtains over tired eyes; tired lips were closed forever; tired hands were folded on a motionless breast. The mystery of life was veiled in the mystery of death.

"What is life? What is death? To-day we hear a bird singing in the tree top; they tell us that is life. To-morrow the bird lies cold and stiff at the root of the tree. It will sing its song no more. They tell us that is death. A babe is born into the world. It opens its glad eyes to the light of day and smiles in the face of its loving mother. They tell us that is life. The child wanders from the cradle into the sweet fairyland of youth and dreams among its flowers. But soon youth wakes into manhood and his soul is afire with ambition. He rushes into the struggles of real life and wins his way from the log cabin to the gubernatorial chair. The lightning begins to leap from the gathering clouds of war; the live thunders begin to fall around him, but he stands like a lion at his post, and when the dreadful shock at Shiloh comes, where the flower of Tennessee are rushing to glory and the grave, through the rifted smoke I see him kneeling on the bloody field with the peerless Albert Sidney Johnston dying in his arms.

"At last his flag goes down in blood and tears. He is exiled from his country, but the clouds soon clear away and he returns in triumph, to be clothed by the people with greater power than ever before, and to sit like an uncrowned king in the highest council of the nation, until his raven locks turn white as snow.

"But the scene shifts again, and as we are called from our revelry to stand around the coffin of our matchless Senator, there are tear stains on the cheeks of merriment, and mourning muffles mirth. They tell us that is death!

"The song of the bird is the soul of melody, and the laughter of the child is the melody of the soul. The joys of youth are the blossoms of hope; manhood gathers the golden fruits. But death robs the bird of its song and steals laughter from the lips of childhood. Death plucks the blossoms of youth and turns the golden fruits of manhood to ashes on the lips of age.

"Poor bird, is there no brighter clime, where thy sweet spirit shall sing forever in the tree of life? Poor child, is there no better world, where thy soul shall wake and smile in the face of God? Poor old tired man, is it all of life to live? Is it all of death to die? Is there not a heaven where thy tottering age shall find immortal youth and where immortal life shall glorify thy face? It must be so; it must be so.

"A solemn murmur in the soul
Tells of a world to be,
As travelers hear the billows roll
Before they reach the sea."

"There must be a God. We look up through the telescope into the blue infinite and catch glimpses of his glory. We see millions of suns flaming like archangels on the frontier of stellar space. And still beyond we see on ten thousand fields of light crowns and shields of spiral wreaths of stars, islands, and continents of suns floating on boundless opal seas. And are there no worlds like ours wheeling around those suns? Are there no eyes but ours to see those floods of light? Are there no souls on those far away summer seas? No wings to cleave that crystal air?

"Surely there can not be a universe of suns without a universe of worlds, and reason teaches us that there can not be a universe of worlds destitute of life.

"We turn from the telescope and look down through the microscope and it reveals in a single drop of water a tiny world teeming with animal life, with forms as perfect as the human body, yet invisible to the naked eye. It can not be denied that some power beyond this world created them. We know that some power beyond this world created us. We know that they must perish and that we must die, and we know that the power which created them and us and the stars above us lives on forever.

"Therefore, somewhere beyond this world there is infinite power and eternal life. Let us hope that Christ, who whispered 'Peace' to the troubled waters of Galilee, has whispered 'Peace' to the troubled soul of our departed Senator, and that his tired eyes have opened to the light of a blissful immortality."

[Congressman WILLIAMS's address as the representative of the lower House of Congress.]

"One sweetly solemn thought" was the offering of the memorial choir at the conclusion of Governor Taylor's address. Senator BATE, when the singing was at an end, presented Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, a member of Congress from the Fifth District of Mississippi, who had been invited to represent the National House of Representatives on this occasion. Mr. WILLIAMS delivered the following address:

"MR. CHAIRMAN, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: Perhaps the best definition of philosophy is this, that it is the contemplation of death. This means in its utmost analysis that it is the study of the immutable and eternal in thought—in a word, of the immortal in man—of that which remains as characteristic and as establishing identity after what we call death has taken place.

"How far death puts an end to the man as we have known him in life will always remain a debated question. Some of us, drawing a lesson from the acorn, the grain of corn, the pollen in the lily cup, the tiniest material thing that is made, can not conceive of a moment at which the essential man has ceased to exist, or his identity has been destroyed. But, however skeptical the most skeptical and materialistic man who differs from us may be, there is one sense in which he must recognize the fact of the immortality of all men. It is the sense in which the man's thought and feeling, his psychical identity, continues with and influences others after his death, and often without conscious knowledge on the part of those influenced of the source whence the mental and moral molding comes.

"In that phase of man's many-sided existence on this earth which we call the 'public' phase—in the field of political life, where the opinions the most are molded and shaped to the governance of all—no man in Tennessee, except Andrew Jackson alone, ever influenced other men more during life than ISHAM G. HARRIS, nor will continue after death to influence them more.

"There was a reason for it. It ought not to be far to seek. His position was never doubtful; his voice was never uncertain.

"The man did not know what insincerity and half-heartedness were, except in so far as he observed in the lives of others the overt acts which proved them to exist.

"Before I discuss the philosophy of his life, in the meaning of my definition, let me run briefly over its events.

"He began life as a man when he was a child of 14. He has himself told me of incidents which show him to have been, even at that early age, the trusted and controlling adviser of his own father, suggesting and executing the family movements, ordering and prescribing its practical life. Before he was 16 he was merchandising successfully on his own account among strangers to himself and his family. He not only succeeded as a 'business man,' but succeeded brilliantly, and when misfortune came—a bank breaking and sweeping away an accumulated competency—the uncompensated persistence of the boy—father here, as always, to the man—enabled him at once to meet all liabilities and retrieve all losses and lost gains. More than that, undisturbed by misfortune, marred by disaster, he executed his closely nursed desire to study and practice law. The exigencies of his business did not interfere with the execution of his purpose, nor did his study of the law interfere with his determination to make a success of his money making to the limit of becoming independent. He was never a lover of money for its own sake, agreeing with Burns that he wanted money—

"Not for to hide it in a hedge,
Not for a train attendant,
But for the glorious privilege
Of being independent."

"Yet thus early in life he showed his ability to make it, if he chose. Many so-called 'business men'—fellows who think that God made men that men might make money—oblivious of this episode of his life, criticising Governor HARRIS's position on a great public question, have said deprecatingly: 'Oh, he is a politician; he is not a business man.' There are only two mistakes in the criticism; first, the assumption—the innuendo—is false; it is not true, it is eternally false, that a man must have devoted his life to piling up money for himself before he can be presumed to comprehend the science of money in its relations to trade, values, and the public good; and, secondly, the politician, in this particular case at any rate, did possess all the insight, practical sagacity, and organizing methods of the typical business man. Had he chosen to remain in that walk of life and to make the accumulation of dollars his life work, he would have distanced his critics.

ENTRY INTO POLITICS.

"Not only did he begin man's work in private life when almost a child, but he had taken a place in public life when almost a boy. As early as 1847, when comparatively a young man, he was elected a member of your legislature. The manner of his entrance into public life was characteristic of the man, with whom initiative was never wanting and with whom aggression frequently mounted to the level of audacity. A Gordian knot in practical politics was to be untied. Like Alexander, he cut it. A Whig and two Democrats, each of the latter jealous of the other's preferment and insistent on the maintenance of his own prestige, were candidates in a district Democratic by a close vote. To add another Democratic candidate to the list would seem the acme of folly, resulting in 'confusion worse confounded,' but that is precisely what ISHAM G. HARRIS advised and did, proving then, as he did so frequently in later life on battlefield and in council, that he possessed that rarest of all gifts among leaders of men, whether in peace or in war, the sagacity to know when to be audacious. As Johnson says—

"When desperate ills demand a speedy cure, Distrust is cowardice, and prudence folly."

"I shall not give you in detail a history of the man's career. Suffice it to say he became from that time on a trusted counselor in party life. In 1849 he went to Congress; remained two terms; refused a proffered nomination for a third. There was perhaps a reason for this course not at that time perfectly clear even to him. It was a day of compromise and diplomacy, when good men on both sides were striving to forestall foreseen calamities—to avoid the humanly unavoidable—disunion and war. This young man, then only 30 years of age, was not then, nor, indeed, at any time of his life, even when old age had mellowed him much, fitted to shine when compromise was the goal of leaders and the wish of followers. He thought, to be sure, that everything possible in that direction ought to be tried, and hence gave his voice to the experiment. But between the lines it was soon easily to be seen that this decisive and incisive intellect had no confidence in conciliatory makeshifts, however patriotically intended, but would be found when the time came with those who, like Yancey on one side and Seward on the other, announced themselves openly as being 'in line of battle' for 'the inevitable conflict'—to them plainly, recognizably inevitable. Until other men saw how 'coming events cast their shadows before,' his best place was in private life. He had no useful place in public life.

"In 1854, when nominated as Presidential elector, he began to speak out the thought which had become clear in him. It was then that he took the at that time bold position for practical politics that the Union was a mere means to an end, a contrivance of our forefathers to secure the liberties and lives and protect the property of the people; that when it ceased to subserve those ends, or either of them, much more when it became a threat to the least of them, it was time to cease to regard it with superstitious awe and to seek to substitute for the means which had failed some other and adequate means.

In a word, he was enlisted as a disciple of John C. Calhoun, driving his theories of right to their irresistible conclusion in action. Nor did he, foreseeing the possible issue, dread it as an alternative.

"Among all the disciples of John C. Calhoun there has never been one who was better fitted by boldness of temperament, logical directness, and sympathy of intellect to carry his theories unswervingly to their practical, necessary, and unavoidable conclusions of fact. Long after these theories had been shattered on the battlefield, during the Fifty-fourth Congress, Governor HARRIS, speaking of the public men with whom his long career had made him acquainted as factors in political thought and work, brushing the other men whom we had been discussing aside as, after all, of small estimate, said: 'But the greatest mind and the greatest man political life has ever furnished was John C. Calhoun.' Such was his estimate of the great logician, the great apostle of State rights and local self-government.

HARRIS IN HISTORY.

"But to pass on.

"History was made rapidly in those days. In 1857 ISHAM G. HARRIS became chief executive of this great Commonwealth. In 1859 and 1861 he succeeded himself. Those of us who love him best like to call him 'Governor' yet. He was the last of the 'war governors.' Nothing but the fear of the charge of invidiousness prevents me from saying that he was, in executive ability, the greatest of them all.

"The Confederacy rose and fell.

"A few years of exile, and in 1867 he returned to his home town and practiced law among you until 1876. From 1876 to the day of his death he was a Senator in the Congress of the United States.

"I have given this bird's-eye view of a career familiar to you all, in order that you and I both might realize how long Governor HARRIS has been a moving factor, how long a leader, in American politics and during what troublous times. For these were the days that stirred men's passions and tried men's souls; first the days of antislavery agitation, the first sounds of which had alarmed Jefferson 'like a fire bell in the night'; then the days of civil strife, when more than Greek met more than Greek in the fearful sweat and tug of war, and then, most trying of all, the days of reconstruction, when the very groundwork of civilization itself seemed undermined, when day after day Southern manhood was humiliated and Southern womanhood was menaced.

"Think of it! This man whose memory we celebrate to-day saw almost the birth and saw the end of the greatest constitutional agitation the world ever saw. His public life was as long as the natural lives of two full generations. It lapped over in many cases to the third. I know of an instance where he served in Congress with the grandfather, afterwards discussed the constitutional right of peaceable secession with the father, to whom he subsequently issued a commission as a Confederate officer, and then, long after, served with one of the present representatives of the family once more in the Congress of the United States. There are many families in Tennessee with whom he has been similarly associated in public life.

"But why do I wish you to realize the length and variousness of his public service? Because, during all that long period, this man was never once lacking in thought, feeling, utterance, or service to the common people, nor to the State of Tennessee, nor to the South. Because, most remarkable of all, during all that long time, amid all the entanglements of practical politics—and it brings strange bedfellows—no man ever so much as claimed that this man had broken his plighted faith or been lacking in service to any friend who had not first been notoriously untrue to himself. Because, during all these generations, his enemy never accused him to another enemy of a misstatement of fact or of a deception, and for the simplest of all reasons—the other enemy would not have believed him.

"No man was ever more soundly hated than ISHAM G. HARRIS, and he was himself what Samuel Johnson called a 'good hater,' and yet no man's word was ever more implicitly and universally accepted as final in a statement of fact. Those who knew him, therefore, were not astonished when, in the city of Washington, a bitter Republican Senator from a New England State rose to his feet when a bill was pending for the payment of a very important claim against the Government and, addressing the Senate, the following conversation, substantially, occurred:

"Mr. President, I would like to ask the senior Senator from Tennessee a question. Has the Senator from Tennessee made a personal investigation of this case?"

"Senator HARRIS replied: 'I have.'

"Is it the opinion of the Senator from Tennessee that this claim is just and ought to be paid?"

"Senator HARRIS replied: 'It is.'

"Then, Mr. President," said this Republican Senator, 'this is sufficient for me, and will, in my opinion, be sufficient for the Senate of the United States.'

"In all this long period, though many people thought him often wrong, and radically wrong, nobody who understood the meaning of the word ever accused him of being a demagogue; that is, of advocating a measure because it was popular, and not because he verily believed in it, or opposing a measure because it was unpopular, and not because he verily reprobated it.

HIS INTELLECTUAL POWER.

"You have known men of higher intellectual powers, though not many; you have known men—many men—of greater and broader educational cultivation, but I have never known a man whose conclusions were more logically, unflinchingly, and impersonally drawn from his premises, nor one more sincerely convinced of the eternal truth—the subjective verity—of the basic principles embodied in his premises. But this logical faculty, rare and unerring as it was, was not the secret of his success nor the mainstay of his greatness. Nor was it his power of speech, though this rose at times to the level of that of the orator born, not made—persuading men's wills as well as convincing their judgments. After all, however, he persuaded chiefly because he was himself so thoroughly persuaded; he convinced chiefly by the emphatic utterance of the unornamented truth, his own convictions being so intensely earnest and so palpable to all men.

"There were few men who equaled him in resourcefulness and in what may be called intellectual energy. He was simply untiring, setting for himself, in the seventh decade of his life, tasks from which strong youth would have shrunk. But this even was not the main secret of his power over men. Many men have possessed equal intellectual energy and have none the less fretted away their unavailing lives. Nor can you find the secret in his remarkable executive or administrative ability—the power to organize, as it is called in this latter day—though as a political organizer he seemed all-seeing, aggressive, at once bold and comprehensive—practically perspicacious of the characters, motives, opinions, and surroundings of men.

"The secret which we seek is to be found in his force of character, resting on the three rocks of his courage, his confidence in the common people, and his integrity; chief of all, on the integrity of the man—integrity in its etymological sense; that is to say, the 'oneness' or 'wholeness' of the man. His worst enemy in his fiercest moment never charged ISHAM G. HARRIS with duplicity; that is, with doubleness of purpose, or two-sidedness of utterance, or half-heartedness in action. It is the opposite of these that make a man what he was—an integer, not duplex; a whole number, not a half number; a single number, not a mixed number—in the affairs of life.

"His ends were single, his means direct.

"In his old age some one asked him, Governor, to what do you attribute your long success in practical politics? His reply was, 'I don't know, unless it be to the fact that I early learned the difficult art of telling the truth.' 'Difficult' is well said here, for although Bulwer is right when he says, 'No task is so difficult as that of systematic hypocrisy,' yet none is more inviting to the ordinary office seeker and officeholder, none easier to enter upon. Duplicity, the all-things-to-all-men face, manner, carriage, and utterance, which is the entrance into the field of hypocrisy, is so easy in the beginning.

"Governor HARRIS carried his directness of purpose and utterance so far that he did not have even what are called 'popular manners' to help him on. The little hypocrisies of convenience even, excusable as they are held to be in the mixed associations of public life—even these he scorned to practice. When men said, 'Governor' or 'Senator, I don't believe you remember me,' his reply was not the usual formula, 'Your face is familiar, but—' etc., unless, indeed, the formula was the very expression of the very fact. His reply was, 'No, sir,' or 'No, madam, I do not.' His friends have heard him say these words in this way, not once, but many times, and have seen sensible men receive the response sensibly and many fools go off offended.

A MARVELOUS MEMORY.

"He cultivated the habit of accuracy in detail to such an extent that it was marvelous merely as a display of the mental powers of memory. His repetitions of conversations, of arguments, and of repartee drawn from his many campaigns were intended to be in letter, word, and gesture precisely as they were uttered forty, twenty, and ten years before. I have heard him relate some of these in the office of Harris, McKisick & Turley in Memphis, and then, nearly twenty years afterwards, I have heard him repeat them in Washington in the same words, with the same intonation and emphasis, and frequently with the same gestures. If he had failed verbally to italicize anything he or the other interlocutor had emphasized thirty years ago, I think he would have held himself guilty of an untruth.

"This integrity of character, this thing of being an integer and not duplex, of being one—a whole number, and not a half number, nor a mixed number—stood him in much need in sore time. It stood him in need in business affairs in the hard days right after the war. When the war came he had accumulated over $150,000. When it ended he had absolutely nothing. I do not suppose he ever saw the week from that time until his death, or perhaps a few years prior thereto, when he was not embarrassed about ready money, especially small sums, and yet here in Memphis, or elsewhere among men who knew him, he could borrow any sum he was willing to promise to repay from moneyed men with whom 'business was business' and not sentiment. The deposit of a policy upon his life secured them in case of his death, and his noted integrity of character secured them in case he lived.

"Next to the fact of having mastered 'the difficult art of telling the truth,' the secret of the man's leadership consisted in his courage. It was this courage that gave him decision, so that he spent little time in doubting and none at all in complaining. The 'whining yelp of complaint,' as some one has called it, was foreign to his soul, so foreign that I doubt if the man of you all best acquainted with him can fit the expression of complaint to his countenance or imagine it modulating his voice. He was no Hamlet to have the 'native hue of resolution sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought.' He never spent time soliloquizing about 'taking up arms against a sea of trouble.' He simply took them up.

"Hence it was that when old issues were dead he promptly turned around to face new ones. The old ones he not only ceased to talk about, save as one talks of the Wars of the Roses, but he seemed to cease even to think about them, except in the historical or reminiscent way. I do not mean by that, of course, that truth and right ever ceased to be truth and right with him, no matter on which side the banner of might was unfurled. But his mind was above all things a practical mind, and the aspiration or desire or intention which was demonstrated impossible of consummation had with him practically ceased to exist.

"You will remember how the Confederate cause was ingrained part and parcel of the man and how he became part and parcel of the cause, giving to it everything he had or could control except the sacred fund of posterity, the Tennessee school fund. He never any more doubted on the day of his death than he did on the day of Shiloh that the eleven States of the South had a legal and constitutional right to do what they attempted to do—peaceably to dissolve their relations with the other States in the Union—but when the people of the balance of the formerly United States had exercised their extraconstitutional 'right of revolution,' and our Government, rightfully or wrongfully, had become 'changed, altered, and modified,' he turned his face squarely about in another direction. 'The stars in their course had fought against Sisera,' and that was sufficient.

BELIEVED IN SECESSION.

"I have said that his means were direct, but that he was practical and resourceful, and hence he was no stickler about the words in which other people should express themselves when ready to join in the attainment of his end. For instance, he was a believer in the doctrine of secession, while many others did not believe that the right existed under the Constitution, but believed in what was called the 'right of revolution'—the right to 'change, alter, and modify' a form of government, on the theory that 'all just government proceeds from the consent of the governed.' 'Call it what you please,' reasoned ISHAM G. HARRIS; 'the only difference is that we go out of the Union under your theory with the recognition upon our part of the fact that there is a halter legally around our necks. In case of our failure the enemy can put one there anyhow—constitutionally or unconstitutionally. It will be the same thing to us, I imagine, whether we recognize its legal right to be there or not.' Of course, you will understand that I am not giving his words, but I am expressing in my own way many words and acts of his, as I understand them, condensed into a sentence. As a consequence of this practical, nontechnical trait of the man, Tennessee did not 'secede,' but 'declared her independence.' Concerning the means, he attained the end. The two roads came together; what difference which you traveled?

"As a consequence of this same practical trait, the war, when it was over, was over more completely for him than for almost any other individual in the Union. He turned to face a new war—a war begun for the preservation of civilization, and, as a means to that end, for the preservation of white supremacy in the South.

"With a people placed between civilization—the fruit of all the ages—on one side and the written law—written with men's hands—on the other, the old 'war governor,' who had spent at best precious little of his time in doubt, spent now none at all in doubt, and none in doubtful utterance. Law is but the voice; government itself only the body; civilization is the essence, the spirit—the spirit of ages of progress and conquest from rude nature and ruder men—a spirit sometimes, alas! misvoiced; sometimes misembodied.

"How much he had to do with that magnificent spectacle of constancy and unity, that sublime spectacle of self-mastery, as well as mastership over others, which a people subdued in battle, and from their battle purpose, but not in spirit, nor in manhood, presented to the world for ten long years; harassed, misgoverned, robbed—bearing and forbearing—waiting patiently in the leash, ready to spring whenever the opportunity for triumph came, and how much to do with the final triumph when it came, history, perhaps, will never truly tell, but you and I, resenting as he did the invitation to come down to the level of an inferior race and to 'herd with narrow foreheads, ignorant of our race's gains,' will, I hope, never forget.

"Most of us spend 20 per cent of our time in arriving at conclusions and 10 per cent later on in reviewing them and in wondering if, after all, we may not be wrong. Half of this first 20 per cent and all of this last 10 per cent Governor HARRIS saved. After having satisfied himself that 'the ends he aimed at were his country's and truth's,' and therefore God's, and that they were practical of attainment, I doubt if irresolution ever cost the man five seconds of time. Andrew Jackson once said: 'Take time to deliberate, but when the time for action comes, stop thinking and go in.'"

"The two men were in many respects alike, and both possessed this advantage over common humanity that they knew precisely and definitely what they wanted to do, and the time which others consumed in making up their minds what to do they spent in devising means to do and in doing. Goethe would have revered ISHAM G. HARRIS, because Goethe says: 'I reverence the man who understands distinctly what he wishes to do, who unweariedly advances, who knows the means conducive to his object and can seize and use them.' He also says truly that 'the greater part of all the mischief in the world arises from the fact that men do not know definitely their own aims.'"

HIS PHYSICAL BRAVERY.

"You need not be told that he was brave in battle—physically brave. The man's devotion to the truth would have told you the story of his moral courage, and his moral courage would have led you to presuppose his physical bravery. For Walter Scott was right when he said, 'Without courage there can not be truth, and without truth there can not be any character.' As voluntary aide-de-camp to Albert Sidney Johnston and his successors in command of the Army of the West, this governor of a sovereign State delivered messages and led regiments to the charge at Shiloh and in every engagement of that army to the close of hostilities. You will remember that he was off leading a Tennessee regiment into battle at a place so plowed with bullets that the regiment had trembled in the balance and sought the cover of a hill, when Albert Sidney Johnston was shot, and that he returned just in time to discover him wounded and to ease him off his horse to die.

"I have said that the other trait of character which made him great as a leader was his confidence in the judgment of the people—in the common sense and just intentions of the common people. Even Thomas Jefferson was hardly superior to him in this respect. No man who has this democratic faith well grounded—this abiding faith in the capacity of the people to understand, provided he himself have information and ideas to communicate and ability to convey them—this abiding faith in their intention to do the right thing, when they learn what it is, can have any temptation to become that vilest of all creeping, hissing things—a demagogue. Both his own mind and his concept of what is in the mind of his hearers forbid it; they give him, on the contrary, every cause to 'be just and fear not.' The very groundwork of the faith of such a politician is the doctrine that if he is right he must finally be successful, because the people are neither fools, to be permanently misled, nor knaves, to do the wrong intentionally.

"I will be here pardoned for telling an incident from which I derived my first lesson on this subject. I was a young boy, and a just-home-from-college boy at that, with a just-home-from-college boy's contempt for the general intelligence. An estimable gentleman, whose real name I will not give, but whom I will call John Smith, was discussing with Governor HARRIS a local Democratic platform recently promulgated. Governor HARRIS was regretting that in order to fall in with a foolish and passing sentiment the platform had temporized with economical falsehood. The other man replied: 'Yes, Governor, you and I understand that that is all wrong, but the common people do not, and, moreover, they do not care a rap.' 'That is where you are mistaken, sir,' thundered the old governor; 'the John Smiths and the Isham G. Harrises of this world—the so-called "leaders" in public life—may not always be relied on to vote what is right, even when they understand it, because they have, or perhaps may have, their own "axes to grind," private ambitions as well as public purposes to serve; but no man who knows the common people would charge them with that crime. They have no axes except the public ax to grind; no motive to guide them in politics except the motive to ascertain what will be for "the greatest good of the greatest number," which is their own greatest good, and having ascertained it, to consummate it.' These are almost his very words, though it is more than twenty years since I heard them uttered. They are words of eternal truth that lead to a blessed optimism and to a restful confidence in the permanency and triumph of democracy! Words which foreshadow disappointment to the prevalent and fashionable pessimism which would despair of the Republic!

LESSON OF HIS LIFE.

"I began by saying that the spirits of men abide after them immortally even on this earth in the influence which has radiated from them, becoming year by year less traceable to its origin, but broader and broader in its concentric circles. This man's life will leave, has left, among you perpetual reinforcement to several great truths—reminders priceless in value right now. Chiefly this: That a politician need not, in order to win and keep the people's favor, be either a moral coward, a hypocrite, or a liar; in a word, need not be a demagogue—the epitome or brief summary of all three.

"You see demagogues succeeding temporarily. You see a few of them on small arenas succeeding for a lifetime by living a lifetime lie, but it is a blessed thing to know that even in the worst days of popular government no man need be one of them and that in days of emergency no man can be one of them and succeed. It is a blessed truth that the people hate fawners and flatterers—duplex characters—that they love men—strong, honest, frank, single-minded men—and that all the great leaders of the people under popular governments from the beginning until now—great leaders, I say, with the element of permanency in their leadership—have been men who, like ISHAM G. HARRIS, have 'learned the difficult art of telling the people the truth'—not always saints—far from it, I am sorry to say; but at least the men with 'souls of fire,' who lived the truth and hated a lie.

"Here was a man who would neither 'follow after a multitude to do evil,' nor, on the other hand—worse fault yet and far more prevalent—surrender conviction while he 'crooked the pregnant hinges of the knee where thrift might follow fawning' on the rich and great of this world.

"Was it any wonder then—that rare spectacle which some of us witnessed not many days ago in Washington—that spectacle which told the story in a single scene of our being the greatest and most remarkable people on the face of the globe?

"Thirty years after ISHAM G. HARRIS had returned to his native State from foreign lands, where he had been an exile with a price set on his head, his body laid in state in the Senate Chamber of the Capitol of the United States. The old rebel war governor there in his coffin! Secession, civil war, and the bitter scenes and bitter words of a stirring life forgotten by all. Only his integrity and ability and courage and love for the people remained! Around him stood grouped his fellow-Senators, among whom he had stood so long acknowledged easily chief as a parliamentarian and easily an equal in so many respects. Around him Senators and Representatives and, rare if not unprecedented honor, the President of the United States and his Cabinet.

"They did well to pay him especial and unusual honor, and you do well to honor his memory now and always.

"Tennessee—proud volunteer Commonwealth—second to no State in this broad Union in resources or in men—great in everything which material nature can give, but greater yet in the memory of the achievements of her 'buried warlike and her wise,' will place him side by side with the greatest of them all, nor fear a just comparison with any."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Colonel Cox, may have inserted in the RECORD some remarks upon the life, character, and services of the late Senator HARRIS. Colonel Cox is unavoidably detained at the present time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McMILLIN). Several other members have asked the same privilege, and if there is no objection, permission will be given to them all. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have printed as a part of my remarks the addresses at the memorial services of the late Senator HARRIS at Memphis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were adopted; and then (at 4 o'clock and 32 minutes), in accordance with the resolutions, the House adjourned until Monday at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for payment to boards on town-site entries in Oklahoma, was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed, with amendments, to the amendments of the Senate numbered 13 and 74 to the bill (H. R. 6897) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 79 and 80; further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 128, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, and 167, upon which the committee of conference have been unable to agree; asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and on its amendment to the amendments of the Senate numbered 12 and 74, and had appointed Mr. GROUT, Mr. PITNEY, and Mr. DOCKERY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6148) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, of the District of Columbia, the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes; further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill; asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, and Mr. RICHARDSON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ANNEXATION OF THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business appears to be closed.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 259) to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Before the question is put, I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, whether it is his purpose to go on in the morning hour with the Hawaiian matter and then also from day to day proceeding with it after 2 o'clock as the unfinished business, or whether he proposes only to occupy the morning hour, the time before 2 o'clock.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, it is my purpose, subject, of course, to the direction of the Senate, to occupy not only the morning hour, but the entire time as far as the rules of order will permit in the consideration of this most important measure. The measure, in our opinion, is of growing and imperious importance; the necessity for immediate decision is most imperative. Of course in everything that may be done, necessarily the guidance and direction of the Senate will be invoked and submitted to. There will be no disposition, whenever it can be done with any regard to the interests of this great measure, to impede other business or to sidetrack it; but at the same time the necessity must in my opinion be very imperative to warrant me, under the instructions I have received and my sense of duty, in yielding in any ordinary matter.

Mr. HOAR. There are some few conference reports likely to come in, not many. The conference report on the bankruptcy bill, which I have in charge, was presented to the Senate last week and printed in order that it might be understood by Senators before being called up. I do not suppose that report will take a great while. I should be sorry to put it in antagonism with the matter which the Senator from Minnesota justly regards of such great importance. On the other hand, I should be sorry not to have the short time given to it at some convenient period, which I hope will be sufficient to get the sense of the Senate on it. I suppose under the rules of the Senate I have a right to call up the conference report at any moment, and I wish to give notice, therefore, that, without interfering now with the current matter, I shall seek a convenient opportunity to call it up, when I suppose the Senate will be willing to devote a short time to it. I hope a time will occur when perhaps a Senator is not ready to go on or something of that sort.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me, I will suggest that it is the intention that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] shall take the floor upon the Hawaiian matter this morning, and take it at an early hour. If it is as convenient for the Senator from Massachusetts to permit him to do so at an early hour, it will be agreeable, I think.

Mr. HOAR. I gave notice. It was not my purpose to call up the conference report now, but I only stated that I should seek a time when it would be likely to be the desire of the Senate that I should do so. At some early time I shall desire to call it up, but I do not make the motion now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 259) to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHITE. It was stated at a recent meeting of the Senate that I was to address the Senate upon this subject this morning. I will yield the floor to the Senator from Vermont (Mr. MORRILL).

Mr. FRYE. One moment. Mr. President, this is entering upon the consideration of an exceedingly important matter. I sincerely hope the chairman of the committee who has it in charge will insist that there shall be no yielding to any business whatever except that which is absolutely necessary as a war measure; that this matter will be considered to a conclusion; that the Senate will not adjourn at 4 or 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and that it will not wait for any speaker to be ready with his speech, but that it will be contested to the end. I ask for the yeas and nays on the question to take up the joint resolution for consideration.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HALE. The joint resolution is already up.

Mr. FRYE. Has the order been made?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order has been made.

Mr. WHITE. Then I make the point of order that there is no occasion or propriety in calling for the yeas and nays upon an issue that is dead.

Mr. BERRY. It has already been taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to make a suggestion in this connection. What has been said by the Senator from Maine, and the manner in which it was said, would seem to indicate that he and those who think with him propose to resort to harsh measures at once to push things in their own way. I wish to suggest that the Senator from Maine of course will see to it that there is a quorum in the Senate Chamber all the time when he is enforcing such harsh measures as he now proposes to enforce.

Mr. DAVIS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. FRYE. I have no doubt there will be a quorum in the Senate, as there ought to be at all times.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President—

Mr. DAVIS. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California is recognized. The regular order is demanded and will be enforced. The joint resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. I yield to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. DAVIS. The yeas and nays have been demanded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not recognize the call for the yeas and nays. The question had been concluded.

Mr. FRYE. The Chair announced that the joint resolution was up. I did not notice that the announcement had been made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont will proceed.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I shall trespass upon the time of the Senate only to state why the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands in time of war is more inopportune than in time of peace, and also to state some of the reasons why I am unable to concur with the learned Committee on Foreign Relations in regard to such an annexation, whether by treaty, by joint resolution, by flagrant Executive usurpation, or in any manner which leaves an open door for their admission into the Union as a State.

The undesirable character of the greater part of their ill-gathered races of population, gathered by contract to long years of semi-slavery by sugar employers, does not warrant and never can entitle them to an equal representation in the Senate of the United States with Virginia and Massachusetts, or with Illinois and Colorado, nor any other State. A new member, as a business matter, ought not to be pushed into the Union without the consent of all the present members. We can be their friend without taking them into our family.

I do not suppose many Senators here will acknowledge that they favor the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands with the idea that they can be at once or ever admitted into the Union as a State. Yet they ought to know that by the terms here presented, copied as they have been from the moribund treaty, they are to be admitted into some back-door vestibule of the Union and may be then admitted as a State at the pleasure of Congress. A square denial and interdiction of this statehood to-day, though embroidered on the breast of a joint resolution or branded on the rump of a treaty, will not bind any future Congress against admission, but might perhaps induce President Dole to inform us that anything less than as an equal to one of the stars of the Union would be unacceptable to him, and it is easy to predict what party would yield. If the islands should be annexed, no matter upon what terms, there would soon be here two men knocking at our doors for admission as Senators. As candidates, they may even now be weary of waiting.

Whether or not we shall at the very next election have to wait until the returns are received from Honolulu to determine who has been elected President of the United States remains to be seen.

This statehood question was elsewhere recently very jauntily disposed of by the suggestion that the islands would probably be found some years hence located as a county in one of our Pacific States. Years ago children were sometimes told that if they would run out to the end of the rainbow they would find a sack of money. Hawaii County will be found in Oregon or California at about the same time the sack of money is found at the tail end of some rainbow.

At my time of life, having no higher ambition than to be right, I greatly regret to find that on the question of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands I can not quite agree with some of my associates here with whose opinions I have rarely differed, and while knowing how impossible it is to change the views of any Senator, I hope they will pardon my desire to present in open session of the Senate my reasons for opposition to a measure heretofore always rejected by the United States, and, as it appears to me, never so much deserving of rejection as now. I am not unwilling the record should show, if the consistency of any person or party on this question has been broken, that it will not include any record of mine. Let me add that I am, as ever, in favor of holding executive sessions of the Senate with closed doors, but not in favor of a secret session of the Senate for the admission of a State into the Union. That is too important to be wholly concealed from the people.

I shall still vote for an increase of the Navy, but I am opposed to a policy of annexing distant islands that might create a necessity for doubling our naval force, and largely expand the cost of its maintenance, especially when there are no islands worthy of our annexation now unappropriated.

The annexation of the Hawaiian Islands has never been included in any Republican platform. Hawaii was mentioned for the first time in the platform of 1896, and then merely to declare that "the Hawaiian Islands should be controlled by the United States, and no foreign power should be permitted to interfere with them," but this was only the affirmation of the policy the United States has maintained for more than one hundred years.

The Hawaiian annexation scheme hardly belongs to the present Administration, nor to the humanitarian war, and the time may come when even its present boldest advocates may not be unwilling to have it more justly known as an untimely seven-months' offspring of some previous Administration.

The Hawaiian Islands in early days having been the place of rest and of supplies for our whaling vessels while in pursuit of their gigantic game, the American people became interested in the race and were recently surprised by what they were willing to accept as a sign of an advance in their civilization and political prosperity. Accordingly the peaceful dethronement of their Queen seemed a step deserving cheerful acquiescence, although her resignation, it can not be denied, appeared to have been a little too abruptly enticed. When the late President of our Republic, however, with "paramount" authority, set about the Bloant restoration of her majesty, even without any civil-service examination, it was so incongruous with any Democratic or Republican ideas that our sympathy for Hawaii became very robust and so unduly excited that annexation appeared to some of our hot and impressive statesmen as not an exaggerated reparation of an attempted great and crowning wrong.

One prominent objection to the pending measure is that the people of neither Hawaii nor of the United States have been consulted or taken into confidence in relation to the impending compact. The promoters have been reluctant to trust the people with it. The country is to wake up next week and find a new but unwelcome member "incorporated," as Mr. Sherman, the Secretary of State, described it, "into the body politic of the United States." At Hawaii something leaked out about it after its final determination. Here the Senate was informed about it after the Secretary had signed the treaty; but even the Senate did not permit itself to discuss it except in secret session until its paucity of votes was disclosed; and it came originally in the form of a treaty, not to hide the fact that a treaty was not a courageous but a cowardly way to bring a State into the Union, as some people thought, but for the reason that the Hawaiian promoters of the compact could fix up their part of it in that way with less lubrication. The authorship of this state paper appears to have been miscellaneous and partly unknown, having been cut and dried in Honolulu, and yet it was to have been consented to by the United States Senate without subtraction or addition, as the committee reporting it seem to have regarded it as properly inspired and inerrant.

The late Secretary of State, John Sherman, whose eminent services will not be forgotten, in his "Recollections" declares:

If my life is prolonged I will do all I can to add to the strength and prosperity of the United States, but nothing to extend its limits nor to add new dangers by acquisitions of foreign territory.

That was the way he wished his record to stand if his life should be prolonged. Can anyone believe, if he were now in the seat he so long honored in the Senate, that he would favor the annexation of these islands with all their heterogeneous and vicious incumbrances? I do not. He signed the treaty, but his heart was not there. Secretary Sherman must also have had his reluctance to sign the treaty for the annexation of Hawaii a good deal stiffened by the remonstrance against it which was presented to him signed by 20,000 of the natives.

On our part the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands is only an overdone example of the European colonial system. It belongs to and emanates from the aristocratic school of politics. It has no abhorrence of coolie labor, which is the double cousin of slavery. It covets prodigal expenditures and a big display of power. It does not listen to the still, small voice of peace, industry, and economy, but to the blast of the popular trumpet which would conquer worlds and reign over Hawaii rather than serve in heaven.

My firm conviction, however, is that annexation of distant islands is not in harmony with the Constitution of the United States, but is conspicuously repugnant thereto; nor is it in harmony with the history or even with any of the recorded opinions of our earliest and ripest statesmen. Claiming nothing in consideration of any words of mine, except for the facts here presented, I have yet to hear any sufficient reasons which should induce me to break the consistency of my record of many years' standing against the annexation of distant foreign lands. May I not ask, Has the country ever lamented the rejection of Santo Domingo? Manifestly no. Let me hope that I may never part with my profound reverence for the eminent statesmen who constructed the Constitution of our Republic, and I shall also hope to be pardoned if I should not turn the pictures of the faces of those eminent Americans to the wall, and flout their memory, whose wisdom has guided the great achievements of our country through its first century, although they, "rich in saving common sense," flatly refused the doubtful achievement of annexing distant foreign islands.

The title of the parties now holding the dominion of the Hawaiian Islands is based on conquest without arms, which is better than would have been a title by usurpation, superior to any bargain that might have been made with Liliuokalani, and must now be treated as a de facto Government. It succeeds to the power and estate of its predecessor, and the United States may extend, if it chooses, some favors to Hawaii, as was done long years ago, but can not afford to even seem to profit by the recent conquest. Nor can the United States afford to accept the validity of the title of the present possessors—all they have—while much of the world and so many Senators hold it open to suspicion and dispute, although held to be excellent by most of those who favor annexation, an anyhow annexation.

It has been very ominously hinted that other nations, more ambitious, are eager to take these islands in case of our declination, but this is squarely denied by Great Britain, and, were the islanders to so consent, their ingratitude would diminish my grief were we called upon to say, "Farewell, Hawaii." But Hawaii will never let go of even our little finger, and the ominous hint is of no more worth than it was when made in the case of Santo Domingo, or of St. John, or St. Thomas, or in the case of Hawaii in 1854, or than any other very cheap theatrical thunder.

No other nation can offer Hawaii an equal market for its sugar to that of the United States, and such a market is their great and abiding necessity. Hawaii has nothing, however, to give in return or no market of the slightest importance to reciprocate. England could not renounce and stultify its free-trade policy by imposing duties on sugar, and then, in the same act of Parliament, provide that all sugar imported from Hawaii should be free of duty. Germany and France are both heavily in the sugar industry, and would be the last to nurse and coddle Hawaii in the same line, as that would only compel them to assume the burden we now bear. They may not like us, but they have been taught—

*Heat not a furnace for your foe so hot
That it do singe yourself.*

The Republic of Hawaii, with "all the world before it where to choose," would not commit commercial suicide by the blunder of trying to find a better friend than the United States. No other nation will seek their acquisition so long as we let it be known, as we have done for more than fifty years, that the United States would regard it as an unfriendly act and would resist it.

The personnel of the present Hawaiian Government is guided not only with some skill, but with sufficient "iron and blood" to maintain its independence as a State. I see no good reason for a change. Let us tell them, as we have done for over a half century, "We are your friend, and your independence as a State will have our continued favor and support." If a trinity of foreign powers move to combine, or to galvanize the carcass of the ancient Holy Alliance, as some timid people apprehend, in order to curb the United States, the first crack of the European whip will be the only summons required by Americans for the crisis. Later let the historian record whether empires or republics in Europe have been made stronger or weaker by such a conflict. It is known to be perilous to expose imperial armies to political contagion by contact, even in war, with Republican soldiers.

The fact, however, that we have been so long held as the foremost friend of the Hawaiians makes it difficult for any of us to look upon the question of their annexation with absolute justice to the national interests of our own country. Yet that is what we are here for.

The important question is now presented of the acquisition of this far-away territory—not contiguous, but a straggling litter of islands of volcanic birth, which it is proposed shall somehow actually become an integral part of the territory of our Republic. Annexation, it should be honestly confessed, has not been so much sought after by the natives as by the dominant and more astute aliens, who have been fully acclimated by their very tropical sugar dividends.

It has been wildly asserted by an Eastern attorney that the possession of the Hawaiian Islands by the United States would in time of war contribute largely to the defensive strength of our Pacific coast. How that could be realized, while over 2,000 miles away in the Pacific Ocean, it has not been satisfactorily explained. At present there are no fortifications there of the slightest importance, and with the most lavish expenditures the eight islands could never be made impregnable. Nature has not supplied them with the foundations of a Gibraltar, nor of a Malta, nor of even a Quebec. Major-General Schofield denies that even Honolulu can be defended by shore batteries.

In a report to the Secretary of War May 8, 1878, he makes the following statement:

Honolulu is the only good commercial harbor in the whole group. There are many other so called harbors or places for anchorage, but they are open roadsteads, affording shelter only from certain winds, and they are all entirely incapable of being defended by shore batteries. Even the harbor of Honolulu itself can not be defended from the shore.

An enemy could take up his position outside of the entrance to the harbor and command the entire anchorage, as well as the town of Honolulu itself. This harbor would, therefore, be of no use to us as a harbor of refuge in time of war.

There is more testimony of this kind, as well as some in conflict, but none of equal authority, as the testimony of General Schofield has not become worthless by his becoming a partisan.

But were fortifications possible at Honolulu, of what protection would they be to our cities and ports on the Pacific coast? Instead of being any auxiliary defense, the islands themselves would largely require both naval and military defense.

Perhaps some American statesmen would regard it quite as prudent to first have our numerous ports and prosperous cities on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts receive some defensive attention, and also that the national capital, if not made invulnerable to a long siege, should at least be made safe from a twelve-hours raid up the Potomac by some Admiral Cockburn, and not be left so gunless and unprotected as to tempt the puny aggression of second and third rate powers.

The Hawaiian Islands, if annexed, would prove us barren of military importance as of commercial, which is wholly based on our unfortunate grant of a free market for their sugar, and their annexation would be a source of weakness, and no more desirable for the defense of the Pacific coast than the back side of the moon. As owners it would at once require on our part a large and permanent naval and military force to be stationed there to maintain our mastery, but as an independent state the United States could shield Hawaii from any hostile attack by merely announcing that we were their ally in the support of their independence.

Beyond doubt the islands would be a considerable source of embarrassment and probable discomfiture by multiplying our vulnerable points, as well as by a far more exhaustive addition to our national expenditures. I will dismiss this branch of the subject, and leave it to the judgment of all Senators whether these islands, if annexed, would not in case of war quickly be in the possession of the commander there of the superior naval fleet? But without annexation the Hawaiian Islands would not be threatened. Annexation would alone create the necessity of its preparations for war. If annexation is to be our fate, at least two or three of our vessels of war, including one of our best battle ships, should be sent forthwith to Honolulu, unless we intend to leave the islands as an easy prize to some idle Spanish gunboat.

The main source of Hawaiian revenue is now from duties imposed on imports, which after annexation would be surrendered. By the proposed treaty the public debt of Hawaii—not to exceed $4,000,000—is to be paid by the United States. The admission of States into the Union has not often been encumbered with a condition that its public debt should be paid by the United States. In this case the debt is less than half the amount we shall continue annually to surrender by the admission of Hawaiian sugar free of duty.

The details of our import and export trade with Hawaii will show its pitiful amount and its worse than worthless character. The total duties remitted by the United States while the reciprocity treaty has been in force amount to over $65,000,000—a big sum for a little trade. The total imports in 1897 were $13,687,787, of which $13,164,879 was sugar and only $523,408 for all other imports. The whole gross amount of imports from Hawaii subject to any duty in 1897 amounted to less than $25,000. Our exports to Hawaii are only remarkable for their slender character, and were, in 1897 only $4,690,075. Of course this adverse balance of the sugar trade against us of $8,987,724 we paid somewhere in specie to sugar-stock owners residing in Honolulu or elsewhere. These oppressive balances occur every year, and annexation can not diminish them.

The annual report of the Hutchinson Company, one of the numerous prosperous sugar companies of Hawaii, sets forth the cost of their sugar products to have been $30 per ton, or a little less than 1½ cents per pound. The price quoted in our market for their sugar has been 3.7 cents per pound. This would leave the sugar producers of Hawaii a profit last year of about $9,000,000, or twice as much as the gross amount of all the United States export trade to Hawaii. If this is not paying too dearly for the whistle, what is it? If any individual were guilty of such dull-witted incapacity, the Government would at once have a guardian appointed. Unfortunately, however, the Senate, it is claimed, is not unwilling to perpetuate forever this preposterous free-sugar folly by annexation, simply because it includes as beneficiaries a small number of former Americans who left their country, settled in Honolulu, have paid taxes there, and are no longer American citizens. We could still give them our good will, but, expatriated as they chose to be, it is asking too much that we shall continue forever to support them in this most prodigal and extravagant style.

If any of our people are expecting to profit by finding or by creating a market in Hawaii for manufactures, they should at once be sent to school where flogging has not become an obsolete method for the correction of the pupils. The trade of the uncultured inhabitants of tropical countries, like that of Hawaii, makes no figure in commerce and rarely pays more anywhere than the cost of its practical protection.

The annexation of the Hawaiian Islands by the United States presents a question of national policy, of constitutional power, and of national honor of the utmost gravity. It is not a new question, but one that has been heretofore always rejected, and by our most eminent statesmen. The islands are not near to the American Continent, but far out in the middle of the Pacific Ocean. President Jefferson regarded the question of constitutional power to annex even the contiguous territory of Louisiana so doubtful as properly to require an amendment of the Constitution, but the irresistible power of the mouths of the Mississippi silenced that question.

However that may be, the Hawaiian question of annexation appears to have been forever negatively determined by the United States in 1843, as was then supposed. At that time our Secretary of State, Daniel Webster, announced the established policy of the United States in relation to the Sandwich Islands in a communication addressed to George Brown, our commissioner to Hawaii, from which I take the following extract:

We ask no control over their Government nor any undue influence whatever. Our only wish is that the integrity and independence of the Hawaiian territories may be scrupulously maintained and that its Government should be entirely impartial toward foreigners of every nation.

With this declaration from the Department of State, with Daniel Webster speaking for the United States, intended for all time, and sent to our commissioner at Honolulu, and made known to all the world, it might be hoped that no Senator would require a stronger Government pledge to induce him to maintain the good faith of the United States.

Preliminary to this it is known that the ministers of Great Britain and of France had proposed to Secretary Webster to unite in a treaty to bind the three powers to make and preserve the Hawaiian Islands as an independent State. To this Mr. Webster did not consent, as our trade and relations, he thought, made us an exception to other nations; but he was entirely in accord about our consent to the preservation of the full and complete independence of the islands.

Finally the chief secretary of Great Britain and the ambassador of France completed such an agreement in London November 23, 1843, as follows:

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and His Majesty the King of the French, taking into consideration the existence in the Sandwich Islands of a Government capable of providing for the regularity of its relations with foreign nations, have thought it right to engage reciprocally to consider the Sandwich Islands as an independent State and never to take possession, either directly or under the title of protectorate, or under any other form, of any part of the territory of which they are composed.

ABERDEEN.
ST. AULAIRE.

Can anybody suppose that England and France would have bound themselves by such an agreement but for the antecedent pledged word and lead of the United States? How can we, the foremost nation of the New World, while changing our front without a blush or apology about annexing Hawaii as "an independent State," hope to escape the reproach of breaking our recorded word?

In the summer of 1854 our commissioner to Honolulu, Mr. Gregg, advised Secretary William L. Marcy that the Kingdom of Hawaii was on the verge of a revolution and resting on a political volcano; that four British ships of war and four French war ships had just arrived at Honolulu. Annexation, therefore, must be quickly sought or Hawaii would be forever lost. A treaty was asked for and obtained from Hawaii, but as it was to be admitted as a State, with Senators and Representatives, it was not swiftly accepted by Marcy. The King of the islands did not sign an amended treaty, and in a short time he died. The Prince Royal having ascended the throne, the political volcano disappeared, and so did this embryotic treaty.

After denouncing as forbidden fruit the acquisition of the distant islands of the sea, as we have often done, for which European empires are still so hungry, it appears strange that a change so radical should suddenly blot our past history and present us to the world as eager to acquire even what will be impossible for Americans to assimilate, what will degrade our republican system of government, and can not elevate the general political character of our people.

The formal annexation of the Hawaiian Islands, under a one-man power, under a republic in name, or whatever form of governmental experiment we may choose or be compelled to prescribe, will advertise the final wreckage of the "Monroe doctrine," so long held dear by the American people. Self-respect will compel us to discard and seek a divorce from the glory of a connection with a historic measure to which the public opinion of mankind will at once pronounce us unworthy. We can not afford to denounce and forbid all acquisitions of territory in the Western Hemisphere by European governments, even at the peril of war, and forthwith embark in a thus bedamned enterprise ourselves. If we would have our yet unstained doctrine respected by others, we must scrupulously practice what we preach.

Because several of the larger Eastern nations have been in an expensive and furious catch-as-catch-can naval hunt to seize ports and harbors, or any tidbits of the Chinese Empire, it is not a sufficient reason why the United States should suddenly blot its record by showing how easily we can be seduced by a like besetting sin.

Some tears were shed in the former and confidential part of this debate for the reason that we, unlike European nations, had no colonies nor dependencies and were not alert in the seizure of ports and harbors of China, ostensibly to build up trade and commerce, as all Europe seemed to be doing.

Yet the monopoly of these ports and harbors, for their own exclusive benefit, appeared likely to provoke the hostility of other commercial nations, and therefore a trio of the China reformers, now led by Great Britain, at once agreed to make all these ports as free and open to the whole world as to themselves. The loudly proclaimed overwhelming necessity that the United States should begin to snatch by diplomacy or by force some foreign market place, or annex some foreign islands, or at least twist the tail of the British lion, has been, it now appears, overworked, and all of its varied pathos has fled.

The reciprocity treaty with the Hawaiian Islands of June 3, 1875, was an enormous blunder, greater even than that with Canada in 1854, on the part of the United States, as a brief examination of its practical operation will conclusively show. Thus exempting their sugar from duty by compact we gave to those who were unentitled to it by reciprocity or by furnishing our people with any cheaper sugar the power to annually intercept and take away from us millions of revenue on sugar for which no fair equivalent of commerce or of sentiment has ever been even pretended. To obtain more revenue we had just imposed on sugar extraordinary duties, and the remission of such duties on Hawaiian sugar and molasses, as might have been expected, gave enormous profits to the sugar planters and greatly augmented the Hawaiian production of sugar. Much of the most valuable sugar lands there were immediately largely monopolized, sugar machinery was swiftly and annually imported, and many thousand cool laborers from China and Japan were suddenly brought and put at work in Hawaii at the cool rate of wages.

In 1876 our imports of free sugar from Hawaii were only 26,000,000 pounds, but in 1898 increased to 443,000,000 pounds. The treaty ought long ago to have been terminated or reasonably modified, so as to have remitted not more than 10 or 20 per cent of the duties on sugar, or no more than we may properly remit on the sugar of Brazil or of Germany, where our trade would require and receive some reciprocal advantages in return. Some interested parties in Hawaii might regret a collapse in their present enormous advantages, but our people would not regret to have this unreciprocated and quixotic boon no longer so extravagantly maintained at their cost.

The people of the United States being the largest consumers in the world of sugar per capita, as well as in the aggregate, the great economy of its home production has by them long been anxiously desired. Its production by the cheapest foreign laborers and foreign owners, 2,100 miles away from our shores, and admitted here free of duty, is now a loss of millions per annum of revenue, and enriches only a very limited monopoly in Hawaii. But many people of our States, our own kith and kin, would gladly risk their labor and their capital to establish the sugar-beet culture on their own Western continental homes, and thus we might escape an annual drain to which we have been long subjected to the amount of nearly $100,000,000 to pay for our unequaled sugar consumption. Our home producers of sugar do not want to be confronted forever with the competition of free sugar produced by cool labor which no American can afford to tolerate, much less to protect, as we are doing and as it is now proposed we shall do forever. Our election of 1898 was not won on a pledge of protection to the sugar production of Hawaii.

The terrible curse of the Hawaiian Islands appears to be incurable leprosy, which is communicable by the presence of the leper, but how or in what manner science has furnished no answer, although kissing has been ascertained to be a perilous exposure. There is no disease to which any portion of the human race has ever been afflicted more to be dreaded than leprosy. Its hateful, loathsome, and contagious features have from the earliest ages stamped its presence with horror. Dr. Morrow has presented a learned and interesting statement of the subject as it now exists in Hawaii, where the residents of no nationality have entirely escaped from the disease, and which he rightly thinks ought not to be kept out of sight should the annexation of the islands ever be seriously contemplated. It has been attempted to suppress the disease by segregation of the lepers at Molokai so long as they live, usually from three to five years, but the number of cases for ten years past, it is claimed, has increased. The expenses for houses, clothing, and food is borne by the Government. The constant decrease of the native population indicates their early extermination. Dr. Morrow also reports that in addition to the 1,200 now segregated at Molokai there are probably two or three times as many at large in whom the disease is latent. Each of these carries with him the seeds of a deadly contagion, and "in the event of annexation," the Doctor says, "it would be idle to think of confining leprosy to the islands, or rather of excluding it from this country by quarantine measures." No; we can only take them, if we take them at all, in sickness and in health, for better and for worse. Any closer connection should not be coveted by us than that we now have. The innumerable incumbrances are there to stay forever. Hawaii once annexed, a divorce would be impossible. Our only security is now to solemnly forbid the bans.

How unfortunate are we that the wonderful value and prodigious importance, military and sentimental, of the Hawaiian Islands had not been discovered earlier, and their annexation pushed prior to our distinct pledge in favor of their "independence as a state" and before we had rejected these and all other like distant islands, and by rather grandly proposing instead to establish the "Monroe doctrine," which we now find more difficult to practice ourselves than it has been to impose upon Europe. Surely Hawaiian annexation would have been less repugnant, less unfortunate, had it been proposed before leprosy had destroyed so large a part of the native population, and especially before the islands had been invaded and so heavily stocked with the Chinese and Japanese contract laborers. Certainly, could these incurable grievances now be removed, the objections to annexation would be less conspicuous, but still formidable, as even then the islands as American dependencies would have had no temptation to the statesmen of the eras of Washington, nor of Jackson or Lincoln.

Less than 3 per cent of the present number of inhabitants in Hawaii are of American origin—not enough to dominate or to boss the 97 per cent of the other nationalities, which could not without too great risk be trusted to self-government, nor even to loyalty to the United States, yet they expect soon, whatever may be the terms of annexation, that they will be full-fledged citizens of an integral part of the Union, entitled to share in governing the United States in both Houses of Congress. To this I am irrevocably opposed.

An examination of the basis of any possible free government in Hawaii, with inhabitants of so many different languages, religions, habits, and traditions, mostly monarchists, presents no encouragement for the creation or permanence of a republican form of government, to which nine out of every ten are theoretically as well as practically opposed. The objections apparent there to suffrage, whether free or limited, seem insuperable. To confine suffrage to the 3,080 Americans alone, including men, women, and children, would hardly be submitted to, except at the point of the bayonet. If the natives were allowed to vote, representing 39,504 (including half-castes and lepers), they might restore the deposed Queen, and it would be queer to treat the natives as no longer citizens but savages after we have been their schoolmasters and missionaries so many years. What the Japanese,* numbering 25,407, with their rights by treaty, would do if allowed to vote we can only guess that they would antagonize the Chinese, who number 21,606. And there are 15,291 of the unreckoned Portuguese. Certainly none of these could ever be safely counted in favor of leaving the "paramount" authority in the hands of the United States, and an army of sufficient strength, with the Stars and Stripes, would therefore be a permanent necessity to shield the islands from insurrections and revolutions.

It has been erroneously suggested by a Boston visitor, if the Hawaiian Islands were to be annexed, that a large multitude of United States immigrants would flock there for settlement. This, to me, seems most improbable. There will be few or no vacancies to be filled by newcomers of any sort. We have no American laborers who could withstand the tropical climate or be tempted from home by the average wages now paid in Hawaii. The small trades and professions are said now to be overcrowded. The outdoor laboring men there now are exclusively Chinese, Japanese, Portuguese, or natives, and equal in numbers to any present or probable future demands. The hot sun and low wages are likely to exclude all others. It would be doubtful whether there could be even a platoon of colored laborers recruited for Hawaiian wages in America. Official positions doubtless have been, so to say, adequately promised to Americans who understand the language made for the natives. The Chinese, Japanese, and Portuguese were brought there by the shipload, and there they are likely to remain forever.

The best of the sugar lands in the valleys and on the sides of the mountains have been monopolized, and after the Spreckels, all other speculators will be gleaners in fields already largely reaped. A considerable amount, however, of sugar lands, only less profitable, can of course be brought into cultivation. Finally, there are no lands outside of the United States, however blessed the climate or however prosperous, even with more industries than one, or however advanced in science and general education or worthy in moral purity, which have ever tempted the American people to emigrate. More than half of our States might have their population quadrupled and suffer nothing from density. We are most unlikely to furnish any country—certainly not Hawaii—with any considerable number of immigrants for a hundred years to come. The only tracks made on our borders are all inward and none outward. Foreign emigrants have come and will come to us in abundant streams from all quarters of the globe, and each one will soon be heard repeating the words of a proud and native-born American: "Thank God! I—I also—am an American."

One gentleman in this debate rests his argument for annexation on his belief that the Chinese and Japanese will be at once driven out of Hawaii by Americans and expatriated. All history will show that this is impossible. The few Americans there now could not do without their labor. No race is ever supplanted except by a hardier one—one that can endure more hours of labor and be content with cheaper and coarser food. The British troops took Quebec, but the Canadian Frenchmen remained in Canada. They are there now, and so is their language. We have had colonization societies for generations, and expended large sums of money in sending away colored immigrants, but wholly without success, because their labor is indispensable here, and it can not be superseded by more acceptable labor. Even the Romans sometimes yielded to the Goths. A small number of the Chinese and Japanese may return to their former homes, but their places will be filled by larger numbers of these most industrious and hardy workers.

The Turks got possession of Thessaly, the largest division of ancient Greece, in the fourteenth century; but Greece, though often favored by other powers, has not recovered the largest and most fertile division of her ancient possessions. Nor will the Asiatics be expelled from Hawaii.

In addition to the American residents, there are 2,250 British and 1,432 German. Most of these respectable people went there only to seek better professional support as ministers, lawyers, physicians, merchants, or as speculators in sugar and real estate.

* Largely increased since 1896.

The numbers there now competing in all these learned and skilled professions and in trade are reported to largely overlap and exceed what can be sumptuously supported as all want to be by their tributary patrons. Annexation would make a little additional room for a few low-priced, sedentary officials, but might also add something to the present excessive competition of this hungry class.

If ever they come under our flag and Constitution their diverse population must be subject to our laws as now recorded, and they are not as flexible as some political platforms, and could not mean one thing in Hawaii and another in California. The provisions relating to citizenship, aliens, suffrage, and homesteads, with all the privileges and penalties in their application, would be likely to get badly tangled. If the islands are ever in the Union as a Territory, then it should be remembered that thin partitions divide Territories or even dependencies from States; and any party numbering one more than half in each House of Congress may admit by resolution these unfortunately leprosy islands as a State, with equal power in the Senate of the oldest States of the Union. It would require six months for our most learned committee to frame and fit proper laws to hold the Hawaiian infant territory, and yet we have not even a cradle ready for this expected addition to our American family.

It has also been urged that a harbor and coaling station would be a great convenience to our commerce across the Pacific Ocean. How great that would be, however, can be better estimated by those who know that the Hawaiian Islands lie 18 degrees south and 2,100 miles distant from San Francisco. We now have such a harbor under an irrevocable grant. It is not probable that any harbor would ever be denied to us in time of peace; and in case of war the strongest naval power would keep or take whatever it chose to have. Pearl Harbor could be made of immediate use at a very inconsiderable expense by the removal of a coral reef which now obstructs its entrance.

The American whaling fleet, which formerly was in the habit of calling at Honolulu for supplies and repairs, is now but little more than a memory of the past. In 1870 the number was seventy-one, and in 1895 only six of such vessels were seen at Honolulu, and in 1896 only two. Under our flag we have more than one-half of their trade, and several foreign flags, including the subsidized British, obtain the remainder. But the whole import trade is insignificant, as I have already shown, and the consumption of American manufactures by natives or residents of Hawaii will never make it otherwise. Their earnings are too restricted, combined with Asiatic habits, to create valuable consumers. No country is likely to add much to the value of domestic or to foreign trade where the native women go barefoot, eat fish raw, and strive to witch the world on horseback with each foot in a stirrup.

It has been the happiness of the Republic of the United States that it has long and very distinctly had the benefit of a contrast with aristocratic empires and monarchies in relation to colonial dependencies. These arrogant aristocracies nurse their pride and dazzle their subjects with the obedience and enchantments of distant colonies and dependencies, but their condition is now, or was recently, on exhibition by their paternal and maternal wars and rumors of wars in India, North and South Africa, Madagascar, Egypt, China, Philippine Islands, and Cuba.

These perennial colonial flagellations, or life struggles of colonies and dependencies which refuse to stay conquered, require the increase of big home armies and bigger navies, which can only be maintained by the biggest taxes. The aristocratic empires push the inexorable demand of three to five years of the life of all their young men in military service, and then to be ready for further service until emancipated by the decrepitude of old age. These large standing armies threaten their neighbors, and their neighbors threaten everybody else by an increase of their battle ships. Boundless public debts and double and twisted taxes leave their people poor, with no hope that these grim and stubborn exactions will ever be less.

Hitherto the statesmen of our Republic have kept clear of colonies and dependencies, for it need not be admitted that Alaska is an exception, nor that it is ever more likely to become one of the United States than any other part of the yet unappropriated North Pole. Our young men of the Republic are at school, or at work on the farm, or busy somewhere learning a trade or a profession from which they may derive a livelihood or the comforts of an independent home. They are not impressed for the Regular Army, which is so small as to be almost invisible, and wholly composed of volunteers. Two-thirds of our rebellion debt has been paid, and we fully expect to pay the remainder, and that it will speedily grow less.

The historic policy of the Republic of the United States for the hundred years just passed, based as it has been upon the sound doctrine promulgated by Washington in his Farewell Address with words of perennial wisdom against foreign entangling alliances, has taken root in the hearts of the American people, where it is treasured up as their political Bible and can not now be "mocked at" as merely an ancient tradition. Its acceptance has made the nation great, made it respected. If our fidelity to the well-ripened statesmanship of the Father of his Country shall be perpetuated for the next hundred years as in the past, the honor, prosperity, and power of our Republic, it may safely be predicted, will light and lead all the nations.

During the delivery of Mr. MORRILL'S speech,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 3 o'clock has arrived, and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 3698) for the restoration of annuities to the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the unfinished business be laid aside, and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the pending joint resolution.

Mr. WHITE. Laid aside temporarily.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Minnesota is that the unfinished business be laid aside—

Mr. PETTIGREW. That it be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVIS. And that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the pending joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And that the joint resolution (H. Res. 259) to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States be proceeded with. The Chair hears no objection. The joint resolution is before the Senate, and the Senator from Vermont will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. MORRILL'S speech,

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I presume it will be recognized by all that there can be no more important question than this before the country to-day. It is not simply the question of the annexation of a very small piece of territory, but, considered with reference to the merits of the case, it is one which involves the utter revolution of the practice and traditions of our Government with reference to its benefits to the people and the obligations which it lays upon them.

It is not my purpose at this time to discuss the general merits of this proposition. I am inclined to address the Senate at this time because the particular branch of the discussion to which I shall direct my attention is one which goes to the root of the matter and which ought, if my contention is correct, to control the action of the Senate.

Before proceeding with it, I think, however, I may be excused for remarking that certainly this is a strange presentation to the country, that in a matter of such gravity, that in a matter of such wide-reaching importance, the advocates of the measure have nothing to say. Ordinarily in measures of importance which come from the Foreign Relations Committee we have a report. In this instance the committee have not even honored us with a report. Ordinarily not only do we have a report, but we have from the chairman of that committee or some member representing the committee an elaborate presentation of the reasons why the legislation is recommended by that committee. But here we have neither report nor presentation. We have simply presented to the Senate a bill which has been passed by the House, and without report and without discussion those who hold to the affirmative ask the Senate to act. It is as if, confident of a majority, they should say, "We propose to do thus and so, right or wrong, and give no reason for it; and what are you going to do about it?" That is the attitude which the committee occupy in coming before the Senate.

Mr. President, as I stated, it is not my purpose to discuss the general merits of the proposition to annex the islands of Hawaii, certainly not at this time; but I propose to present to the Senate a proposition and to ask that they may give me their attention while I discuss it, which, if it be true, as I have previously said, ought to control the action of the Senate and make them say that they will not pass the bill which the House has sent to us.

The proposition which I propose to discuss is that a measure which provides for the annexation of foreign territory is necessarily, essentially, the subject-matter of a treaty, and that the assumption of the House of Representatives in the passage of the bill, and the proposition on the part of the Foreign Relations Committee that the Senate shall pass the bill, is utterly without warrant in the Constitution.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. As the Senator from Georgia is about to enter on the discussion of a very material question in connection with this important measure, and as it is manifest there is not a quorum present in the Chamber, I make the point that there is no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). The Senator from Arkansas suggests the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BACON. I desire to say that I do not particularly desire to have the roll called, but at the same time I think it very proper that gentlemen should be here.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the roll be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Roach,
Bacon,	Foraker,	McKern,	Sewell,
Baker,	Frye,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Bate,	Gallinger,	Mallory,	Spooner,
Berry,	Gear,	Mantle,	Stewart,
Burrows,	Gorman,	Mills,	Teller,
Carter,	Hale,	Morgan,	Tillman,
Chilton,	Hanna,	Nelson,	Turnley,
Clark,	Hansbrough,	Pasco,	Turner,
Clay,	Harris,	Penrose,	Warren,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Wellington,
Cullom,	Hittfield,	Petkus,	White,
Daniel,	Hoar,	Platt, Conn.	Wilson.
Davis,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, N. Y.
Deboe,	Jones, Nev.	Pritchard,
Elkins,	Kyle,	Rawlins,

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McBRIDE] is necessarily absent from the Chamber, on account of illness.

Mr. WHITE. I was requested to state that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] is unavoidably detained by illness. He hopes, however, to participate in this matter later on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I made the point a few minutes ago that there was no quorum present. Senators are aware what occurred on the floor this morning and the assurances we had that Senators would take sufficient interest in this question to keep a quorum present in the Senate Chamber. All those who took the pains to notice saw that there were very few Senators present during the whole of the proceedings this morning.

Now, I insist that, if the rigid methods are to be enforced we were notified of this morning, Senators ought to be in the Senate Chamber and hear these arguments. I have no desire to call for a quorum for the purpose of delay nor for the purpose of having the roll called. I do not want to do anything of that sort. But I insist that Senators shall remain in the Senate Chamber during these proceedings, and when there is manifestly no quorum present in the Senate Chamber I will consider myself bound to make the point that there is no quorum. That Senators may be in the committee rooms and in the smoking room, paying no attention to what is going on in the Senate, is not a compliance, as it seems to me, with the requirements of the situation.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. If some of us on this side are to be embarrassed by what the honorable Senator from Arkansas has stated, I earnestly hope and trust that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations will at the earliest moment possible, in accordance with the rules of the Senate, if such be necessary, make a motion that we proceed to a continuous session upon this question. If the gantlet is to be thrown down by the opposition here and now, we might just as well take it up ourselves.

I propose to stay here if others do, and I think I can stay as long as the Senator from Arkansas can stay, but I do not want to inconvenience any Senator. Occasionally we are called from the Chamber, and we are within calling distance, and if this open threat is made against the convenience and comfort of Senators now in the first hour of this debate, this side and those in favor of annexation might as well know it first as last. Let a motion be entered to proceed with a continuous session and see how long some of the others can stand it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is exactly in keeping with many other things that are being said and done on the other side of the Senate Chamber. Your side made this statement. Your side told us that the convenience of Senators would not have any attention paid to it; that there would be no adjournment because Senators were not ready to make speeches; that we were to be kept in session all the time. I replied to that this morning that whenever that was required the gentlemen who were insisting on remaining in session would, I suppose, be good enough to stay in their seats. So far as I am concerned, I insist on that being done, and no suggestion or threat of a continuous session will keep me from doing what I understand to be my duty in the premises.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, if the honorable Senator from Georgia will permit me, I have made no threat, and I have no right to make any threat. Whatever threat has been made here has been made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator will permit me, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] made a threat this morning.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Maine came in this morning—if I may be permitted to enter a word for the Senator from Maine, who is amply able in this matter to take care of himself—and did not know, as I understand, that by unanimous consent the joint resolution had been called up, and was then pending. He intended to make a motion, and was not present at the exact moment when the consent was given, and made some remarks.

This thing can be conducted along with kindly consideration for all Senators, but I have heard the Senator from Arkansas during my term in the Senate over and over and over again say this sort of thing. We are entitled to some consideration. We have been here during the entire session, and we can stay here just as long as the other side can stay here. They commenced on this matter last Friday, and wanted to adjourn from Friday until Monday. Now they want something else; and that is going to be the plea from time to time, so that the majority shall not control this matter.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WHITE. I ask the Senator from Georgia to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BACON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President—

Mr. WILSON. I call for the regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator from Georgia, if he has the floor, will go on with his speech.

Mr. WHITE. I do not know that the Senator from Maine has any particular right, when I occupy the floor, to call on the Senator from Georgia to do something that may gratify the whim of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WILSON. He did not do it on your account.

Mr. WHITE. I am glad to see there has been another unparliamentary exhibition from the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON] really has the floor with the consent of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Georgia yielded the floor to me, but the Senator who takes charge in this body of all things called for the regular order while I was making some observations, and of course I immediately, when the Senator from Maine made that point, took my seat, because I could not think of being contrariwise or opposed to the honorable Senator from Maine, who has in charge the entire parliamentary proceedings of this body.

Mr. HALE. I am glad the Senator is so—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] has the floor.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Maine does not wish to insist on his point.

Mr. HALE. My only object, Mr. President, was—

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON] was only taken off the floor by his own willingness to yield.

Mr. WILSON. The Chair understands that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] interrupted me in my remarks. I accordingly took my seat because that Senator called for the regular order. I insist now on calling for the regular order on the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I did not call for the regular order until I thought the Senator had yielded the floor and was sitting down.

I think there is nothing to be gained by the kind of controversy which has occupied the Senate for the last fifteen minutes. It is a very serious subject which is before the Senate. This morning—there was no skirmishing, there was no filibustering, there was no opposition upon either side—the Senator in charge of the joint resolution asked that it be laid before the Senate, and by unanimous consent that was done.

The Senator in charge stated that he proposed, so far as in his power lay, that the discussion upon the subject-matter and its merits should proceed; that he would not give way unless some necessary business intervened, upon which by unanimous consent—no jangling, no controversy—the venerable Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] addressed the Chair and the Senate in opposition to the measure. When he concluded, another Senator took the floor for discussion.

My object in calling for the regular order was that the discussion shall proceed in a dignified way by Senators for and against this proposition. I repeat, I think nothing is gained for either side, nor for the Senate before the country and the world, by any discussion back and forth as to who is to blame for something that is said that may be exciting and exasperating. Let the discussion proceed upon the merits of the case. My object in calling for the regular order was that it might so proceed. Of course, it is the fashion, and it has been the practice of the Senate, for a Senator having the floor to yield for any purpose; but I do not think, when the rule is rigidly applied, that a Senator can do that.

A Senator may yield for a question as to something in the line of his argument, but it never in this body has been assented to that a Senator may divide his time and portion it out, giving five minutes to one Senator and ten minutes to another, upon subjects-matter nobody can tell what they may be. The regular order, in my view of the rules, is that a Senator having the floor shall himself proceed, and that he shall not farm out the time and allow other Senators to come in with controversies outside of his own speech.

Having said this, I am entirely willing to withdraw the point of order. If Senators do not agree with me that it would be better for this discussion to proceed in a dignified way, without either side reproaching the other when we have embarked upon it in a dignified way, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE. Of course the rule stated by the Senator from Maine may be perhaps technically good, but it should scarcely be invoked by him after the eloquent address which he has made in violation of the solemn principle which he has so graphically described.

So far as those who are opposed to annexation are concerned, I believe there has not been shown the slightest disposition to harass the discussion of this question. This morning, when the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] made the proposition to proceed with it, there not only was no opposition to what he said he intended to do, but I suggested that he bring the matter before the Senate at as early an hour as possible to permit the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to speak. I stated so on the floor, and I told the chairman of the committee so personally. After that had been done my very able and distinguished friend from Maine [Mr. FRYE] made what seemed to me to be a semisanguinary statement, which stirred up, naturally, the feelings of a great many Senators who had not done anything to warrant censure, but who, it seemed, in advance were to be censured.

I did not think the Senator from Maine had any very ulterior design in view; and I thought perhaps if he invoked the extreme measures which he to some extent threatened, that would be in the future, when some evidence had been displayed of an attempt to unduly procrastinate this debate; but when that statement was made, it seemed to me—though it was probably a mistake on the part of those who thought that way—to be a threat that some new rule or supposed rule was to be invoked, and that we would be forced from the beginning to proceed during unusual hours. This debate has just commenced to-day, and by unanimous consent it has commenced to-day, and there has not been one vote to-day, or any other day, against commencing this debate to-day, as it has been commenced.

I thoroughly agree that we should proceed, as we ought to be able to do, in a good-natured way, and if there is anything done hereafter to indicate the necessity of prolonged sessions it may be that we will have such sessions; but we have had quite a lengthy and a very able presentation of the matter by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and we are now to have another from the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], and I certainly hope that this record will not be made up on the suggestion that we have initiated any threat. I feel confident that, for whoever that threat was intended, the Senator from Maine will not deny, now that he is in the Chamber, that he made it.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I do deny that I made any threat whatever. There was a proposition made on the floor of the Senate the first thing this morning that the bankruptcy bill should be taken up. Anybody who has heard the discussion of bankruptcy bills in this Senate knows perfectly well that there could be a week's debate on that conference report.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Who made it?

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. WHITE. It was not suggested by anything that occurred on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. HOAR. I made no such suggestion, and the Senator from Maine is as absolutely mistaken as he ever was in his life.

Mr. FRYE. Then I will say that I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to make the suggestion that he would call up the conference report on the bankruptcy bill; and that was what suggested to me to say that this measure was important, and I hoped that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who had it in charge, would not surrender to any legislation, except absolutely necessary war legislation. There was no threat in that. I then added that I hoped he would hold the consideration of this resolution without adjourning at 4 or 5 o'clock. That I said.

Then I said I hoped he would not feel that he was under the necessity of consulting the convenience of a Senator in relation to the time in which he should speak.

That was all that I said about the matter. There was no intention of threat, and there was no threat at all in what I did say.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Maine by making the statement, and not elaborating it to show that, instead of its being directed against those who are opposed to the annexation of Hawaii, the fire was wholly centered upon the Senator from Massachusetts, did not do either himself or ourselves justice.

Mr. WILSON. Now, Mr. President, I call for the regular order. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

Mr. BACON. I have got so much in the habit of yielding that I think I will do so with great pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this measure has been twice taken up to the exclusion of ordinary business and against the regular order of ordinary business by unanimous consent—once at the close of the routine business, and again at 2 o'clock. At 2 o'clock it was taken up, to the temporary exclusion of a measure in charge of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], who, it is rumored, is an opponent of the annexation of Hawaii, I believe—I am not at liberty to state what I have heard him state on the subject, but there is such a rumor. So I think that those who are in favor of the annexation of Hawaii have no right to complain that its opponents have treated them unfairly or discourteously or have manifested any intention to interfere with their plans for the conduct of the business.

I stated to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], when he made his request, that I hoped, the conference report on the bankruptcy bill having been made on Friday last, with the notice that it would be called up early this week, if there came an opportunity during the discussion at some time that it might be taken up if it turned out that it would not take much time. That is all I said.

That is what provoked the Senator from Maine, as I understand now, to make what everybody else in the Chamber, I think, but himself construed as a threat. The Senator, with great earnestness and passion of manner, demanded the yeas and nays first on a vote which had already been taken, which did not indicate his usual plainness of perception of what had been going on, or his usual application of the rules of parliamentary law. Then he proceeded to say that he hoped this debate would be so conducted by the chairman that we should not adjourn at 4 or 5 o'clock in the afternoon; that he should not give way to any business except necessary war business—if he made that limitation, and he thinks he did; I thought that limitation was made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], but that is immaterial—and that no Senator's convenience as to the time of making his speech should be consulted. If that is not a threat, or at any rate the expression of a desire of a very unusual and harsh method to be pursued in conducting a debate, I do not know what is.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I rise really to a question of order. In the first place, I think this is a good time to do it, because I know that the Senator from Georgia is not sensitive about occupying the floor at this moment.

The Senator from Georgia appears to have the floor; and he has yielded for some temporary purpose. That has been the custom in the Senate for many years, as a parliamentary practice well recognized here. But, Mr. President, when the Senator from Georgia took his seat and did not promptly rise when the interruption had ceased, he had lost his right to the floor.

Mr. BACON. I am perfectly willing, Mr. President, for the Senator from Colorado to proceed if he desires.

Mr. TELLER. If any other Senator had taken the floor, he would have been entitled to proceed. He could not have been speaking by the consent of a Senator who is in his seat.

I notice that the Chair, whenever Senators rose to speak, addressed the Senator from Georgia with the request whether he yielded, the Senator from Georgia being in his seat. A Senator who desires to address the Chair has the right to assume that under such circumstances a Senator has left the floor, and the Senator rising may address the Chair, and the Chair should recognize him.

It has been the custom in the Senate for many years that a Senator who has the floor should yield for an interruption, and that has been one of the things which have made service in the Senate extremely pleasant. Sometimes he would yield while he was making a speech to another Senator who had a pressing matter which he wanted to take up, like a resolution, or perhaps a short bill, or something of that kind, and it has been recognized that he is entitled by the courtesy of the Senate to go on when the Senator who interrupted him had concluded.

No Senator would ever think of interrupting another under those conditions; but yet, strictly speaking, according to parliamentary rule, the Senator yielding the floor had lost it. No Senator can call for the regular order when a Senator is on the floor discussing any question in the Senate, because he is not required under the laws of the Senate to speak germanely to the subject under consideration, and he can not be interrupted unless he is speaking out of order, as suggested, or is committing some impropriety or some violation of parliamentary ethics or parliamentary rule; but the fact that he is speaking about something else than the bill under consideration does not entitle any Senator to call him to order. Every Senator is supposed to have judgment himself upon all such questions and to discuss whatever he thinks is proper. The great liberty of debate which here exists has been one of the things which has also made service in this body pleasant.

Mr. President, I only mention this for fear there will grow up a feeling here that a Senator who gets the floor and does not proceed to make a speech has any claim to the floor, or that he is under any obligation to go on and make a speech. He may decline to make a speech after having given notice that he intended to make it. It may embarrass others, who are not prepared to go on, and all that, and sometimes retard the business of the body; but that is one of the rights of a Senator. No one can say, "I insist now that the Senator from Georgia go on," if he does not wish to go on.

I have said this because I thought it was a good time to do so. If the Senator from Georgia had been himself pressing, I would not have said this at all.

I believe we can go through this debate in a Senatorial way. The question is one of a good deal of importance, about which some of us have a great deal of feeling. I myself have. I am so decidedly in favor of this joint resolution, and so thoroughly impressed that the interests of this country require its adoption, that I should be willing to vote right now, without a word of explanation or any defense of my vote, which I have not had an opportunity to make, except in executive session; and yet I would not deny, upon a great question like this, to every Senator who does not agree with me the right to present his views. There can be no such haste in coming to a conclusion in this case as to justify the American Senate in taking any unusual course and departing from the well-established and well-regulated rules of this Senate—not all of which are in a book, but rules which are well understood by members of this body who have served here for a good many years and which, I can say, are universally obeyed in the Senate.

One of the cardinal rules here has been that every Senator's convenience, even though it may lead to delay, shall be consulted. Of course if the request for delay is for the purpose of postponement, for the purpose of preventing a vote, then the Senate has the right to insist upon speedy and prompt action; but it has always been the custom since I have been a member of the Senate, when a Senator rose in his seat and said he was not prepared to go on, to give him time, especially when there is no constitutional limit as to the length of the session, as is the case now.

I should be delighted, Mr. President, to have a vote this week on this proposition; but I should not be willing to vote on this proposition this week if the members of the Senate who desire to discuss it have not had a fair opportunity to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that, under strict parliamentary law, he understands when a Senator yields the floor to another for a speech, of course the Senator originally having the floor loses his right to the floor. The custom, however, has grown up that when a Senator begins a long speech and yields for collateral matters, he retains the floor, and the Chair has simply respected that custom. The Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON] was taken from the floor not by any order of the Chair, but by his own consent.

Mr. WHITE. Under duress, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. WILSON. The Senator thought I was through. Perhaps I should have finished a little bit earlier, but it was no fault of the Chair or of anybody else that I lost the floor, and I do not care anything about it.

Mr. BACON. All this very pleasant episode was occasioned by an act of courtesy on my part, which I did not anticipate would consume so much time. I simply yielded to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] in order to make the statement that he had not called for a quorum for the purpose of delay, and I thought that would be the end of it.

Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] says that he would be very glad to vote on this question to-day; that his mind is made up. The Senator from Colorado is one of the Senators whom I am anxious to speak to to-day, not because I believe I can change his mind or his opinion on the general merits of this question, but because I desire to ask him and all Senators, especially those who are lawyers, to consider the question whether or not they have the right, under their constitutional obligations, to vote for this resolution, however much they may favor the annexation of Hawaii.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator permit me to answer that now?

Mr. BACON. I beg that the Senator will hear me before he answers.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say that I will hear the Senator, but the Senator is not to understand that I have not myself considered this question very carefully. I will hear the Senator, of course.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, of course I do not presume that the Senator from Colorado had not considered this question, but we are here for the purpose of interchanging views. I have great confidence in the Senator from Colorado, and am gratified by the fact that I seldom differ from him, and I shall be more than gratified if we can get together upon this question.

I assume that Senators will not vote for a resolution if they can be satisfied that it is unconstitutional. I assume that they will not vote for an unconstitutional resolution which directly impairs and strikes down one of the highest prerogatives of the Senate; and it is to that question that I propose to address myself to-day and upon which I am extremely anxious to have the hearing of Senators who favor the annexation of Hawaii.

The proposition which I had stated before the interruption was this: That a joint resolution for the annexation of foreign territory was necessarily and essentially the subject-matter of a treaty, and that it could not be accomplished legally and constitutionally by a statute or joint resolution. If Hawaii is to be annexed, it ought certainly to be annexed by a constitutional method; and if by a constitutional method it can not be annexed, no Senator ought to desire its annexation sufficiently to induce him to give his support to an unconstitutional measure.

I trust, Mr. President, that the time has not come when a Senator can not appeal with confidence to his fellow-Senators in opposition to a measure on the ground that it is unconstitutional. It matters not how important it may be that Hawaii should be annexed, it matters not how valuable it may be, it will be too costly if its price is the violation of a great fundamental provision of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, it is a painful fact that not only people at large, but officials are losing to some extent the reverence which they ought to have for constitutional obligations. It is a matter of a smile with some when you oppose a measure on the ground that it is unconstitutional, and I confess that I have been pained when I have heard, as I have heard in this Chamber, learned and distinguished Senators say that they would approve and applaud the action of the President of the United States if he would seize Hawaii and run up upon it the flag of the United States, and take possession of it as the property of the United States as a war measure.

I say I have been pained when I have heard that, as I have heard it in this Chamber from very learned and very distinguished Senators, and I have been more than gratified that the President of the United States has not suffered himself to be guided by such foolish and such unwise counsels. If he had done so, every lover of his country must have been grieved that such a blow had been stricken at the integrity of the Constitution.

Mr. President, it surprises me that I even have to mention such a proposition; but if the President of the United States can in time of war, or at any other time, without the action of Congress in the performance of its constitutional functions, take possession of the territory of a friendly power, proclaim it as the territory of the United States, run the flag of the United States up over it as the insignia of its power and its dominion—if he can do so in one case, he can do so in any.

If the President of the United States can do it in the case of Hawaii, he can with equal propriety and legality do it in the case of Jamaica, and I repeat that I am more than gratified, although my apprehensions were aroused by the source from which those intimations came, that the President of the United States has not seen proper to listen to their unwise counsels.

And yet, Mr. President, if my view of this question is correct, the President of the United States would have as much power to take possession of the Island of Hawaii by a proclamation as would the Congress of the United States have the power to gain possession of it by a joint resolution of the two Houses. The powers of the executive department and the legislative department are as distinctly divided the one from the other as are the powers of the judicial department and the legislative department.

There are two kinds of law which are recognized by the Constitution of the United States and which are provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and each of these kinds of law is termed in the Constitution of the United States the supreme law of the land. One class of these laws is statute law, and it is provided that statute law shall be enacted by Congress; that statute law shall be made by a majority vote of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, with the approval of the President, or that it may be made, in case of the disapproval of the President, by the two-thirds vote of the House of Representatives and the two-thirds vote of the Senate, overriding his veto, and that law, when made, is declared by the Constitution of the United States to be the supreme law of the land. In the same way the Constitution of the United States declares that there are other laws which are also supreme, and those laws are made as treaties. The Constitution of the United States in the same section declares both of these as the supreme law of the land.

The Supreme Court of the United States in construing the question of supremacy has ruled that each is supreme. It has ruled that a treaty may be nullified by a statute and that a statute may be nullified by a treaty, and that where they come in conflict the question of the later is the one invoked to determine which shall prevail. As to those two classes of law, each one of them supreme, there is provided in the Constitution an entirely distinct method by which they may be enacted or made. I have stated the manner in which the statute law is made. Now, in an entirely different manner, the Constitution of the United States declares how a treaty, which is also a supreme law, shall be made. It declares that a treaty must be made by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of two-thirds of the Senate present. I am not quoting literally, but stating it substantially.

I ask the attention of Senators to this most marked provision in the Constitution of the United States and the two distinct classes of law, each of them declared by the Constitution to be supreme, each of them declared by the Supreme Court of the United States in construing that provision to be equally supreme with the other, which are made and enacted in specific ways in the manner pointed out in the Constitution, one totally different from the other. Is that provision of the Constitution a vital principle? Does it mean anything? Is it possible that the power which is clothed by the Constitution with the authority to make one class of laws can make the other class of laws?

Is it possible that the power which is conferred upon the Congress of the United States, the lawmaking power, the Senate and the House, with the approval of the President, can be used to make that other supreme law which the Constitution says shall be made in a different way, to wit, by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate? If it is possible for the House of Representatives and the Senate and the President, acting in the lawmaking capacity, and known generally in the Constitution as Congress, can make a treaty, and in so making it make it the supreme law of the land, then this joint resolution is constitutional. But if it be true that when the Constitution devolved upon the President and the Senate the power to make treaties it denied to the Congress of the United States the right to make treaties, then the joint resolution is necessarily unconstitutional, as I shall endeavor to show.

Mr. President, the Constitution gives to the President the power to appoint all officers of the United States by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. If Congress can by statute make a treaty, why may it not by a statute make an ambassador or a chief justice or a general of the Army?

Mr. President, there are two ways in which the provision in the Constitution conferring upon the President of the United States and the Senate the power to make treaties can be absolutely nullified. One is the manner I have suggested, by Congress openly and boldly assuming to make a treaty; and if constitutional restrictions are not to be respected, if no man is bound by the Constitution, if a Senator or a Representative, because forsooth he may be in the majority can effect his purpose by overriding the Constitution and disregarding it, then that is the simplest way to do it. There is still another way in which this provision in the Constitution can be nullified, and that is by undertaking to put into the form of a statute that which in reality is a treaty. Now, one method is just as effective as the other, and either method is as absolutely illegal as the other.

Before going further in that line of argument, in order that I may have the attention of Senators and that they may not think there is an answer which I do not recognize, I desire to say that I of course fully understand the argument which is made in reply that the State of Texas was admitted in this way. I can not stop to interrupt the thread of the argument at the present point to show that that reply is not a good one. Not to elaborate it further, I will merely state that it is the distinction between the authority of Congress to admit a State, to do which it is given the power in words in the Constitution, and the power to acquire foreign territory not for the purpose of making it a State, which, as I shall endeavor to show, is essentially and necessarily the subject-matter of treaty between two governments.

Mr. President, when the framers of the Constitution put the word "treaties" into the Constitution without any other defining words or without any limitation, is it to be supposed for a moment that they did not recognize the fact that the term "treaties" had a distinct, legitimate, necessary, well-understood meaning? Is it to be supposed that they for one moment contemplated that when the question came up whether a certain measure which involved a negotiation and agreement between this country and another should be accomplished in the way it provided, through a treaty by the President and the Senate, or whether it should be remitted to Congress, that the question of the form of the measure would control?

Is it to be supposed for a moment that they supposed that that which is essentially a treaty, and which they had provided should be made only by the President and the Senate, would be by any species of legislative legerdemain converted into the form of a statute, and another power or department of the Government, which had had distinct powers conferred upon it and which had been denied this power, would usurp it and that its usurpation would be recognized?

Mr. ELKINS. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. ELKINS. Does the Senator admit now that Congress can admit a State into the Union?

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ELKINS. And it admitted Texas?

Mr. BACON. Yes; but I will say to the Senator that I am coming to the distinct discussion of that branch of the case.

Mr. ELKINS. I merely want to put this question—

Mr. BACON. And I would be very glad if the Senator would pretermitt the question until I reach that point, and I shall be very happy at that time to take it up. I am now discussing another line. I am coming to the question of the power to admit States, and that will be the time for the question.

Mr. ELKINS. Having it in mind now, I should like to ask why, if it can admit a State, it can not admit anything less than a State; something that is not a State?

Mr. BACON. I am coming to that, and would be very glad if the Senator would repeat his question if I do not answer it before I get through, because I do the Senator the justice to say that I believe if I can possibly satisfy him of the unconstitutionality of the joint resolution he will not vote for it, however much he may desire the annexation of Hawaii. It is true I am very much discouraged by the fact that the Senator said to me, in private conversation, when I asked him if he was bound by the Constitution, yes, as he interpreted it.

Mr. ELKINS. No; now tell the whole of it. I beg the Senator's pardon. I said as the Supreme Court of the United States interpreted it and as I interpreted it.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Mr. ELKINS. And not as the Senator interpreted it.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me?

Mr. BACON. Let me answer the Senator from West Virginia first. If the Senator from West Virginia will stand to that proposition, I will promise to show him a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which says that the United States Government has no right—I do not go so far as the Supreme Court go in this particular, and I am merely stating this for the benefit of the Senator from West Virginia—to annex territory which it does not intend to make into a State, and Senators themselves say they do not intend to make a State of Hawaii.

Mr. ELKINS. You can not state what will be the intention of the Government a hundred years from now.

Mr. BACON. I am not putting it on that ground at all. Now I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. The position of the Senator from West Virginia is good Democratic doctrine, a doctrine which old Jackson pressed on the country with great force, that every Senator and every Representative could construe the Constitution as he understood it.

Mr. BACON. Of course.

Mr. TELLER. And it was his duty not to look to the Supreme Court of the United States, but to his own judgment and conscience in these matters.

Mr. BACON. I am perfectly satisfied if that shall be the rule. I was discouraged by the fact that the manner of the reply of the Senator from West Virginia indicated that he would not be controlled by what some of the more distinctive lawyer members of the Senate might consider to be the law. He was going to take it into his own hands.

But to return, I am coming to a discussion of the question, to which I ask the attention of Senators, as to what the framers of the Constitution meant when they said "treaties" and what they must necessarily have meant. I asked the question whether it was possible that the framers of the Constitution when they put the word "treaties" into the Constitution in this connection understood that it simply meant an agreement or a negotiation put in a certain form, and that if it were not put in that certain form, it could be refined away and the exercise of the function could be usurped by Congress which had been denied the right to make a treaty. I had asked that question when the Senator from West Virginia interrupted me.

Now, Mr. President, has the word "treaty" a definite, well-fixed meaning? Is a treaty only that which is put in the form of a treaty as we usually see it when submitted to the Senate on the part of the President, or does a treaty mean a certain thing regardless of the form? I say the latter. The distinction between a statute and a treaty does not depend on the form. A statute may be in various forms. It may be in the ordinary form of a statute or in the form of a joint resolution. One has the same effect as the other. A treaty depends for the fact that it is a treaty according to the substance of it and what it proposes to accomplish.

Now, a statute is this: A statute is a rule of conduct laid down by the legislative department, which has its effect upon all of those within the jurisdiction. In other words, a statute passed by the Congress of the United States is obligatory upon every person who is a citizen of the United States or a resident therein. A statute can not go outside the jurisdiction of the United States and be binding upon the subjects of another power. It takes the consent of the subjects of the other power, speaking or giving their consent through their duly authorized government, to be bound by a certain thing which is enacted in this country; and therein comes the necessity for a treaty.

A treaty is that which is binding upon the people of two countries by mutual agreement that it shall be binding upon the two countries. A treaty is binding on two countries because the authority in each country undertakes that it shall be binding in its particular country, and that is the essential element and feature of a treaty, that it is binding on two countries because the authority which makes it binding is the particular authority in each country, not having a general authority over both.

If it were practicable for a statute to be made obligatory upon the citizens of another country, there would be no need of a treaty. We could simply enact what we wanted, and the people in the other country would have to obey. But as we can not do it, we have to invoke the consent of the people or the authority in that other country that they will also be bound by the same law, and that makes a treaty.

Now, Mr. President, I repeat possibly, but I desire to state it in another shape, that the distinction between a treaty and a statute is this: The statute affects only the people within the jurisdiction of the authority by which it is enacted. There is no consent required on the part of those who are subject to such a statute. It is made obligatory upon them by the authority of those who enact it.

A treaty, on the other hand, is something which involves negotiation with another country. It requires the consent of the duly authorized department in this Government, and it also requires that they shall negotiate and obtain the consent of the power in the other Government. This is stated with very great clearness in a report made by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations in 1844—I have forgotten the number of the Congress—when it had under consideration the Texas resolutions. I will read it. This is a definition of a treaty. I read from Senate Documents, volume 3, 1844 and 1845. It is broken up so that the pages can not be told, as the documents are bound together, but it is Document No. 79, page 5 thereof; not the page of the volume.

But let it be remembered—

And I ask the attention of Senators now to this definition of a treaty—on the other hand, that although this treaty only acts for other powers and in the singular sphere of exterior concerns, within this sphere no other power has privilege to intrude; the domain is all its own; in a property exclusive. If the affair to be accomplished be exterior and require the intervention of compact to accomplish it, here with the treaty-making power is the office, and sole office, to accomplish it. No other power has privilege to touch.

I do not know whether or not I make my distinction clear, but the framers of the Constitution had in view certain actions by this Government when they set up a distinct and separate department of Government for the making of treaties and when they conferred upon that department exclusive power to make treaties; and I suggest and urge as the crucial feature in this consideration that the framers of the Constitution necessarily, when they said that the President should have the power to make treaties, with the consent of the Senate, meant to put within that department the power to conduct all negotiations between this country and another country, and to come to any agreement with that other country as to what should be a rule of conduct between them.

If that be true, necessarily everything which is of that nature, everything which can be that and nothing else, must be the subject-matter of a treaty. If not, as I have said before, the framers of the Constitution made a great mistake when they unnecessarily put into the Constitution this machinery by which the power was conferred upon the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties.

Mr. President, I said that it was within the power of Congress to nullify this provision of the Constitution in two ways, either by directly making a treaty with another foreign Government or by putting into the shape of a statute that which in reality is a treaty. Let me illustrate as to the latter, because that is what is attempted to be done here now. The attempt here is to make a treaty by statute. The treaty, as I understand it, which was proposed and negotiated by the President of the United States with the authority of Hawaii, and all the reports in connection with it have been made public, so that I can with propriety speak of them here.

A treaty was negotiated between the President of the United States and the Hawaiian Government. Why did the President of the United States and the Hawaiian Government negotiate a treaty for the annexation of those islands? I hope Senators who are considering this question and who propose to answer it will consider this particular feature of it. Why did the President of the United States negotiate with the Hawaiian Government by means of a treaty for the annexation of those islands except that the President of the United States and the authorities of the Hawaiian Islands recognized that it was the proper subject-matter of a treaty?

Why did the Senate of the United States, when the President submitted the treaty here, undertake to consider it and to give its consent to the treaty which had been negotiated between the President of the United States and the Hawaiian authorities? Why was it that it did not return it to the President and say "This is not the subject-matter of a treaty, and we should not be asked for our advice or consent?" Simply because of the fact that the Senate of the United States, without exception, regardless of what the opinion of any Senator might be on the merits, recognized that it was the proper subject-matter of a treaty.

Aside from this direct recognition it comes within the general definition of that which must be a treaty. It is to accomplish something which can not be accomplished by the unaided act of the United States. It is to accomplish something which requires not only the consent of the United States, but the consent of Hawaii, and therefore must be in its essence and in its character a treaty. And yet, Mr. President, as I have said, in the joint resolution now before the Senate there is an effort made to nullify this provision in the Constitution in the second of the methods which I suggested, to wit, in the method of putting in the form of a statute that which of necessity can be nothing else but the subject-matter of a treaty.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Georgia will permit me, in line with the point he is making, it may be that the treaty was suggested because of the provision of the Hawaiian constitution, found in the thirty-second article of that instrument, which provides specifically for annexation to the United States by treaty, which treaty, of course, has never been made.

Mr. BACON. I understand that. I have no doubt that point will be fully brought out by the Senators who discuss the merits of the question.

What is it that the House of Representatives has done? And I say the House of Representatives, not in any spirit of criticism of it particularly, because the Senate, through its Foreign Relations Committee, had previously proposed the same thing. Here was the case of a treaty, which was not only recognized by both parties as a treaty and acted upon by both parties as a treaty, but which, in its essence, must of necessity be a treaty, which was practically abandoned in the Senate for the reason that in the manner and the method pointed out by the Constitution it could not be made law. The framers of the Constitution, in their wisdom, had provided that the President of the United States should make a treaty if two-thirds of the Senators present concurred in it.

Now, whether wise or unwise, that is the law. If only a majority concur, the treaty can not be made. Therefore the effect of the failure in the Senate to ratify that treaty was the same as the failure of an attempted passage of a statute law. The friends of annexation, seeing that it was impossible to make this treaty in the manner pointed out by the Constitution, attempted then to nullify the provision in the Constitution by putting that treaty in the form of a statute, and here we have embodied the provisions of the treaty in the joint resolution which comes to us from the House.

I will state the object I have in calling attention to this point. It is perfectly within the power of Congress—and when I speak of Congress in this discussion I mean the lawmaking power—if it has a majority in each House, if it can pursue the method legally which is sought to be pursued here, it is perfectly within the power of Congress not only to nullify and destroy that provision in the Federal Constitution, but to effect by statute any treaty that can not command a two-thirds vote in the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks there is any treaty that we can not annul by a direct act of Congress?

Mr. BACON. I do not. I have so stated already. But I ask the learned Senator—

Mr. TELLER. Then the legislative power can not be inferior to the treaty-making power.

Mr. BACON. The learned Senator has certainly not read the decisions of the Supreme Court on this subject.

Mr. TELLER. I have.

Mr. BACON. The law on the subject is not in doubt. I have stated it already. The Senator probably did not hear it when I first began.

Mr. TELLER. Yes, I did.

Mr. BACON. It was that the Supreme Court have decided that a treaty and a statute were each supreme, and that when they came in conflict the latter would prevail as being of a later date; in other words, that a statute may be set aside by a treaty, and a treaty may be set aside by a statute.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator if that is not simply a recognition of the statutory right to annul a treaty. We have done that repeatedly. It has been discussed here for days.

Mr. BACON. Nobody disputes that. And in the same way a statute can be annulled by a treaty.

Mr. TELLER. I recall that the Senator from Oregon not now here, Mr. Mitchell, made perhaps a half day's argument on that subject to show by the authorities and by argument the absolute control of the legislative department over any treaty that might be made.

Mr. BACON. The Senator and myself are not differing upon that point. I had announced that before he interrupted me. I say that a treaty may be annulled by a statute, and I say also that a statute may be annulled by a treaty. Now, the point I want to call the Senator's attention to is that while a statute has the power to annul a treaty, and while a treaty has the power to annul a statute, neither one of them has the power to usurp the functions of the other. Let the Senator point out, if he can, any authority for that. In other words, while a treaty made by the President and Senate can be annulled by an act of Congress, that does not imply that the treaty itself can be made by act of Congress. They are two very different things. It can set the treaty aside, but it can not create a treaty.

Mr. TELLER. That is right.

Mr. BACON. That is right, the Senator says, and I am glad that we have gotten now on common ground. It can annul, it can destroy, but it can not create. Now, the point I want to call the attention of the Senator and the attention of the Senate to is, that if the joint resolution under consideration is constitutional, it is within the power of Congress by such a joint resolution to create a treaty.

Mr. TELLER. There is just where the contention comes in.

Mr. BACON. Of course; and I want to try to prove it, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. TELLER. I say it is no assertion of the treaty-making power, but clearly the legislative power. I want to call the attention of the Senator to another point, if he will allow me. He has spoken of this treaty not having been ratified by the Senate. He must remember very well that when the attempt was made to annex Texas to this country it absolutely failed. The Senate voted the treaty down and declared that they would not have the treaty.

Mr. BACON. I am coming to that. I will read to the Senator all about that before I get through.

Mr. WHITE. Congress did not rely upon a treaty. They did not consider it to be of any effect.

Mr. TELLER. Of course; they voted it down.

Mr. WHITE. You rely upon the treaty here.

Mr. TELLER. We do not.

Mr. BACON. I hope I may have the judicial ear of the Senator, not his controversial ear. I hope I may have the judicial ear of the Senator, because I wish to suggest, so far as I am able, a logical presentation of this matter. The Senator comes to the conclusion with me that while Congress in its lawmaking capacity may destroy a treaty, it can not make a treaty. The Senator admits that.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want the Senator to understand that he has first put that idea in my mind.

Mr. BACON. Oh, no; by no means.

Mr. TELLER. I have not come to that conclusion from anything in the Senator's argument. That is one of the things that I think every ordinary lawyer in this body would recognize.

Mr. BACON. Well, I am not claiming any very great originality in this matter. I am simply trying to suggest a view of it, and, I hope, with becoming modesty; and I am not assuming to be suggesting anything which the Senator did not know before. I am sorry, I say, that there is this controversial spirit, because I was in hopes we might have a judicial consideration of this question. If, therefore, not by reason of my argument, but by reason of a fundamental principle which every ordinary lawyer recognizes, it be true that Congress can not by statute make a treaty, then if this procedure is one by which Congress does make a treaty there is no answer to the proposition that it is unconstitutional. I propose to show that by this process Congress does make a treaty; and when Congress assumes to make a treaty, I say it violates the Constitution, and not only so, but it strikes a blow at one of the fundamental and most important prerogatives of the President of the United States and also of the Senate.

Now, why do I say that if this method can be proceeded with successfully it does put within the power of Congress the opportunity to make a treaty? I will have to repeat a little in order to show it, because of the interruptions, to which I do not object. I have called attention to the fact that here was the subject-matter of a treaty. It was a negotiation between this Government and another government. It was something which could not be made effective by the independent action of this Government.

It was something which required the action of this Government and the reciprocal action of another government. And I say, recognizing that to be a necessity, the President of the United States and the Hawaiian authorities had, for the purpose of effecting it, entered into a negotiation and had come to an agreement to make a treaty; that, recognizing it as a proper subject-matter of a treaty, in obedience to the commands of the Constitution of the United States, the President sent the treaty to this body; and that this body, composed as it is nine-tenths of lawyers, and some of them very great lawyers, recognized it as a proper subject-matter of a treaty and considered it for weeks and months as a treaty; whereas if it had not been the subject-matter properly of a treaty they would have refused to consider it; and that because of the fact that they could not command the two-thirds majority required by the Constitution the treaty was abandoned, and the same treaty, word for word, is embodied in a joint resolution passed by the House of Representatives, and it comes here and we are asked that we shall pass it; and that that which would have been law as a treaty if it could have commanded two-thirds majority in this body, shall now become law in the absence of two-thirds by virtue of a majority vote in the House and the Senate, which is only required for a statute, and which is not sufficient for a treaty.

Now, Mr. President, if that is effected, if the joint resolution which has passed the House passes the Senate and receives the approval of the President, what has become law? The treaty? Yes, the treaty which could not command two-thirds vote here has, if it passes the Senate, become a law. Where is the answer to the proposition that by so doing the Congress of the United States has made a treaty in totidem verbis the same as the treaty which could not get a two-thirds vote in the Senate?

Now, Mr. President, that is not the only illustration. What is sought to be done in this case can be done in any other case. We had before this body during two Congresses, the last Congress and a part of this, a treaty with Great Britain known as the arbitration treaty, from which also the injunction of secrecy has been taken so far as the treaty itself is concerned and the fact that it was rejected by this body.

What prohibited the House of Representatives from taking that treaty and embodying it in a joint resolution, copying it word for word, and sending it to the Senate; and if this joint resolution, by receiving a majority vote of the two Houses, can become a law, what would have prevented the arbitration treaty from becoming a law when it had a majority vote in the House and the Senate, if it had been embodied in a joint resolution and had been approved by the President? Would not that have been making a treaty? Is there any other treaty which can be conceived of which, although it has been rejected by the Senate, still, if it once had the assent of the foreign power, could not be made into law in this country by an act of Congress by copying it into a bill or joint resolution?

Mr. HOAR. Would it disturb the Senator if I should ask him a question?

Mr. BACON. Not in the least.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me to touch the point of his entire argument. Perhaps he will allow me to follow my question with a single illustration, so that it may be understood. I shall not take sixty seconds in doing so.

Is not the essence of a treaty the incurring an obligation to a foreign nation? Therefore, if we choose to make a bargain with a foreign state that we will annex it in future, that may be done by a treaty concurring in the obligation to a foreign nation. But if we strip it of all that and incur no obligation whatever to any foreign nation, but only pass an act that a certain Territory shall come into the Union, it is only operated upon; it comes in by its consent, as a domestic transaction.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is speaking of the admission of a State?

Mr. HOAR. I will say Territory, which is the same thing. I mean the admission of territory under our control. I do not speak of annexing it to the United States. Let me repeat. I shall not take any time. Is it not the essence of a treaty, the incurring of an obligation to a foreign country? And therefore, although the taking of territory under our dominion, not as a State, might be accomplished by incurring an obligation to a foreign country to do it, if it can be done without that obligation, by a mere legislative act, is not that valid legislation?

Mr. BACON. I say the rule is very much broader than that stated by the Senator. It is not simply the question of incurring an obligation; it is the making of any agreement. It is an agreement by which beyond the jurisdiction of a statute in this country something is made lawful in another country; and whenever it involves the absolute abnegation of authority in the foreign country and the putting it under the authority of this country, that is certainly a most fundamental and vital agreement between the two.

Mr. President, we could not annex Hawaii by a statute or by a joint resolution if Hawaii had not consented. It would be brutum fulmen unless we proposed to enforce it by war. We can only annex Hawaii by a joint resolution or a statute in case Hawaii has herself assented to it. Therefore it involves a feature of negotiation, and necessarily the feature of agreement. Whenever you have the feature of negotiation and of agreement you have the essential characteristics and qualities of a treaty, and whenever you have a treaty you have that which the Constitution says must be made in a particular way and which can not be made in another way.

Mr. HOAR. Take the case of Texas.

Mr. BACON. I will come to that. If I do not differentiate Texas from this case, I will give up the question.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator seems to think that there can be no acquisition of territory without a treaty or by war.

Mr. BACON. Yes, or by war.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Suppose that, as on a former occasion, without any previous negotiation whatever, Hawaii had made a cession of her territory and sovereignty to the United States, does the Senator hold that Congress could not accept that?

Mr. BACON. Most undoubtedly; it would require the treaty-making power to do it.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Only for information. The first line of the joint resolution reads as follows:

That said cession—

Mr. BACON. I have the joint resolution in my hand for the purpose of reading that clause, but I am very glad to have the Senator read it.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well.

Mr. BACON. No; go on. I insist that you go on.

Mr. SPOONER. It reads:

That said cession is accepted, ratified, and confirmed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am not discussing this question.

Mr. SPOONER. In other words, has there been any attempted cession—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am not discussing that.

Mr. SPOONER. I have not finished my question. Has there been any attempted cession except by treaty? I understand my friend from Georgia is arguing the question whether Congress has the power to accept, ratify, and confirm a cession made by treaty not ratified by the Senate?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am not as familiar with what has been done as the Committee on Foreign Relations, but I understand that there has been an offer to cede.

Mr. SPOONER. An offer to cede is not a cession.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. One moment. I was not discussing this case particularly, but I was asking a question which, as it seemed to me, went to the whole argument of the Senator from Georgia, whether if there should have been an actual cession without any previous negotiation on the part of the United States we could not accept that without making a treaty?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

Mr. BACON. I will answer the Senator from Connecticut, but I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I am loath to interrupt the Senator, but I have been desiring for some minutes since he got on this proposition to put a question to him. The question I desire to put is this: Would it not be competent for the Congress of the United States to prescribe by law certain terms and conditions upon which any independent government might come in and become a part of the territory of the United States by complying with the terms and conditions prescribed by the Congress of the United States?

Suppose, for instance, to make plain what I have in my mind, we should provide that any independent people or government, doing what this preamble recites the people of Hawaii have done, should, upon complying with certain conditions, those and others that we might see fit to make, become a part of our territory, they notifying us that they had complied with all the terms and conditions, could we not thereupon declare them to be annexed and make them a part of the territory of the United States, and would not that be a more competent power for the Congress than it would be for the treaty-making power?

Mr. BACON. You can do that if you absolutely nullify the provision of the Constitution which says that a treaty shall be made in another way.

Mr. FORAKER rose.

Mr. BACON. Now, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me just one word further, I agree with almost all he has said; but at the point where I differ from him the difference becomes vital. I think that when you make a compact with a foreign power it must be in the nature of a treaty, but that contemplates the continued existence of the foreign power. Therefore, if a foreign power were by agreement to cede to us a part of its territory upon certain terms and conditions agreed upon, it would necessarily have to be done by treaty.

But where the whole foreign country comes in and ceases to be an independent power, as is proposed in this case, it is not properly done by treaty, or at least not so properly by a treaty, I will put it, as by an act of Congress in the nature of legislation. That was the case with Texas. She had ceased to be a part of Mexico; she had acquired her independence; she was an independent Republic; she had a right to stipulate for herself, and she stipulated, among other things, that she would cease to be as an independent power, and therefore she could accept a treaty or she could come in by the door of legislation. While the treaty-making power might be properly invoked, this other power is equally so.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am endeavoring to present with some degree of sequence, if possible, an argument. It is manifestly impossible for me to do so if I am interrupted by Senators, not for the purpose of a question, but for purposes of interjecting arguments. I do not think I can be accused of being unwilling to have interruptions, but I will ask Senators to permit me to pursue the argument with some degree of continuity, and when I have reached a stopping place at any particular division I shall be more than happy to yield for any question Senators may wish to ask.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the Senator will not think that I was undertaking to do more than make plain to him what was in my mind.

Mr. BACON. The Senator's interruption was very much less than that of some others.

Mr. FORAKER. I wished the Senator to know while he was on the floor what I had in mind.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Ohio makes a very important concession, and if he stands by that I think he will be bound to vote against this joint resolution. The Senator from Ohio concedes that if the purpose were to cede to this Government a part of the territory of another government it must necessarily be in the form of a treaty, but that if the purpose is to cede the entire country a treaty is not necessary.

Mr. President, I am utterly unable to see the force of that argument. It is in either case an agreement by which sovereignty existing over certain territory is abandoned, or rather annulled, and by which the sovereignty of this country is given to it. Why should the change of sovereignty as to a part be the subject-matter of negotiation and the change of sovereignty as to the whole be not the subject-matter of negotiation?

Mr. FORAKER. In a word I can answer that. Because there is no continuance of a compact. The whole thing is at an end by its consummation.

Mr. BACON. I do not agree with the Senator, for this reason: The vital essence by which this agreement is made binding is not that anything is enacted in this country which can have force there, but it is because by an agreement in consideration that it shall have force there we say it shall have force here.

But, Mr. President, I was on a practical point, and I want the consideration of Senators to it. The Constitution has clothed us with the high function, in conjunction with the President, of making a certain class of laws, which the Constitution says shall be supreme, to wit, treaties. Now, if this joint resolution can be legally passed, constitutionally passed, I submit the proposition as one which can not be successfully answered, that there is no treaty rejected by the Senate because of a lack of two-thirds vote, if the foreign government had given its assent thereto, as it has done here, or as it did in the arbitration treaty, which could not be made law by the enactment of a statute in the House of Representatives and in the Senate and by it being signed by the President. I see the Senator from Colorado assents to that.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that I assent to it; but I do not think that the fact that that can be done is any argument.

Mr. BACON. That may be. We shall see whether it is an argument or not. But, Mr. President, I want to say to Senators, if there is any treaty which could be entered into between the President and a foreign government, which, when it failed to receive a two-thirds vote in the Senate, could not be made law by this process, although it could not command a two-thirds vote in the Senate, I want Senators to point it out. If there is any treaty which can be devised which can not command a two-thirds vote in the Senate, which can command a majority in the Senate, which can not be made a law by this process, I want Senators to suggest what that treaty is.

What does that lead us to, Mr. President? If it be true that whenever a treaty fails to get two-thirds majority in the Senate, but can command a majority here and also command a majority in the House of Representatives and command the approval of the President—if it be true that such a treaty, although it can not be enacted or made in the way the Constitution provides, can be made in the way of putting it in the form of a statute or of a joint resolution, do we not, when we give our assent to such a proposition, absolutely surrender the power which the Constitution confers upon us for the making of treaties?

Mr. President, what does that lead to? The Senator from Colorado said he did not know that that would be any argument against the proposition. It leads to this: The President of the United States is the Executive, clothed with the power to make treaties. It can not possibly be denied that it was the contemplation of the Constitution that no treaty should be made which was not initiated by him. Is there any denial of that proposition? If so, let Senators, when they come to speak, answer it. It was the design of the Constitution that every treaty should be made by the President and should be initiated by him, and it was the design of the Constitution and the command of the Constitution that there should be no treaty which did not have his approval; and yet, if this can be done, the House of Representatives can originate a treaty.

The House of Representatives, when England, for instance, has signified her assent by an act of Parliament, or in any other way, can pass a joint resolution saying there shall be such and such an agreement between this country and another country. It can pass the House of Representatives; it can come to the Senate; it can receive a majority of each; and it can go to the President and receive his disapproval. It can go back to the House of Representatives and get two-thirds in that body, and come to this body and get two-thirds in this body, and we have a treaty absolutely over and above the consent of the President.

Do not let Senators confuse this proposition. It can not be said that at last it would rest with the President whether he would proclaim that treaty, because, if this form is adopted, it becomes law, and law binds the President as well as everybody else. Whenever he disapproves it, and it is passed by a two-thirds vote of the House of Representatives and a two-thirds vote of the Senate, it is a law which binds him, and it would be an impeachable offense in him if he refused to carry it out.

On the contrary, in the manner prescribed by the Constitution, he is part of the treaty-making power. A treaty is not obligatory until he himself proclaims it as a treaty. It may be even ratified by the Senate and he can withdraw his approval, for there is nothing that makes it law until he does proclaim it; but when you put it in the form of a joint resolution or a statute it becomes law whenever it has what the Constitution says shall be requisite to make a law, and it is then as binding on him as on anyone else.

So I say there is no escape from the proposition that if that which in its essential character is a treaty can be enacted in the form of a statute or a joint resolution, it is perfectly practicable to have a treaty in its essence and substance which the President of the United States not only has not initiated, not only has not approved, but which he has distinctly disapproved.

Mr. President, I am defending this great prerogative of the President as well as that of the Senate. His is the principal prerogative, and the prerogative of the Senate is an incident to it. If this precedent can be established, it will return in an evil hour to plague the President as well as the Senate.

Mr. President, this is a very serious consideration; and it is the duty of all of us to maintain every provision in the Constitution. It is doubly the duty of Senators to see that they do not absolutely abdicate the power which the Constitution confers on the Senate; and I can not, for the life of me, see any escape from the argument that, if this method is constitutional, then, wherever the assent of a foreign government can be gotten in another way, practically a treaty can be made without the consent of two-thirds of this body.

Mr. President, I want to read what a great man said on this subject. It is not simply the fact that we abdicate our power; it is not simply the fact that we fail to maintain the authority which the Constitution gives us; it is the fact that if we permit that which is in substance a treaty to be enacted by anything less than two-thirds in this body, we violate a great principle of the Constitution and we violate the rights of the States stipulated for when they entered the Federal Union.

I propose to read what George Washington said about it. The House of Representatives called upon President Washington in 1796 to lay before the House copies of instructions to the ministers of the United States who had negotiated a treaty with Great Britain, and the President, replying to the House of Representatives, asserts the power of the President and of the Senate to the exclusive control of all matters which are treaties, and gives the reasons for it. I read from the first volume of Messages and Papers of the Presidents, by RICHARDSON, page 194:

UNITED STATES, March 30, 1796.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

With the utmost attention I have considered your resolution of the 24th instant, requesting me to lay before your House a copy of the instructions to the minister of the United States who negotiated the treaty with the King of Great Britain, together with the correspondence and other documents relative to that treaty, excepting such of the said papers as any existing negotiation may render improper to be disclosed.

In deliberating upon this subject it was impossible for me to lose sight of the principle which some have avowed in its discussion, or to avoid extending my views to the consequences which must flow from the admission of that principle.

The very principle now under discussion.

I trust that no part of my conduct has ever indicated a disposition to withhold any information which the Constitution has enjoined upon the President as a duty to give or which could be required of him by either House of Congress as a right; and with truth I affirm that it has been, as it will continue to be while I have the honor to preside in the Government, my constant endeavor to harmonize with the other branches thereof so far as the trust delegated to me by the people of the United States and my sense of the obligation it imposes to "preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution" will permit.

The nature of foreign negotiations requires caution, and their success must often depend on secrecy; and even when brought to a conclusion a full disclosure of all the measures, demands, or eventual concessions which may have been proposed or contemplated would be extremely impolitic, for this might have a pernicious influence on future negotiations or produce immediate inconveniences, perhaps danger and mischief, in relation to other powers.

The necessity of such caution and secrecy was one cogent reason for vesting the power of making treaties in the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, the principle on which that body was formed confining it to a small number of members. To admit, then, a right in the House of Representatives to demand and to have, as a matter of course, all the papers respecting a negotiation with a foreign power would be to establish a dangerous precedent.

It does not occur that the inspection of the papers asked for can be relative to any purpose under the cognizance of the House of Representatives, except that of an impeachment, which the resolution has not expressed. I repeat that I have no disposition to withhold any information which the duty of my station will permit or the public good shall require to be disclosed; and, in fact, all the papers affecting the negotiation with Great Britain were laid before the Senate when the treaty itself was communicated for their consideration and advice.

Mr. President, I ask the attention of every Senator to what I am now about to read, because that which is to follow is that which I had in view when I proposed to read this communication to the Senate:

The course which the debate has taken on the resolution of the House leads to some observations on the mode of making treaties under the Constitution of the United States.

Having been a member of the general convention, and knowing the principles on which the Constitution was formed, I have ever entertained but one opinion on this subject; and from the first establishment of the Government to this moment my conduct has exemplified that opinion—that the power of making treaties is exclusively vested in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and that every treaty so made and promulgated thenceforward became the law of the land.

It is thus that the treaty-making power has been understood by foreign nations, and in all the treaties made with them we have declared and they have believed that, when ratified by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, they became obligatory. In this construction of the Constitution, every House of Representatives has heretofore acquiesced, and until the present time not a doubt or suspicion has appeared, to my knowledge, that this construction was not the true one. Nay, they have more than acquiesced; for till now, without controverting the obligation of such treaties, they have made all the requisite provisions for carrying them into effect.

There is also reason to believe that this construction agrees with the opinions entertained by the State conventions when they were deliberating on the Constitution, especially by those who objected to it because there was not required in commercial treaties the consent of two-thirds of the whole number of the members of the Senate, instead of two-thirds of the Senators present, and because in treaties respecting territorial and certain other rights and claims the concurrence of three-fourths of the whole number of the members of both Houses, respectively, was not made necessary.

As stated by him, some States objected to the ratification of the Constitution because when it came to the question of the acquisition of territory the votes of three-fourths both of the Senate and of the House of Representatives were not required. Then he goes on to say:

It is a fact declared by the general convention and universally understood that the Constitution of the United States was the result of a spirit of amity and mutual concession; and it is well known that under this influence the smaller States were admitted to an equal representation in the Senate with the larger States, and that this branch of the Government was invested with great powers, for on the equal participation of those powers the sovereignty and political safety of the smaller States were deemed essentially to depend.

If other proofs than these and the plain letter of the Constitution itself be necessary to ascertain the point under consideration, they may be found in the journals of the general convention, which I have deposited in the office of the Department of State. In those journals it will appear that a proposition was made "that no treaty should be binding on the United States which was not ratified by a law," and that the proposition was explicitly rejected.

In other words, it appears by the journals of the convention which framed the Constitution of the United States that there was a proposition that if the President and the Senate made a treaty it should not be binding until an act of Congress approved it, and that proposition was explicitly rejected. That is what George Washington said about it.

The concluding sentence is as follows:

As, therefore, it is perfectly clear to my understanding that the assent of the House of Representatives is not necessary to the validity of a treaty; as the treaty with Great Britain exhibits in itself all the objects requiring legislative provision, and on these the papers called for can throw no light, and as it is essential to the due administration of the Government that the boundaries fixed by the Constitution between the different departments should be preserved, a just regard to the Constitution and to the duty of my office, under all the circumstances of this case, forbids a compliance with your request.

GO. WASHINGTON.

Mr. President, I desire that Senators will mark the peculiar significance of this utterance by Washington. The distinct question which he was having under consideration was whether the House of Representatives had the right to any consideration whatever of the subject-matter of a treaty. They had called on him for information with reference to a treaty, and he had stated to them, practically, "It is none of your business; that is a matter which belongs to the President and to the Senate, and does not belong to the House of Representatives."

I confess that I am utterly unable to understand how anyone can possibly get away from the proposition which I have submitted, which is, that if what is here contended for is legal, whenever a treaty is rejected by the Senate because it can not get a two-thirds vote, and whenever the project can command the assent of a foreign government, a majority of the Senate and a majority of the House of Representatives, with the approval of the President, any treaty thus rejected by two-thirds of the Senate can be enacted into law. If that is so, the provision in the Constitution which gives to the President and two-thirds of the Senate the treaty-making power is not worth the paper or the ink which it has taken to express it; it can be nullified at will.

Mr. President, it is contrary to every rule of construction that such a construction shall be put upon any constitutional provision as will enable it to be utterly nullified and made of no effect. The strongest argument which you can make against any construction of any provision of any constitution or any law is that that construction will nullify it.

A great many people, officials and others, have jumped to a conclusion as to the power of Congress on what occurred in the admission of the State of Texas. There is no doubt that Texas was admitted by a joint resolution, but it is equally undoubted that it was admitted under the express grant of power in the Constitution given to Congress to admit new States, and that the claim that there was no power in Congress to negotiate what in substance would be a treaty was absolutely disavowed by the men who were most prominent in effecting it.

I have here the Congressional Globe, in which there is a discussion in the Senate at the time the resolutions were under consideration for the admission of Texas as a State. I read from the speech of Robert J. Walker, of Mississippi, who was not only a very able man, so recognized throughout the length and breadth of this country, a man of very great learning, of admitted prominence, but one of the most earnest advocates for the passage of the resolutions by which Texas was admitted into the Union. I read from the Congressional Globe, second session Twenty-eighth Congress, page 246:

Mr. Walker said that he was rejoiced that the great American question of the reannexation of Texas was being presented on all hands on the grounds on which it was placed originally by him (Mr. Walker) in his Texas letter of the 8th of January, 1844.

He (Mr. Walker) then proposed, more than a year since, to admit Texas as a State of the Union by the action of Congress under that clause of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to admit new States into the Union. That clause was not confined to our then existing territory, but was without limitation; and the framers of the Constitution had expressly refused to limit the general power contained in this clause to the territory then embraced within the Union.

The general power, then, was in express words, and no man has a right to interpolate restrictions, and especially restrictions which the framers of the Constitution had rejected. But when this mode of admitting Texas as a State by Congress was suggested by him (Mr. Walker) in January, 1844, he was held up as the author of a new proposition, unwarranted by authority or precedent. Sir, said Mr. W., Mr. Madison, one of the principal founders of the Constitution, had expressly sanctioned this mode of admitting States by Congress out of foreign territory; and one of the most distinguished judges of the Supreme Court of the United States had expressed a similar opinion, all which he (Mr. W.) would show in due time. This opinion was also supported by numerous precedents.

North Carolina, Vermont, Rhode Island, and the Florida parishes of Louisiana were admitted into the Union as States or parts of foreign States by the action of Congress alone. In the case of Rhode Island, she was not represented in the convention which framed the Constitution of the Union, and after the ratification of the Constitution she became the foreign State. She was treated as such by Congress for several years, and duties were imposed upon goods imported from Rhode Island into the Union.

She was treated in every respect as a foreign State, and by the adoption of the Constitution and her withdrawal from the confederacy she became a foreign State and was admitted as such by Congress, being the same question, so far as constitutional power is concerned, whether she had been a foreign State two years or two hundred years, when she was admitted by Congress as a State of the Union.

I read on page 361 of the same volume from Mr. Buchanan:

Mr. Buchanan said he might have assumed the privilege of reply which belonged to him from the position he occupied on the Committee on Foreign Relations, but he waived it. Not because the arguments on the other side had not been exceedingly ingenious and plausible and urged with great ability, but because all the reasoning and ingenuity in the world could not abolish the plain language of the Constitution, which declared that "New States might be admitted by Congress into the Union." But what new States?

The convention had answered that question in letters of light by rejecting the proposed limitation of this grant which would have confined it to States lawfully arising within the United States. The clause was introduced with this limitation, and after full discussion, it ended in the shape it now held, without limitation or restriction of any kind. This was a historical fact.

Mr. President, I could go on and cite innumerable utterances from the Senators and Representatives who were active in that debate to show that while in some instances there were propositions looking to enact what really would have been a treaty between the United States and the Republic of Texas, they were all abandoned, and the advocacy of them was abandoned and the admission of Texas put exclusively on the ground that she was admitted as a State under the provision in the Constitution which specifically authorizes Congress to admit States.

The President and two-thirds of the Senate could not admit a State. A State could not be admitted by treaty. A State can only be admitted by act of Congress, and the Congress of the United States in passing the law which did admit Texas did not annex Texas and did not acquire one single foot of foreign territory. It admitted Texas as a State, and Texas herself reserved every inch of territory within her borders.

This question was again under consideration twenty-five years after that in this Chamber. That discussion occurred in the old Chamber, but in this Chamber twenty-five years ago or more, twenty-eight years ago, when there were as great lawyers in this body as ever graced it, this very question was again under discussion, when the question of the annexation of Santo Domingo was before the Senate.

There had been a treaty negotiated by the President with the Dominican Government which had been rejected by the Senate, and the President had sent a message to Congress in which, while he did not recommend the annexation of the island, he used language that indicated that such was the design; and upon a resolution which was introduced to send commissioners for the purpose of getting certain information this debate came up, and this question was discussed by the great lawyers then in the Senate as to whether or not by joint resolution foreign territory could be annexed.

In the Senate were such men as Carpenter and Conklin and Thurman and Edmunds and Morton and Garret Davis and Sumner, and every utterance that there was, was either in accordance with the doctrine which I have stated here or else was an utter failure to accept the challenge when it was laid down to them that that was the doctrine.

Mr. President, what was good law in 1844 and 1870 is good law now. What such men as Carpenter and Sumner and Edmunds and Thurman thought to be good law we can not go far astray in recognizing as good law, for I repeat no greater lawyers have ever been members of the Senate of the United States. I do not pretend that each one of the lawyers whose names I have mentioned gave distinct utterance to the proposition I make, but I do say that it was given distinct utterance in the debate, and that in that debate Thurman, Garret Davis, Sumner, Morton, Edmunds, and Trumbull all participated.

Not only were they present but they participated in the debate, and while the doctrine was boldly avowed by some, it was denied by none and taken issue with by none. I read from the Congressional Globe, part 1, third session, Forty-first Congress, page 193, what Judge Thurman said on the subject. If ever there was a man in this Chamber who was recognized by everybody, not only in this body but outside, as a great lawyer that man was Thurman. If ever there was a man who cast a doubt on the question as to his standing in the very front rank of lawyers I never heard him. Here is what he said:

Mr. THURMAN. I believe, sir, it is proper enough for me to say, for I think the President himself says it in his annual message, that a treaty was negotiated for the annexation of Dominica to the United States, and that that treaty failed to receive the requisite votes in favor of its ratification, thus disclosing the fact that between the President of the United States and the Senate there is a direct opposition of opinion upon the subject of this acquisition.

Certainly directly parallel to the case we now have before us.

Now, not willing to defer to the opinion of the Senator—and I do not say that in order to blame him; he has a right to his own opinion—the President, with very great earnestness, urges upon Congress and upon the country the desirableness of this acquisition, and he goes so far as to suggest the mode by which Dominica may be annexed. Seeing that it is not likely to be annexed under the treaty-making power for want of the requisite support in the Senate, he suggests that it may be annexed by joint resolution, as in the case of Texas; and it is with a view to carry out, no doubt, the wishes or opinions of the President in this particular that the Senator from Indiana has introduced the joint resolution.

I repeat that the joint resolution which was introduced was not for annexation, but for the purpose of sending parties there to get information. The discussion, however, proceeded upon the ground that that was the object.

Mr. PASCO. A preliminary step to it.

Mr. BACON. A preliminary step to it, and, therefore, Mr. Thurman comes to the discussion as to whether or not that could be done. If it could not be done, why the preliminary step? He was opposing the preliminary step.

Now, the first thing that strikes me is this: Is the Senate ready to recede from its position? Is the Senate willing to ratify a treaty for the annexation of Dominica, or is the Senate ready to annex Dominica by joint resolution?

And in that connection I beg leave to call the attention of the Senate to the fact—

Listen. This is what Thurman, this great lawyer, said:

And in that connection I beg leave to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that you can not by joint resolution annex Dominica as a Territory; you must annex her as a State if you annex her by joint resolution. There is no clause in the Constitution of the United States that provides for the acquisition of territory by joint resolution of Congress unless it be one single provision, and that is that the Congress may admit new States into the Union. And it was upon the argument that there was no limitation upon that power to admit new States into the Union, that it was not limited to territory belonging to the United States, but that territory belonging to a foreign power might be admitted into the Union as a State.

I am now answering the question of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] by reading to him what Mr. Thurman said.

It was upon that doctrine that the resolution in the case of Texas was passed. But no one has ever pretended—

This is very strong language, because he had reference to the former debate in 1844—that you could by joint resolution annex territory as a Territory without admitting it as a State. Then, if a treaty is to be abandoned, the proposition which is before the Senate is, is this Senate prepared to annex Dominica in its present condition?

Nobody, I think, has the least idea that any treaty for its annexation can be ratified. This Senate is not so ignorant that it did not know every essential thing in this resolution when it voted on the treaty. It would be to stultify ourselves to say that there is one single material inquiry in all this resolution that was not known to the Senate when it voted on the treaty; and unless the Senators who were opposed to that treaty are willing to recede from their opposition and ratify a treaty that may be formed, it follows that this resolution can only be put forward with the view of annexing Dominica by joint resolution, and that, as I said before, you can not do unless you are willing to take her in as a State.

That is what Allen G. Thurman said in this Chamber in the year 1870.

I say again that no man on this floor, I think, has the least idea that a treaty of annexation can receive the requisite number of votes for its ratification, and therefore—and I can not, perhaps, repeat it too often—the only question is, Will you annex Dominica as a State?

In the same debate Garrett Davis, of Kentucky, on the same day used language which I will quote. I ask the attention of Senators particularly to this, because Garrett Davis, in the course of his speech, said he was a member of the House at the time the Texas resolution was passed. I read now from the same volume, page 195:

The question so remained, and that was the judgment of the American people until the proposition to annex Texas was presented to the consideration of Congress and the people of the United States. There was a treaty first negotiated by Mr. Calhoun for the acquisition of Texas, and that treaty was laid by President Tyler before the Senate for its action, either of ratification or rejection. The treaty was rejected by the action of the Senate. After that action a joint resolution was introduced to annex Texas as a State of the Union—not as a Territory, but as a State of the Union; and the only power that was relied upon to authorize Congress to admit Texas was that single provision of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to admit States into this Union. It was my fortune at that time to be a member of the House of Representatives.

Going on, then, to discuss the message of the President, and coming to the point that he really attempted to annex it by joint resolution, Senator Davis used this language, on the same page:

That is the purpose of the President; that is his recommendation; that is his proposition. It is in furtherance of that proposition, as I understand, that this joint resolution has been introduced. It is simply to take up this futile, unconstitutional project of the President, to be effected without authority of the Constitution, and perverting and usurping its powers by Congress assuming the prerogative of the treaty-making power in admitting into the Union as a Territory territory that now forms part of a foreign country. It is to forward and give impetus, strength, and power to this covert and monstrous proposition that this resolution is introduced.

Are Senators ready to subordinate the power of the Senate to such a purpose, to such a project? Suppose the honorable Senator from Indiana should introduce a joint resolution to-morrow "that the country called Dominica, a part of the island of San Domingo, be, and the same is hereby, annexed to the United States of America as a part of the Territory thereof."

Just the resolution you have here—

where is the Senator—

Said this Senator, speaking in the presence of such men as those whose names I have called here to-day—

Where is the Senator who would stand up and avow his willingness to support such a proposition?

And nobody answered then or at any other time in that debate. It was denounced, scouted, and yet there was no man in the Senate at that day who would say he favored such a proposition or would defend the right of the House of Representatives and the Senate to pass a law under such circumstances and to such effect.

And yet it is to forward this monstrous proposition, to give it strength and a better chance of success; it is to minister to the pet project of the President that, I understand, this resolution will operate. I do not say that that is the motive with which it is introduced; but I say that will be the effect, and the only effect, of the passage of such a resolution.

Mr. STEWART. From whom does the Senator read?

Mr. BACON. From the speech of Garrett Davis. I had read previously from the speech of Allen G. Thurman. The Senator from Nevada was not present.

Mr. STEWART. I can cite the Senator to others.

Mr. BACON. I have no doubt the Senator would be very much edified by reading them, and if the Senator had pointed them out to me before I began I would have taken pleasure in reading them; but as it is I have trespassed so largely upon the time of the Senate that I hope that will be allowed to pass by.

Mr. STEWART. They are not in line with the Senator's argument.

Mr. BACON. I presume the Senator will read them. He read us a book the other day.

Why should gentlemen who believe that the Constitution does not authorize such a resolution as that—to acquire foreign territory, not to admit it as a State into the Union, but simply to acquire foreign territory—why should gentlemen who maintain the position that Congress has no such power give this resolution the least countenance, when its only object is to effect such a monstrous and unconstitutional project?

I repeat that the debate that day was participated in by Thurman, Davis, Sumner, Morton, Edmunds, and Trumbull, and that in the face of such enunciation and in the face of such denunciation there was no man in the Senate to rise up and say, "You are wrong; we can do this by joint resolution." On the contrary, they all acquiesced in it.

There is a very significant fact connected with this matter. This, as was stated by Garrett Davis, was a pet project of the President of the United States. That President was Ulysses S. Grant, the very idol of the country at that time certainly. In this body were those who were his extreme partisans, and yet while the suggestion that it was his purpose to have a joint resolution passed to annex Dominica was denounced in this body, we do not find one single man who would defend the doctrine that there could be any right by a joint resolution to annex Dominica.

Mr. TELLER. It was denied that there was any such proposition.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Colorado certainly is not candid in that suggestion. The proposition before the Senate was what was stated by Mr. Thurman to be a preliminary step to that proposition. It was avowed by Mr. Thurman that the resolution before the Senate was a preliminary step to a joint resolution by which Dominica could be annexed to the United States, and he distinctly stated it, and he stated that his opposition to it was that the second step could not legally be taken, that there could be no such thing as annexation of Dominica by joint resolution, and that therefore it would be foolish to take the preliminary step and incur the expense of making an investigation unless it was going to be admitted as a State, which nobody claimed.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia whether or not he deems it conclusive that Senators who were in their seats conceded the correctness of the proposition advanced by Senators on the floor when they did not rise to take issue with them?

Mr. BACON. I will not say a Senator who was in his seat, but I do say that when Senators participated in the debate on that particular proposition, when that was the question involved and upon which and around which the discussion revolved, when Senators did not take issue with it, it was equivalent to saying that they could not successfully do so.

Mr. FORAKER. I simply desire to place on record the negative of that proposition. Every day we sit here and to-day we have sat here and heard propositions advanced which Senators who are in their seats do not agree with and the correctness of which they do not concede. We do not take issue simply because we do not wish to break the continuity of thought, the logical arrangement of the argument which the Senator is presenting to the Senate.

At the proper time we may have something to say in answer to the propositions of the Senator from Georgia. I as one, in view of the position taken, want to say now that while I agree with a great many of the propositions of the Senator from Georgia, I do not at all agree with some of them. I think there is a fallacy underlying his whole argument which disposes of all of it whenever it is presented; and at the proper time it will be presented.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator thinks that, I hope the avowed purpose of those who sympathize with him, not to be heard in this debate, may be changed, and that we may hear from him and other Senators; and I think we will before we get through.

Mr. FORAKER. It is a question of policy in debate whether or not every proposition that is advanced shall be met in argument. Sometimes there are other considerations than the mere meeting of argument that may induce Senators to sit still and allow a Senator to proceed. All I want to register my protest against is, it being taken for granted that because we do sit still and listen to the Senator with pleasure, as we always do, for he is always entertaining, we are on that account to be presumed to be in accord with everything he expresses.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President—

Mr. BACON. Please pardon me. I am nearly through. I have not taken any such position. I have not said that Senators who were present upon that occasion and who did not participate in the debate were to be taken as acceding to the propositions made, but I have said—this was an isolated proposition—that Senators who participated in the debate and who failed to take issue with it virtually conceded it.

Mr. President, I certainly did not expect to occupy so much of the time of the Senate, and it is fortunate that I said in the beginning that I did not intend to go into a discussion of the merits of the question. I desire to submit to the Senate what I consider to be a very grave question. It is a question, if we pass this joint resolution, not only of one revolution, but of two revolutions. If we pass the joint resolution we enter upon a revolution which shall convert this country from a peaceful country into a warlike country. If we pass the joint resolution, we revolutionize this country from one engaged in its own concerns into one which shall immediately proceed to intermeddle with the concerns of all the world. If we pass this joint resolution we inaugurate a revolution which shall convert this country from one designed for the advancement and the prosperity and the happiness of our citizens into one which shall seek its gratification in dominion and domination and foreign acquisition. Mr. President, if we pass the joint resolution we have entered upon a revolution which shall change the entire character of the Government, which is a government of equals, a government solely for the benefit of its citizens, into a government in which the flag shall float over communities that we would never agree should be equals with us in this Government.

That is a great enough revolution, Mr. President, but if we pass the joint resolution, we have entered upon a revolution which I consider greater and more to be objected to than that; that is a revolution where, because the majority has the power, it will in this body surrender the great function which the Constitution gives to the President of the United States, and also to us as a part of the treaty-making power, and we have entered upon a field where the restraints of the Constitution are no longer to be observed and where the will of the majority shall obtain regardless of constitutional restrictions.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest, if there is nothing else pressing at this moment, that if anyone desires that the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of executive business, I will make that motion; otherwise I will move to adjourn. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that we have had two able presentations of the matter to-day, the first day it has been considered, and it is now not far from 5 o'clock.

Mr. DAVIS. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TELLER. Before the motion is put I wish to make a suggestion.

Mr. WHITE. I have made no motion at all.

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to debate the question, but I wish to say that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] who has just taken his seat has assumed in his discussion of this question that there is some constitutional provision requiring the admission of territory by treaty. There is the fallacy, if I may say so, of his whole argument. He has proceeded upon the basis that we could only acquire property by treaty, and therefore that an act of Congress which did acquire property was equivalent to a treaty and an invasion of the constitutional prerogative of the President and the Senate.

There is nothing whatever in that contention. There is no provision in the Constitution anywhere which can be tortured into a suggestion that property may not be acquired by an act any more than there is that it may not be acquired by the strong hand of war. We have heard from time to time the same argument made to-day. It was asserted for many years and asserted in the House of Representatives with great force by Josiah Quincy in 1811 that that provision of the Constitution which allowed the Government of the United States to take in Territories was confined to Territories belonging to the United States. He declared on the question of the admission of Louisiana, which was then before the House, that if it was admitted, it would be the disruption of the States, and he declared that it would be the duty of some of the States to move in that direction, or words to that effect.

The right of Jefferson (and Jefferson himself had some doubt upon it, it seems) to acquire territory by treaty or in any other way was denied. It seems to me we fail to see what I think everybody ought to recognize, that it is the right of every sovereign power, every nation, to add to its territory whenever it sees fit. I assert here that the Government of the United States may add territory to territory without any constitutional provision whatever, and that must have been understood by the fathers, because that was a recognized power of sovereignty which they could not have overlooked; and if they had not intended at the time that that should be done, they would have provided against it. They did not provide against it, and in the very beginning of our administration of public affairs we took in the Louisiana purchase.

I doubt whether there was anybody in the country who doubted that power to take in under some conditions. Mr. Jefferson doubted his power to take it in by treaty. In the Congress preceding his act there had been an appropriation of $3,000,000 for the purpose of purchasing a portion of the territory or purchasing rights in the territory, one or the other, or both. I do not remember the exact language. I tried to turn to it, but I can not, although I have read it.

Mr. DAVIS. It was a proposition to purchase that portion of Louisiana lying east of the Mississippi River.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; that was it. It was settling a conflict that was always arising between us and the people of that section. Congress appropriated $3,000,000. That might have been considered, so far as President Jefferson was concerned, a legislative declaration of the extent that we were willing to go, but instead of that he takes in the whole of the Louisiana country and agrees to pay $13,000,000 in addition, which was a tremendous sum when you consider the poverty of the country at that time. It was probably as great in real expense to the nation as the present war will be to us before we get through.

The Louisiana purchase brought on in this country a determined fight. We were told the same thing that the Senator from Georgia closed his speech by saying, that it is a revolution; that you are commencing now to do something that you will not be able to restrain yourselves from doing, and that you will take in some country, and that while this may not be very bad, you will ultimately take in some country that will have a population very diverse from ours, and therefore great harm may come. All that was heard in the House of Representatives with ten times the venom that you will hear it here now. The opponents of Jefferson went to work and figured it up in the public press. They said if you had piled one dollar on the other of the $15,000,000, it would reach to the very heavens. They estimated how many wagons it would take to carry the $15,000,000 of silver. All the press of the country in opposition to Jefferson teemed with these attacks. He was charged with corruption in it, and all those things.

Mr. President, does anybody doubt to-day, if we had failed to make that acquisition, but that we would have been a little, one-horse power, surrounded on the south as we are on the north, debarred from going to the Pacific coast, limited in our area? What would have been our condition then compared with our condition now?

When we took Texas, we heard the same howl, not from the Democratic party, that is coming up from some portion of it to-day, but from everybody who did not want to see that section of the country strengthened, and from the same class of men who are now complaining that the country would be so big that it would break down.

After the war we might have taken it from Mexico without paying a dollar. When we entered into an arrangement to take it from Mexico and pay for it, you heard the same complaint then that you hear now. It fell pretty quickly when they discovered that there were untold quantities of gold there. After the American people began to go out there to get it there was very little said about it. You had the same complaint when Florida was annexed. You have not annexed a foot of ground that this cry has not been heard. You had it when you annexed Alaska.

In the first place, there is nothing in this constitutional argument at all, in my judgment, with all deference to the Senator from Georgia. He assumes premises that are false, and his conclusions, of course, must be false because his premises are false, or they are liable to be at least.

Mr. President, I do not intend to debate this subject. I have said I would not, and I will not in extenso. But I want to say that I am not one of those who are afraid that the common sense and the patriotism of the American people will not restrain them from the acquisition of any undesirable territory. It is a reflection upon the American people to say that they can not trust themselves. I do not know what this war is to present to us. I confess I would not myself have felt unkindly disposed toward the postponement of this discussion until we could see to what we are brought and what great questions are presented to us.

But there is one thing certain; we have the same power as a nation that any other nation that flies its flag has, and you can not make the American people believe that the Government of the United States is not as capable of exercising the power of government in the Philippine Islands as any government in the world; that she can not give to those people a government infinitely better than they have had there for two hundred years. You can not make the American people believe that American liberty carried by our votes here, supported by this great nation of ours, will be a harm to the people who are asked to take their share in it.

Mr. President, if we have a mission to free Cuba, we have a mission to give to them a government if they do not have it; we have a mission if it is ours to step in there and say to Spain: "Get out, because you are incapable of managing the affairs here in accordance with the interests of the people." If it is our mission to do that, it will be our mission when we have done it to give them a government that shall secure to them the blessings of freedom, for which this country was established and for which it has stood before the world for more than a hundred years.

I hear with no degree of complacency people say, "You are incapable as a republic of managing a colony—of managing territory not adjacent." Mr. President, the best hour that the world saw under Roman power was when it was a republic. The best government the world ever got under Roman influence was when it had not a Caesar at its head, but when it had a republican form of government. If any people in the world are capable of maintaining colonies, it is a republic, or else a republic is a failure and monarchy or absolutism is better.

Do the American people believe it? No, Mr. President, they do not. I do not know what will be done when this war is over, but I will tell you what I believe, yet not wishing to take up and discuss mooted questions. I believe that wherever our flag flies by right of conquest or by the consent of the people who will let it be put up, there it will remain, and the party or the men who propose to take it down will reckon with the great body of the American people, who believe that it is the best flag and the best Government, better calculated to bring peace and prosperity to men than any other flag and Government under the sky.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, when I rose before I made no motion. I made a suggestion, expecting that there would be no opposition to it. From the conversation or debate which was had upon the floor to-day during the time when the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] first occupied it, I presumed there would be no objection. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] what his wish is in connection with this discussion?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I think the discussion should proceed until at least half past 5 o'clock.

Mr. WHITE. We are not ready to proceed to-night any further with the discussion. It is ten minutes to 5. We have debated it quite fully, and I regard the request of the Senator from Minnesota as unreasonable. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY]. Were he present, he would vote on all these questions with the majority in this Chamber, and I will therefore vote. I make this announcement once for all. I vote "nay."

Mr. PENROSE (when Mr. QUAY's name was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. QUAY] is absent, but is paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], who is also absent. Were my colleague present, he would vote with the majority upon this question.

Mr. SULLIVAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. He is absent, and I refrain from voting.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the negative). I inquire as to whether the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The senior Senator from Texas has not voted.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am paired with that Senator, and will withdraw my vote.

Mr. NELSON (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and withdraw my vote.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I desire to state that the junior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. MALLORY (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], and I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. If it will be agreeable to the Senator from Florida, I suggest that we transfer our pairs so that we may both vote.

Mr. MALLORY. It will be perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] and the Senator from Florida is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. We transfer our pairs. I vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY. I vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to state that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McBRIDE] is confined to his room by illness.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will announce that my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] is unavoidably absent from the city, and is paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY].

Mr. BURROWS. I understand that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] is absent and unpaired. If there is no objection, I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Colorado, so that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] will stand paired. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 44; as follows:

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. WHITE. As I remarked when I took the floor a moment ago, it struck me that for an initial day we have done pretty well. I still think so.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President—

Mr. WHITE. I wish to take the floor myself the first thing in the morning. I did not feel like doing it to-night, and I do not intend to speak this evening. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota, especially in view of the fact that we have sat here to-day a great deal of the time without a quorum and without any suggestion from us, and while we are making no concessions of any kind at all, but are simply asking for what we think should be right and fair, that there should be no opposition to a motion either to adjourn or to go into executive session. Of course we have just voted upon the adjournment question, but I am not especially anxious about that. I shall be prepared to go on to-morrow and desire to do so. No one else seems to be ready to go on to-night. I will not make the motion myself, but I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that perhaps it might not impede anything if he made the motion.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Minnesota if he will not allow half an hour to be spent in the consideration of the bankruptcy bill?

Mr. TELLER and others. Oh, not to-night.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator allow me to present a conference report?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that a number of House bills and other matters are to be laid before the Senate. Does the Senator from Minnesota insist on his motion?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly not. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. HOAR. If I can have the attention of the Senate, I will state that the bankruptcy measure as proposed by the conferees has been the result of a great deal of hard work, especially on the part of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. After a great deal of difficulty an agreement has been reached in which the desire of the Senate has almost wholly prevailed. Several gentlemen who have previously opposed such a measure have stated to me that they think this is very satisfactory, and some others who are not prepared to support it say that nearly all their objections are gone. It has the right of way.

I suppose under the rules of this body I have a right to take a Senator off the floor and submit the question of the consideration of the report. I do not propose to do that, because it is very clear that a majority of the Senate desires to have the matter which has been discussed to-day considered, but I give notice that whenever a convenient time comes, when by reason of the failure of a Senator to be ready to speak or for any other good cause the gentlemen who are in charge of the pending joint resolution wish to yield the floor of the Senate for a short time, I shall avail myself of the first opportunity to call up that measure, and I shall remain here vigilant and constant. I am staying in the Senate at an enormous sacrifice to myself for the purpose of having the conference report considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

 The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:
 A bill (H. R. 633) for the relief of George W. Dunning;
 A bill (H. R. 1213) granting an honorable discharge to W. G. Neeley, of Canon City, Colo.;
 A bill (H. R. 1778) for the relief of Wesley Van Over, late of Company C, One hundred and ninth New York Volunteers, and Company G, Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry;
 A bill (H. R. 3297) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William Henry Woodward;
 A bill (H. R. 3567) to remove the charge of desertion against Gardner Dodge;
 A bill (H. R. 4253) granting an honorable discharge to Thomas West;
 A bill (H. R. 6162) removing the charge of desertion from the record of Robert V. Hancock; and A bill (H. R. 6930) for relief of and to correct record of Jacob Covert.

THOMAS S. TEFFT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8299) granting an increase of pension to Thomas S. Tefft and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. HANSBROUGH, and Mr. MITCHELL were appointed.

HENRY K. OPP.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6411) granting an increase of pension to Henry K. Opp and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. HANSBROUGH, and Mr. MITCHELL were appointed.

GEORGE W. PALMER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill (S. 125) granting an increase of pension to George W. Palmer, which was, in line 7, to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twenty."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

NANCY BARGER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4451) granting a pension to Nancy Barger, which was, in line 4, to strike out "restore to" and insert "place on."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY, ETC.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 6148) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway, of the District of Columbia, and the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes, further insisting on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and asking for a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the further conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees; and Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.
The motion was agreed to.

PORT OF ENTRY AT SABINE PASS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3309) making Sabine Pass and Port Arthur, in the State of Texas, subports of entry and delivery, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That Sabine Pass, in the State of Texas, shall be, and is hereby, made a subport of entry and delivery in the customs district of Galveston, and a customs officer, or such other officers, shall be stationed at said subport, with authority to enter and clear vessels, receive duties, fees, and other moneys, and perform such other services and receive such compensation as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury the exigencies of commerce may require.

Also to amend the title so as to read: "A bill making Sabine Pass, in the State of Texas, a subport of entry and delivery."

Mr. FRYE. As originally reported from the Committee on Commerce, this provision applied to Sabine Pass alone. On motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], and with the consent of the Senator who reported the bill, Port Arthur was added to it. The opinion of the committee was against Port Arthur; the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury was against Port Arthur; and therefore I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives which strikes out Port Arthur.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is possibly at this time no actual necessity for Port Arthur being a subport of entry and delivery. The time will soon be, however, when it will in all probability be absolutely necessary. As I understand, the friends of Port Arthur are not disposed to throw any unnecessary obstacles in the way of Sabine Pass being made a port of entry and delivery, trusting that when Port Arthur is in a condition to be a subport that Congress will grant the right. I shall not, therefore, resist agreeing to the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], that the amendments made by the House of Representatives be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

BELT RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8541) to define the rights of purchasers of the Belt Railway, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same amended as follows: On page 2, beginning with line 20, strike out all to and including the word "void," on page 3, line 10, and in place thereof insert "Provided, That stock and bonds may be issued to such an amount and upon such terms as may be agreed upon by a majority vote of the stockholders of such company; And provided further, That the issue of such stock and bonds shall not in the aggregate exceed the amount necessary for effecting any such purchase, lease, or acquisition, and for the construction, reconstruction, and equipment of said Belt Railway, and shall in no case exceed the sum of $150,000 per mile of single track;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same amended as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted as section 4, insert:

"Sec. 3. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and required to station special policemen at such street railway crossings and intersections in the City of Washington as the said Commissioners may deem necessary, the expense of such service to be paid pro rata by the respective companies; every car shall be brought to a full stop immediately before making such crossing or intersection. Neglect or failure to pay for the service monthly or to stop any car, as herein provided for, shall subject the company to a fine of not to exceed $5 for every such neglect or failure, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction."

And that the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, and 8, and agree to the same amended as follows: Number the sections of the bill consecutively; and that the Senate agree to the same.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8148) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, of the District of Columbia, the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered from 1 to 4, inclusive; 6 to 9, inclusive; 11, 13, 16 to 18, inclusive, 20 to 24, inclusive, and 26, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter proposed to be inserted, after the word "lighting," in line 6, insert the words "and propelling;" and in the same line, after the word "cars," insert the words "and other machinery;" and at the end of said matter add the following: Provided however, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to permit street-railway companies using the underground electric system to construct conduits not exceeding 5 blocks in length, to connect their existing conduits for the purpose of conveying electric current to be used for street-railway purposes only;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same amended by inserting after the words "from the opening" the words "and grading;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same amended as follows: On page 3, line 7, strike out the words "unless the roadway of;" all of lines 8, 9, and 10; and in line 11 the words "between New York avenue and G street," and insert "the roadway shall be widened to a width of 45 feet, one-half at the expense of said company and one-half at the expense of any District of Columbia appropriation available for such work;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same amended as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out, on page 4, line 13, strike out all after the word "act" to the end of the section and insert the following: "or otherwise: Provided, That such stock and bonds shall be issued to such an amount and upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the majority stockholders of such company: And provided further, That the issue of such bonds and stock shall not in the aggregate exceed the amount necessary for effecting any such purchase, lease, or acquisition and for the construction, reconstruction, and equipment aforesaid, and the total outstanding bonds and stock shall in no event exceed the sum of $150,000 per mile of single track."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same amended as follows: In line 5 of the matter proposed to be inserted strike out the word "Company" and insert the words "of Washington;" and the Senate agree to the same.

MILITARY INFORMATION DIVISION.

Mr. ALLISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 251) to limit section 3 of "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1898 and 1899, and for other purposes," to report it with amendments. I ask unanimous consent for its consideration at this time. It will take but a few minutes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 7, after the words "section 3," to strike out "page 45;" in line 9, after the date "June 30," to strike out "1898, and;" and in line 2, on page 2, to strike out "American" and insert "United States;" so as to read:

That the prohibition of the purchase of "law books, books of reference, and periodicals for use of any Executive Department, or other Government establishment not under an Executive Department, at the seat of government," as set forth in section 3 of "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes," shall not apply to the provision "for contingent expenses of the military information division, Adjutant-General's Office, and of the military attachés at the United States embassies and legations abroad, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $3,610," as duly set forth in the act "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898," approved March 2, 1897, and in the act "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899," approved March 15, 1898.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the joint resolution, to insert:

And the limitation in section 192 of the Revised Statutes of $100 as the amount to be expended in any one year for newspapers for any Department shall not apply to the purchase of newspapers for military use by the military information division of the Adjutant-General's Office from the appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal years herein named.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, the title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution relating to the purchase of law books, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers for the military information division, Adjutant-General's Office."

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 20, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDER.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions and bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. R. 175. Joint resolution providing for the printing of additional copies of certain volumes of Decisions of the Department of the Interior Relating to Public Lands for sale and distribution;

S. 4783. An act providing for the public printing and binding and distribution of public documents, approved January 12, 1895;

S. 346. An act providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington;

S. 1114. An act for the establishment of a light and fog signal on or near Sabine Bank, Texas;

S. 1618. An act to authorize the President to place William T. Godwin on the retired list with the rank of first lieutenant;

S. 4741. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge over Tombigbee River, in the State of Mississippi;

S. 3414. An act to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference by the incorporation of the International American Bank; and

S. 4744. An act granting a pension to Mary E. Hatch.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 10280) to require the Brightwood Railway Company to abandon its overhead trolley on Kenyon street, between Seventh and Fourteenth streets; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the pending amendment of the District appropriation bill. I do this at the request of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GRout], who is unavoidably absent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the previous question and the yeas and nays have been ordered upon the amendment which the Clerk will report to the House.

The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

On page 20, after line 7, insert "toward the construction of foundation for the bridge across Rock Creek on the line of Massachusetts avenue extended, $25,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House recede and concur in the amendment which has been reported by the Clerk? As many as are in favor will, when their names are called, say "aye," and those opposed "no."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 101, nays 54, answered "present" 17, not voting 183; as follows:

On this question:

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas with Mr. SAYERS.

Mr. SPALDING. I should like to be recorded as "present."

Mr. GAINES. I desire to be recorded as "present."

Mr. MAHANY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Are members who come in after the roll call has been completed entitled to be counted among those that make up a quorum?

The SPEAKER. They are; and they have also the right to vote under the rule, if they choose to do so, upon their names being announced. On this question the yeas are 91, the nays 51—

Mr. MAHANY. No quorum.

The SPEAKER (continuing). Seventeen members report themselves as "present." Those whose names will be read have been noted as "present" by the Clerk.

The Clerk read the names of the following gentlemen:

Mr. MCINTIRE, Mr. GAINES, Mr. GIBSON, Mr. LESTER, Mr. SPALDING, Mr. ELLIS, Mr. SMITH of Illinois, Mr. ADAMSON, Mr. BLAND, Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois, Mr. CATCHINGS, Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota, Mr. RIDGELY, Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, Mr. MARSH, Mr. MORRIS.

A number of members previously recorded as "present" asked that their names be called, and thereupon voted.

Mr. GAINES. Has the gentleman from New York, Mr. BENNETT, voted?

The SPEAKER. He has not.

Mr. GAINES. I am paired with him. If I were not, I would have voted "no."

Mr. MAHANY (after a pause). Mr. Speaker, I do not like to interrupt the prolonged ciphering, etc., but I would like to know the total number of those voting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the result. On this question the yeas are 100, the nays 54—

Mr. MAHANY. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum has been noted. The 17 members who reported themselves "present," together with those that have been noted by the Clerk as "present"—

Mr. MAHANY. Most of the 16 have since voted, have they not, together with many of those who have just come in? Hence the total of those voting added to the decreased number of those marked "present" fails of a quorum, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. Sixteen were originally noted as "present," and of these 7 have since voted, leaving 9 as "present." These, together with the 155 voting, and the 17 who answered present, make 181; more than quorum. The motion is therefore agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I believe this has not concluded the consideration of the District bill. I call up the remaining amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this business has not yet been concluded, and the Clerk will report the remaining amendments in controversy between the two Houses.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is not this committee suspension day?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does that not take precedence—

The SPEAKER. Of a conference report?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know anything that takes precedence of a conference report, not even a motion to adjourn.

The Clerk will report the next amendment, if a separate vote be asked. The Chair will state that there are about twelve amendments remaining undisposed of, and would like to know if a separate vote is asked on the remaining amendments?

Mr. DOCKERY. If I understand it, Mr. Speaker, all of the amendments have been agreed to, or insisted upon, except one relating to telephone service and another relating to charities in the District.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the House has acted upon the amendments which have been selected by the chairman of the committee, but no action has been taken upon the remaining amendments.

But the matter, of course, is at the disposal of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman in charge of the bill is absent, and I did not keep close watch on the proceedings of Saturday. My recollection, however, is that all of the amendments are disposed of with the exception of the two to which I have referred.

The SPEAKER. It may be that all of the amendments were disposed of except the two upon which there was a contest.

Mr. DOCKERY. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the remaining amendments of the Senate and ask a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. GROUT, Mr. PITNEY, and Mr. DOCKERY.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I submit that this report was presented to the House and was read on Saturday, and has been published in the RECORD. I think it hardly necessary that it should be read again.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is correct, and a point of order was reserved against the report. The point of order referred to section 2 of the bill—

Mr. RICHARDSON. And on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa will state his point of order.

Mr. HEPBURN. The point of order is, Mr. Speaker, that the committee of conference had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter. The Senate amended the House bill by inserting what is now section 2 of the bill, which reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That the powers conferred in an act entitled "An act relative to the Rock Creek Railway Company, of the District of Columbia" (now the Capital Traction Company), approved March 1, 1895, relative to joint management, lease, purchase, or sale of connecting or intersecting lines, are hereby conferred upon the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company and all other street railway companies in the District of Columbia.

That was the Senate amendment disagreed to by the House. Now the conference committee propose to amend by striking out all after the words "are hereby," which are as follows: "conferred upon the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company and all other street railway companies in the District of Columbia," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "repealed." The purpose of the Senate amendment, Mr. Speaker, was to confer upon all street railways in the District of Columbia the same right that had been conferred upon the Capital Traction Company by an act entitled "An act relative to the Rock Creek Railway Company, of the District of Columbia," approved March 1, 1895.

Now, that was the purpose, and the only purpose of the Senate amendment. By striking out a portion of that and adding the word "repealed" an entirely different subject is ingrafted upon the bill, namely, the repealing of the grant previously made to the Traction Company. There is no semblance of similarity between the proposition of the Senate and the proposition of this committee, and I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this method of legislation, this evil habit of conference committees legislating upon entirely new subjects, going clearly beyond their jurisdiction, clearly beyond the subject committed to them, and committing the House, under such circumstances as usually obtain when conference reports are considered, ought to have a rebuke and ought to be stopped. This is, I think, the third time, certainly the second time, that this committee during this Congress have indulged in attempts to legislate in this way.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman, I want to say that the Committee on the District of Columbia does not deserve any lecture at his hands, or at the hands of any other gentleman for what appears here. The Senate, in its efforts to amend, or in its amendment to the Eckington Railroad bill, put upon the House bill the provision which he has read.

The SPEAKER. That is section 2.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; and that section authorized all the street railroads of the District of Columbia to combine and consolidate with other railroads in the District of Columbia. Now, our committee of conference, representing this House, simply undertook in our action to obey the will and instruction of the House of Representatives, because the House has twice by a ye-and-nay vote during this Congress refused to pass that amendment and insert that as a general provision in the street railroad legislation of the District of Columbia. We felt that we ought not to agree to this amendment of the Senate, for the reason that the House has twice, by a ye-and-nay vote this session, refused to give the street railroads of the District of Columbia that power; that is, to combine and purchase other adjoining and connecting roads.

Now, following that vote, acting upon the solemn instructions of the House, the House conferees said to the Senate conferees, "We can not agree to your proposition." They said, "Well, the Capital Traction Company, which is the Rock Creek Company, the charters being the same, having been merged a year or two ago, and the provision being in the Rock Creek Railway Company's charter that they may purchase connecting lines or lease them, all other roads in the District of Columbia ought to have the same right." We said, "The House has positively refused by two ye-and-nay votes to confer that power." Then they said, "No railroad ought to have it or all ought to have it." That is the equity of the situation, Mr. Speaker. The Capital Traction Company or the Rock Creek Company have rights that are not given to other street railroads under their charters in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. But the question here is not whether there ought to be that power.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am coming to that. I want to show that we are not deserving of any lecture from the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], because we simply obeyed the instructions of the House of Representatives; but the question is, Mr. Speaker, Have we transcended our authority? I do not think we have. The Senate having the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway charter before it, in the bill which the House of Representatives had passed, inserted an independent section; and I say that, having taken charge of the subject-matter, however obnoxious it might have been to the House rule, they having taken charge of it, having amended the House bill and sent it back to us, it is in our power to concur in that amendment with the amendment which the conferees have inserted.

I do not think the point of order of the gentleman from Iowa, therefore, is good. Now, I will read the amendment put upon this bill by the Senate, which they had a right to put on under their rules and to which we can not make a point of order, as the Speaker very well understands. The Senate having passed the amendment under their rules and made it a part of our bill, it is too late for us to except to that amendment as being obnoxious to our rules. But let us see what change they made in it. That Senate amendment is as follows:

That the powers conferred in an act entitled "An act relative to the Rock Creek Railway Company, of the District of Columbia" (now the Capital Traction Company), approved March 1, 1895, relative to joint management, lease, purchase, or sale of connecting or intersecting lines, are hereby conferred upon the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company and all other street railway companies in the District of Columbia.

Now, what we do to this amendment is to strike out the words—conferred upon the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company and all other street railway companies in the District of Columbia—and insert in lieu thereof the word—repealed.

They have given us jurisdiction of this subject-matter by their Senate amendment. They undertake to say that that power shall be conferred upon all street railroads. We simply say it shall be repealed.

Now, I say, Mr. Speaker, it is not obnoxious to the rule for us to amend the Senate amendment by substituting the word "repealed" for the words conferring the power which they undertook to confer, and which it was competent for them to give to all the street railroads of the District of Columbia. That is all there is in this matter. We have jurisdiction of the question by virtue of the Senate amendment which it was competent for them to make. We simply say, instead of giving this power, which becomes a subject-matter of legislation by virtue of the Senate amendment, instead of extending it to all the street railroads, we simply modify the Senate amendment by saying it is repealed. I submit in all deference that it is in order.

I may be pardoned for saying that I have favored the other mode of legislation; I favor the extension of this right to other roads; but the House has solemnly declared that they would not do it on two ye-and-nay votes. Now, I submit, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing transgressing the rule, and the point of order is not well taken. I will not amplify the discussion. The statement ought to be conclusive. The Senate has given us control of the subject-matter by their amendment, which it was competent for them to do; and all that we did was to modify it in the manner I have indicated. It seems to me that it is clearly within the rule to deal with the matter as we have done.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman think the conference committee has the right to introduce the subject of the repeal of the right of another whose right is not a subject-matter of the discussion in the disagreeing votes between the two Houses?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is the only point that can be made. They have undertaken to extend that power to all the street railroads in the District of Columbia. Now, the only question is whether we can cut that off from all railroads and whether it gives us such jurisdiction of the question as to make the amendment allowable by the conference committee.

The SPEAKER. The House may do it, but can the conference committee do it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, do I understand the Chair to intimate that the House might do that—concur in the Senate amendment with that modification? I think the conference committee can do anything that the House can do. Under those circumstances, I think the proposition would not be obnoxious to our rules, and it would not be obnoxious for the conference committee to do the same thing. It seems to me that they have given us jurisdiction of the matter, and that we can repeal a statute as well as extend it.

Mr. DINGLEY. But I suggest to my friend that the conferees have jurisdiction only of the disagreeing votes on a matter between the two Houses.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is correct.

Mr. DINGLEY. There was no disagreement between the two Houses in regard to repealing the law which the conference amendment repeals.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But the disagreement was as to extending it to all street railroads. They introduced the subject-matter by saying it should be extended and cover all street railroads in the District. I say I have favored that legislation. I do not object to it, but the House has solemnly refused to do so twice, and the result was that the District Committee could not consent to it, and when they sent it here with an amendment which they had introduced, we had the right to make this modification, and it is not obnoxious to the point of order or the rule. I am ready for the Chair to decide it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. DINGLEY. I did not intend to argue the question. It struck me from the explanation of the action of the conferees that they had gone outside of their jurisdiction. The simple fact that the Senate put an amendment on a bill that a certain right of any kind should be conferred upon a certain company would not authorize the conferees to introduce a provision in the bill to repeal the right of another party.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It occurred to me that when the Senate adopted their amendment, they took control and jurisdiction by their amendment of this statute, which confers upon the Rock Creek road the power to consolidate with and purchase and own or lease connecting or intersecting lines; having put that into their bill, and made that a part of the text of the bill, as an amendment to the House bill, it was competent to agree to their amendment, modifying the amendment in the manner I have indicated, by repealing this statute in toto or by any modification of it.

Mr. DINGLEY. It was another subject-matter. It is a repeal of a statute applying to another road which was not before the conferees.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It does not apply to another subject-matter.

Mr. DINGLEY. The subject-matter is this other road.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Another road had the right to buy, purchase, or lease other lines.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let me ask the gentleman what was the disagreement between the two Houses? What was the disagreeing vote that was here sent to the conference committee?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was a Senate amendment, which put in issue the right of connecting and intersecting street railroads to lease, purchase, and operate other lines in the District of Columbia. That is the subject-matter. Now, that being the subject-matter, the whole question was whether it should be given to all or none; and in that we take away and repeal the right.

Mr. DINGLEY. The amendment offered to this bill was to confer power on the Eckington road. There was no difference in the bill between the Eckington and Traction companies.

Mr. RICHARDSON. None whatever.

Mr. DINGLEY. Therefore the subject-matter was not in the jurisdiction of the committee of conference.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Speaker, I think, understands it. I do not want to multiply words about it; but it seems to me, the subject-matter being put before us by the Senate, we have a right to modify that subject-matter. Of course if we can not do it, that is the end of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the argument of the gentleman from Tennessee is a forcible presentation of the matter, and yet, after all, if we were to adopt the idea that when once the subject-matter was introduced, that was to control and not the differences between the two bodies, we should be likely to enlarge the powers of the committee of conference rather beyond what was intended by the House. To the Chair it seems the point of order is well taken, and therefore the Chair sustains it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 5 and concur in the same. I wish in that connection to correct a statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON]—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will correct me, if I was in error.

Mr. NEWLANDS. There have been three votes on this subject, one favorable to the acquisition of the rights by all the roads of the District and two unfavorable to it. It seems to me that this right should be enjoyed by all companies.

There are about thirteen street railway companies in the District of Columbia, only three of which pay. Some are almost in a state of bankruptcy, and some that are just able to pay their operating expenses. The advantage of permitting the acquisition of intersecting lines by the stronger lines is perfectly apparent. It will improve the service, it will increase the number of free transfers and extend the ride for one fare, and I think the sentiment in the District is in favor of this power, and that it should be enjoyed by all the railroad companies. I ask, therefore, that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Nevada yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. CANNON. I understand the present situation is that if a man gets on the Capital Traction line he can ride anywhere over that line for a 5-cent fare?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. If he gets on the F street or Metropolitan line, he can ride anywhere on that line for a 5-cent fare?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. If he gets on any one of the other ten or eleven separate railroads, it will cost him a 5-cent fare on each one?

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is right.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if I understand the amendment of the Senate, it is to allow any or all of the roads of the District to become consolidated, and if all of them were consolidated, then a 5-cent fare would take a passenger anywhere over their lines. Is that correct?

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. I understand, further, that in the charters of these railroads there is retained in Congress the power to regulate the fares?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Then I want to ask the gentleman what conceivable objection to the propriety of universal consolidation, in view of these facts, can be made?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I can imagine none.

Mr. CANNON. I am speaking on the part of members of Congress whose carriages are the street railway cars, and all the great mass of people who have to resort to them for transit.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is a soft snap that we all want. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEWLANDS. This power was exercised by the Rock Creek Company and the Washington and Georgetown Company, and resulted in giving the public a trackage of 13 additional miles over which they could ride for one fare. I think the effect of this amendment will be to have three or four great lines in the District, instead of, as at present, ten or eleven or twelve, and that will enable these bankrupt lines to tie onto the stronger lines, thus giving better service upon them, for it will secure the financial aid of stronger lines and give the public a longer ride for one fare. This simply gives any road the right to acquire by purchase or lease a connecting line.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman from Nevada yield to me to make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask the Chair the status of this question. The gentleman from Nevada has moved to concur in the Senate amendment. I submit to the Chair the question as to whether the matter is now open so he can make such a motion. If so, I have no objection, for I favor the motion. The gentleman from Wisconsin having presented a conference report, the gentleman from Iowa having made a point of order, and the Chair having sustained the point of order, is the conference report now open, and is it in order for the gentleman from Nevada to move to concur in the Senate amendment at this stage of the proceedings? If the Chair is right, this matter will have to go back into conference, and it may be the conferees will present some other report.

Mr. BABCOCK. Not if the House concurs.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; not if the House concurs.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I want to reserve every parliamentary right under the rules against this proposition.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We have not got to that point yet. The question is whether the motion is before the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I insist that it is not before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that according to the action of the House hitherto the sustaining of a point of order on a conference report has been regarded as equivalent to a rejection of the report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then a motion to concur would be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not like to establish a rule of action in a case of this kind without giving an opportunity for discussion. If any gentleman desires to say anything contrary to the impression which the Chair has just stated, the Chair will be very glad to hear him.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am perfectly willing to vote on the motion. I only wanted to know the status.

The SPEAKER. The present impression of the Chair is that the sustaining of a point of order on a conference report is equivalent to its rejection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Very good. Then a motion to concur, I take it, would be in order.

The SPEAKER. The present view of the Chair, contrary to his first impression, is that in the present condition of things the motion would be in order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Do I understand the Chair to rule that motion is in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so rules.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] whether the requirement as to transfers is a requirement of law or simply a custom of the companies when they consolidate?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The charter of every company provides that it shall give a ride over any or all of its lines for one fare.

Mr. GAINES. I wish to inquire whether the 5-cent fare now charged is fixed by charter or is simply a competitive rate?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The rate of 5 cents for a single fare or six tickets for a quarter is fixed in the charter of each of the railroads of the District.

Mr. GAINES. Then it is the rate by law.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say one word as to the power now in question. This power has heretofore been possessed only by the Capital Traction Company. The other railroad companies of the District have objected to this company having this power exclusively. They felt that the Traction Company would contest the exercise of the power by them. The Capital Traction Company, however, has determined to pursue no "dog-in-the-manger" policy, but to acquiesce entirely in the view that this power should be given to all other railroad companies.

The Senate was of that opinion, and so recorded their opinion in this amendment. But our conferees, when they met the Senate conferees, refused to submit the Senate amendment to this House upon the ground that the House had already acted on the question. Then the Senate conferees said, "Well, if this power is to be exercised by one, it ought to be exercised by all; and if it can not be exercised by all, it should be exercised by none."

Mr. RIDGELY. I should like to know whether the time for the change in the motive power has been changed at all by the Senate?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not know. You will have to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] in regard to that.

Mr. RIDGELY. Can the gentleman in charge of the bill answer?

Mr. BABCOCK. I will when I get the floor. Is the gentleman from Nevada through?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not ask the gentleman to yield to me. I desire to claim the floor. I wish to make a statement in regard to this matter. I thought the gentleman was through.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BABCOCK. I wish the House to understand clearly the facts in connection with this question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would like to know who controls the time.

Mr. BABCOCK. I presented the conference report, and, as I understand, was recognized in my own right.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand that I, having made the pending motion, am entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin, having general charge of the bill, and there being other matters concerned, would retain charge of them, although another gentleman might have the support of the House upon a particular point.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Do I understand—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has control.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this proposition has been voted on twice by the House. I submitted this amendment in the House at the request of gentlemen on the floor, and supported it. It was defeated—defeated twice. Under the circumstances the conferees did not feel justified in agreeing to the same amendment as a Senate proposition, after it had been twice rejected in the House. We felt ourselves instructed by the action of the House. Since that time I have given this amendment some consideration.

The House, before voting on this question, should understand fully that it grants powers which have never before, I believe, been granted or exercised in any city or State of this Union.

In the State of Wisconsin, in which I reside, the law expressly forbids, as is the case also in New York, one corporation from owning any of the stock in another corporation. Congress, however, has the right at any time to permit any railroad corporation in the District of Columbia to acquire the rights held by or belonging to any other corporation. But this amendment opens up the field, without authority from Congress, over any route or any road in the District of Columbia, so that such roads can acquire by consolidation or otherwise or buy in any other line or all lines in the District of Columbia.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is looked on by a great many members as vicious and dangerous legislation. The House should understand the matter thoroughly before they vote upon it. It is held to be very dangerous. As I said, I do not think it has been granted heretofore in but one single case, and that was in reference to the railroads in the city of Kansas City; and a gentleman—then the mayor of Kansas City—who is now a member of this House and of the committee before whom this matter came for consideration will make a statement to the House of the result of the operation of such legislation in that city.

I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. HEPBURN. Before the chairman of the committee takes his seat, I desire to ask a question with his consent. What possible danger do you apprehend can result in view of the fact that Congress has wisely adopted legislation on the subject to which the gentleman has referred, and has also reserved, in every charter, the right to amend, alter, or repeal any act? In view of that restriction, where is the danger to which he refers?

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, there is no member of the House of Representatives who understands better than the gentleman from Iowa who interrogates me that while Congress has the right in many of these cases—

Mr. HEPBURN (interrupting). In all of them.

Mr. BABCOCK. Very well; in all of them—the right to repeal or to amend. While it has the right to control in many things in the District of Columbia, still I ask the gentleman if Congress has been able to control even telephone rates or many other matters of legislation in the District?

Mr. DOCKERY. And gas rates.

Mr. BABCOCK (continuing). And when you make a broad and sweeping provision that Congress reserves to itself the right to amend or repeal, it does not always follow that though it has the right it may have the power to exercise that repeal. This House may take one view of the question, and the body at the other end of the Capitol may take an entirely opposite view. And I repeat, that no member has had more experience than the gentleman from Iowa on that point.

Mr. CANNON. But in the meantime I wish to ask my friend in charge of this matter whether or not there is to be a consolidation of these lines if the legislation is not had?

Mr. BABCOCK. That, I will state to the gentleman, has nothing to do with the consolidation. This bill provides for the consolidation now of three lines, the Belt Line, the Eckington and Soldiers' Home line, and the Maryland and Washington line.

Mr. CANNON. Then why should not the Metropolitan line or the Capital Traction Company have authority to consolidate with the four lines proposed to be consolidated under this bill? What harm to the public can possibly be accomplished—I am speaking now of a general principle allowing consolidation—what harm can come to the public service if they get a greater mileage over these lines for the same fare or for a less fare?

Mr. BABCOCK. I can tell the gentleman in a moment. In a city, in my own State, for instance—a consolidation of the street railroads has resulted in a great capitalization. In Philadelphia you take a street car at a 5-cent fare, and if you transfer there is 3 cents additional; that is 8 cents for the continuous ride, and yet it is all owned by one line.

Mr. CANNON. But I am not speaking of Philadelphia. I am speaking of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BABCOCK. If the gentleman will not interrupt me, I am coming to the question of railroad service in Washington. The gentleman must admit that the street-car service here is perhaps the best of any city in the United States. There is certainly no other city that surpasses it, if it has its equal.

Mr. CANNON. As it is now.

Mr. HEBURN. The two lines.

Mr. BABCOCK. This bill provides for the equipment of two others in the same manner. I believe circumstances, however, unless we are careful in our legislation, will put it in the hands of stockjobbers to come to Washington and secure control of all of the lines here by a process of inflation, which has often been adopted at other places, whereby the public must suffer in consequence. Now, if the companies exercise arbitrary control and the public complains, we are told you must go to Congress. The legislation here has given an elegant service. That is beyond question.

Mr. CANNON. But the gentleman does not reach the point which I have in mind. If you will allow me, there are street railways and street railways. In a great city where there is a great deal of travel, as in this city, there is no excuse for a failure to have good street railways and efficient service properly rendered to the public. And that may extend to the weaker lines as well as to the stronger lines, as in the case of the Capital Traction Company.

The consolidation of the Chevy Chase line with the Capital Traction line has given a better service and a cheaper service. Now, whether stockjobbers or others have got hurt in that matter I do not know, and for the purposes of legislation I do not care. Whereas I paid 10 cents and waited a long time at U street to get to Chevy Chase, now I pay 5 cents to go to Chevy Chase and have better accommodations. It is to the interest of the public, stockjobber or no stockjobber, to get a good service and a frequent service, and it is to the interest of the company, because that increases the number of fares that they catch. Now, one other fact. The gentleman says that it is impossible for Congress to legislate.

Mr. BABCOCK. Not impossible.

Mr. CANNON. Well, impracticable. I have not found it so. In some instances it is hard to get legislation. Sometimes I have thought it ought to be had, and later I have come to the conclusion that I was mistaken. It must pass the House; it must pass the Senate; it must be approved by the President. Now, take the magnificent service that we have on the Capital Traction line and on the Metropolitan line. Why, it was on a general appropriation bill, absolutely written in black and white, that if they failed to substitute the cable or electricity for the old horse-car service within a given time their franchises should be forfeited. They kicked, but nevertheless they put it on, and the Capital Traction Company, or its predecessor, the old company, came in on time. The Metropolitan Company did not, but they tried and kept on trying and experimenting, and had to have an extension or two, but the final result is that great service. Now, I never in my life have been anxious to agonize about stockjobbers, nor has my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK]. They are a class of people who are pretty well able to take care of themselves. They know what a thing is worth when they buy it. But I am anxious to see these other lines, upon which there is not an effective service to-day, have authority to consolidate with the stronger lines, by which we can have a better service and a greater mileage for one fare. It seems to me this gives that power.

Mr. BABCOCK. Congress is doing that in this bill on three of the lines.

Mr. CANNON. If it is a good thing for three of the lines, why is it not good for all the lines?

Mr. BABCOCK. Not necessarily.

Mr. CANNON. I wish every street railway in Washington were in one line, and that you could get onto any one of the lines and ride over any other connecting line for a 5-cent fare. As to whether it would be profitable or not, the people who put their money in to build it would look out for the matter of profit. They must give good service if they get profit, and if they fail to do it, there is ever present the common council, the Congress of the United States, to devise such means as will force them to do it, or, in case of their failure, to give some other person a chance.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. My colleague on the committee [Mr. COWHERD] is opposed to this, and I desire that he be heard first.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I feel very earnestly about this measure. I think it is as unfortunate a measure as was ever proposed to this House, and I want to ask the special attention of the gentleman from Illinois. He has asked what reason could be given for opposing this measure. Let me give him one that he himself has given in the question he presented to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

He asked that gentleman whether it was not a fact that you could ride for one fare over the entire system of the Capital Traction Company, and whether it was not a fact that you had to pay more than one fare on those smaller systems, and then he followed that with the suggestion that Congress had reserved the right to regulate the fares over all the systems. Now, mark it, notwithstanding the fact that Congress has reserved the right to regulate fares over these systems and to compel transfers, Congress does not do it, but when they consolidate they give transfers. Why did not Congress regulate these transfers all over the District? Why did they not compel all these smaller roads to transfer and make one continuous fare—

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend allow me?

Mr. COWHERD. Let me finish that sentence—one continuous fare over any of these roads, large or small.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend allow me right there?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I ask him for information, Could the Capital Traction Company charge two fares, under the law, under their charter?

Mr. COWHERD. I understand they could not; but could not Congress compel the Capital Traction Company and the Rock Creek Company to transfer for one fare before they consolidated?

Mr. CANNON. Let me answer right there, because my friend and I both want to find fault or find good, according to the merits. Here are ten or eleven weak lines, most of them disreputable lines, so far as the service is concerned. Now, the compulsion to prorate with those lines and transfer on them is no advantage to the great public, because walking is better than riding on those lines. But what we want is to pursue that policy that will give the good service on all the lines. Merely compelling transfers will not do it, unless you follow the transfer with an appropriation of Congress to chip in the money to build a good line where these little horse lines run. But if you pursue the other policy, we shall get the good lines, because the stronger company will improve the service.

Mr. COWHERD. If the gentleman will pardon me, let me explain for a moment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman from Illinois on the question which he propounded did not cover the point that I was making. I say that notwithstanding the reservation of its rights to regulate this matter, Congress did not regulate them until the roads came to Congress asking for favors. Every man familiar with this kind of legislation knows that bodies of this kind do not regulate such affairs until they either become such nuisances that they are a stench in the nostrils of the public, or until they come to the body, municipal, Congressional, or legislative, and ask some favor; and then parties opposing the favor bring attention to the fact that the matter needs regulation. Congress can regulate the matter of transfer to these weaker roads, but does not do it.

But let me suggest another thing. New districts are building up from day to day on the edge of your city, as they are in the suburbs of every city in the United States. How do these suburbs get transportation? They do not get it by the great roads building out to them. They get it by weaker roads, who start by building up a poor system, a horse road—running that for a while, and gradually improving it; and then, when the suburb builds up so that it amounts to something to them, the great roads take it, extend it, and control it. If you provide a system whereby every street railroad may be consolidated into one corporation, I say you will shut off extension from every suburb of Washington; and the only way you will get an extension to these sparsely settled districts is that the District will cry loudly and obstreperously until you are forced to compel the consolidated road to build an extension.

And again, as suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], if you give the right to consolidate to these roads, they would become one big company. Like all other roads, where they have been consolidated and monopoly has been substituted for competition, they would become indifferent and it would be to the detriment of the service. Instead of running their cars every two or three minutes, they would run them five or six minutes apart. Instead of providing good cars, they would use the old ones just as long as they could be made to run. Instead of heating them properly, they would use the poorest and cheapest appliances. So long as you give to them a reasonable competition, you have got absolutely the best means in the world of securing good service. You have competing companies that are adopting as rapidly as possible every improvement known to science in the matter of transportation, because the improvements of their rivals compel them to, and the minute you consolidate them into one company, that moment it becomes simply a question of not adopting anything new until forced to do so, either by law or until the demands of the people can reach the ear of Congress.

Now, then, I want to say this: I am not opposing consolidation. I should like to see the roads consolidated into two or three strong companies. So long as you have two or three strong companies able to make the extensions, with all the improvements, then you have got the best means of transportation. If they want consolidation, all they have got to do is to come to Congress and get it. And no reasonable bill of that nature is likely to meet with any opposition here.

But if this motion prevails, you permit them to consolidate at their own pleasure, upon their own terms, without coming to Congress, without your attention being called to their defects or shortcomings, without Congress imposing upon the roads the conditions necessary to protect the interests of the people, and the result will be the road will give just such service as will be most remunerative to the road. This proposition has twice been voted down in this House. It was voted down when the House was full; it was voted down when the members were present, and I hope this small attendance here to-day will not seek to try to reverse the will of the majority of the members of the House.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman says that Congress has not always exercised the power to regulate the street-railroad business in the past, and he indicated that it will not be exercised in the future, and he refers to the fact that Congress has not hitherto compelled free transfers between connecting lines that were not consolidated. Now, I have to say in reference to that that it has been utterly impossible for the weaker companies to submit to a free transfer, and the pressure has come from them.

They have appeared before committees of Congress and shown Congress that they were unable to stand the free transfer, because that would involve the accepting of a 2½-cent fare instead of a 5-cent fare, whereas if the weak lines were absorbed by the strong lines, one fare for 5 cents would carry the passengers over both lines. Now, I say that this power of regulation has been exercised fully and amply by Congress. We must not judge of the regulations of Congress by the conditions which have prevailed elsewhere in the great municipalities of the country where corruption has prevailed and where extraordinary privileges have been granted and where the power of regulation is not justly exercised.

We all know that Congress has exercised full powers of supervision over these railroads. My experience here runs back to a period of three or four years prior to my entry into Congress, and I know whereof I speak. All the railroads were horse railroads. Everyone of them has been driven by whip and spur of Congress into rapid transit. Take the Capital Traction Company. It has been subject to three separate capitalizations. One for a horse railroad; one which made it an underground cable road, involving a large expense, and finally it was driven into an additional capitalization for an underground electric system.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. COWHERD. Is not it a fact that Washington was the last city of anything like cities of its size to abandon the horse cars?

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is true, but Congress took the matter in hand and drove them into another system.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman from Nevada will permit me, is not the reason of that this: That Congress forbade the use of the overhead electric trolley, and the underground electric system had not been invented, and that caused the delay? In other words, Congress had refused to permit the use of the overhead trolley, as was in use in other cities, or else a change would have been made very much earlier?

Mr. COWHERD. The cable was in use for several years before the overhead trolley was a success.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; but the cable system was so expensive as to make it almost impossible for small roads to put it in use. The cable system here in Washington cost $200,000 per mile. What suburban road or line on any but the important business streets could stand such an expense as that? Congress refused to allow the overhead trolley to be introduced, so the horse cars had to remain. The Metropolitan Company was driven, as I say, by whip and spur, and you recollect the costly expenditure they were put to for a storage system; it cost that company $500,000—a total loss. Did Congress show any mercy after that expenditure, absolutely lost?

No; as soon as it was found to be a failure it drove them into the underground system, and the result is that to-day the Metropolitan stock, which stood as a horse railroad at $150 a share, owing to the large bonded indebtedness incurred in putting in the underground system, stands to-day at $120 a share; and yet the Metropolitan Railroad Company is regarded as the most complete railroad in the country, and probably in the world, and will be pointed out as one of the most successful in its financial results. Congress has always exercised careful and diligent supervision over these railroads. The fare, which was once 5 cents, has been reduced so that now six tickets can be purchased for a quarter. In the matter of taxation, it has imposed a tax of 4 per cent on the gross revenue, not on the net revenue, and it has imposed that in addition to the tax on the realty.

At this session the tax has been increased. I have no doubt, if conditions warrant it, the tax will be increased in the future, and if conditions warrant it, the fare will be reduced. Congress, by its power of regulation of the service, methods of transportation, fare to be paid, and taxes to be paid, has absolute control over the life and death of these corporations. It does not do to cite the conditions of New York, or Kansas City, or St. Louis. We have the entire control and regulation of these roads, and I am sure that every man within the sound of my voice will realize that Congress acts honestly and with due regard to the rights of the public and the public service. I say this power ought to be exercised. The power of absorption by the stronger of the weaker lines, unable to support themselves, is a mercy to the owners of the weaker companies and is a convenience to the public.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad the gentleman from Wisconsin, the chairman of the committee, has called attention to the fact that on two former occasions the House by decisive votes has rejected this proposition. I suppose, however, that it was before the war broke out. Now it is proposed by the amendment of the Senate that the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railroad Company and all other street railway companies in the District, as I understand it—and if I do not state it correctly, I hope the gentleman will correct me—"shall have the power to lease or purchase connecting or intersecting lines." That is, if I understand the proposition, power is granted to consolidate all street railway lines in the District of Columbia under one management. That proposition is urged and supported by the plausible argument of one fare that will transport the citizen over the entire system for 5 cents.

Now, as far as I am concerned, I would oppose this bill if I had the guaranty of this monopoly that is to be created to transport our citizens at 1 cent for all time. I am opposed to it simply because it strikes down, it paralyzes, it destroys, it overthrows, it stifles that principle of competition which, in my judgment, is essential to the proper success of both private and public affairs. But the gentleman from Washington City says that Congress has the power to regulate the company. I admit it, Mr. Speaker. It is provided in every charter that Congress shall have the power to alter, amend, or repeal it. I understand that to be the fact.

But are not gentlemen familiar with the history of Congress in respect, for instance, to the monopoly enjoyed by the Washington Gaslight Company? We have the power under the charter of that company to alter or amend it and to modify rates. After a continuous and persistent controversy lasting in this body and the other for several years, Congress finally secured, as it thought, a reduction of the rates paid to the gas company; but if the complaints of many citizens are well founded—and in the absence of investigation I do not assert that they are—the reduction of rates made under that law has been met by an inferior quality of gas furnished by the company. I do not assert that that is true, but I know that a great many good citizens make the charge.

A MEMBER. It is true.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then, I know that we had the right to alter, amend, repeal, or modify the rates paid to the United States Electric Light Company, of this city; yet we stood here for long years under the shadow of that monopoly without the power to secure a reduction of rates paid to that corporation, until finally the Potomac Electric Light Company, under a charter from the State of West Virginia, entered the sacred precincts of the District of Columbia to compete with the United States Electric Light Company. And, sir, no sooner had the shadow of competition thrown itself across the pathway of the United States Electric Light monopoly than the courts were appealed to and injunctions were employed, and day in and day out, month after month, the United States Electric Light Company, by all the powers that it could invoke in the courts, sought to arrest the progress of the Potomac Electric Light Company and to destroy it as a competitor in the District of Columbia. But finally, thanks to the courts, the Potomac Electric Light Company secured a firm footing in this District. When that came to pass, and then only—after competition had entered this District—Congress was able to secure a reduction of the rates previously paid to the electric light company. We now enjoy reasonable rates for that service.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that anyone can claim that this is a war measure. I do not think it will be urged that the passage of this proposition is necessary to maintain the supremacy of our Army or Navy. This is one proposition at least since the declaration of war which I am glad to know does not seem to be associated with the war and which no gentleman can insist is necessary to maintain the welfare and safety of the Republic. Therefore I can appeal to both sides, in that spirit which obtained prior to the declaration of war, for a dispassionate consideration of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, what is this proposition advocated by the gentleman from Nevada—from Nevada—from Nevada—accompanied with a motion to concur? What does it accomplish? It commits this great street-car system to the control of the octopus authorized by the bill; and yet that gentleman represents the splendid little State beyond the Rockies, where competition rules, where the vigorous, self-reliant manhood of the gallant people he represents asks in no court, in no forum, in no legislative body, for the powers of monopoly. I think I stand here to-day more the representative of the taxpayers of this District than does the gentleman from Nevada. I am sure that I, rather than the gentleman from Nevada and other gentlemen who insist upon concurrence, stand for their interests.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that in my judgment this bill is in harmony with too much of the legislation that passes this House, legislation obviously intended to destroy competition. I believe in good, wholesome, sound competition. I believe in it in respect to street-car service. We have at this national capital, as some gentlemen tell us, the best street-car service in the United States, at least none superior to it. We have reasonable rates; we have transfer advantages. But what shall we have if we build up the monopoly proposed by this bill, when that monopoly comes to Congress, as it will in due time, asking for additional authority, asking for power to increase its capital stock, asking for additional power to issue bonds? Why, sir, Congress then, judging by the past, will give them the privileges they ask.

I desire to thank the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], the chairman of this committee, for having brought this dangerous proposition to the attention of the House. He is entitled to the thanks of gentlemen on both sides of the aisle and to the thanks of the people of the District of Columbia.

Now, then, if any gentleman desires to speak, I will yield to him.

Mr. SIMPSON. One question before the gentleman takes his seat. I am informed by gentlemen who advocate this measure that when this consolidation comes about we shall get transfers all over the different street-car lines without paying any additional fare. What does the gentleman say about that?

Mr. DOCKERY. I stated at the outset—

Mr. SIMPSON. I was not in when the gentleman began his speech.

Mr. DOCKERY. Why, Mr. Speaker, I stated at the very outset of my remarks that I would not create this monopoly if the street railway fares were reduced to 1 cent for all time to come and suitable guaranties were given that they should not exceed that sum.

Mr. COWHERD. But, if my colleague will allow me the suggestion, these street railway transfers could be secured by passing a bill just as easy as you can pass this proposition in Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not understand that the charter of the railroads provide that they may charge such rates as they please to the public. The gentleman knows that in each case the charter provides that six tickets shall be sold for a quarter, and that provision is not modified, changed, or amended in any way by the pending bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I so understand.

Mr. RICHARDSON (continuing). Then the consolidation of all the lines inside of the District of Columbia, where the charters require that six tickets shall be sold for a quarter, would not impair that provision, and hence it would be impossible to escape the conclusion suggested by the inquiry of the gentleman from Kansas—that is, that on all lines in the District of Columbia six tickets would sell for a quarter unless Congress expressly authorized such roads to charge more than the present rate.

Mr. SIMPSON. But my inquiry was as to whether the tickets of any one of these roads would carry you over any other part of the line—that is to say, whether there would be a system of transfers?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly, unless Congress permitted some other legislation which is not now authorized by law.

Mr. COWHERD. Does not the gentleman know that if there should be a universal consolidation of the street railways Congress would immediately pass some kind of legislation that would not permit an individual to travel over all of the lines on transfer tickets? Because if it did not make some such kind of provision, a man could get on one of the street cars of a railway line in the morning and by working a system of transfers could ride all day long over all the street railways in the District.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It would be hardly possible to conceive such a thing, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think anybody, unless it was a crazy man, would do anything of the kind. No reasonable gentleman, certainly, would undertake such a thing. Perhaps a man "with wheels" might.

Mr. COWHERD. But the gentleman must remember that in most cases some minutes will necessarily intervene between transfers over the different lines. In my own city, before we had a properly regulated system of street-car transfers, it was not an uncommon thing for people to get transfers to the market house, go into the market and do their marketing, and then use the transfers to ride back to their homes.

Now, it is just as easy to regulate the transfers by law as to allow the consolidation of the roads as is proposed here.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But my argument, if the gentleman will permit me, was for the purpose of showing that the corporations could not charge a higher rate than they are now permitted by law to charge. In other words, there is no change in the rate fixed by law; and unless some future Congress shall give them the right to charge more than they do now, the consolidation would not affect the public, because they would still get the six tickets for a quarter, and could ride over any line in the city on one of these tickets. That is all there is of it.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will permit me, the object of competition is to get cheaper service to the people.

Mr. COWHERD. And better service.

Mr. CANNON. And better service. Now, if the effect of a law such as this is not to create competition, wherein will the public be benefited by it? Where does the question of competition come in if you allow this consolidation; and where is the danger of this great "octopus" of which we have heard something to-day?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The danger, if the gentleman will permit me, is in the attempt of some future Congress to give them additional powers over rates in the District.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I have no fear of any future Congress giving any such power.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then there is no danger.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, a word to the gentleman from Illinois right here, if I can have his attention for a moment.

Mr. CANNON. I am listening, and always listen to the gentleman from Wisconsin with pleasure.

Mr. BABCOCK. The point the gentleman has suggested here, in my judgment, does not reach the merits of the question at all.

Mr. CANNON. Then I would like to see what it is.

Mr. BABCOCK. Congress has always been jealous of its rights granting charters as far as the authority to issue stocks and bonds is concerned. In these bills that are before the House it has been restricted to a limit of $150,000 a mile for the total capitalization of the road.

Mr. CANNON. And that is not changed by this legislation?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, it is entirely changed; and there is just the main point in the discussion. Every street-car line can issue all the stocks it desires if you adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman allow me just there a correction?

Mr. BABCOCK. Not now.

The Capital Traction Company when it was swallowed up by a suburban line issued stock and bonds to the amount of $360,000 per mile, and one of the managers of the company told me that, notwithstanding that issue of stock, it was put in at $275 a share.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois asks the question about capitalization and the issue of stocks and bonds. I say that it makes a great deal of difference to the public. It has been asked what difference it makes. I shall undertake to show you. You lose sight entirely of the merits of the question of capitalization. Here is a road capitalized at over $360,000 a mile, single track, instead of $150,000 per mile, single track, as originally contemplated. They must earn their dividends on the $360,000 a mile, when a dividend on $150,000 a mile is all they are entitled to.

Mr. CANNON. Must they not earn it by charging at the rate of six tickets for a quarter?

Mr. BABCOCK. But you might have eight or ten tickets for a quarter.

Mr. MOODY. You might reduce the fare to 3 cents.

Mr. BABCOCK. You do away with all the legislation by which you have heretofore so jealously guarded their power to issue stocks and bonds.

Mr. DOCKERY. I did not know that my prophecy had already been accomplished in this bill when I said a moment ago that this law would be followed by a demand for increased capitalization and an authorization to increase the bond issue.

Mr. BABCOCK. This accomplishes it.

Mr. DOCKERY. It seems, according to the chairman of the committee, that these results are accomplished here.

Mr. CANNON. But you are not afraid that the people will not get six tickets for a quarter after this legislation. You are not afraid that they will have to pay more. You are not afraid but what they can ride more miles for the same money. All you fear is that under this legislation the stock jobbers might be swindled.

Mr. BABCOCK. The committee of which I have the honor to be chairman has not reported a railroad bill on this floor which has not been jumped on as to the provision for stocks and bonds. Such a bill, before it can be brought onto the floor of this House, has to be carefully prepared in its provisions. They must go to the Supreme Court for authority to issue stocks and bonds, or else the bill will be defeated here on the floor. Now, if you want to go back on the record of Congress as made, if you want to change the entire policy of Congress, then adopt this amendment, which confers the power to issue stock in any amount that the company sees fit.

Mr. HILL. That is not so.

Mr. KELLEY. Is there not some danger of having to pay more than 5 cents fare? Is it not true that the Supreme Court of the United States has held, in the Nebraska freight-rate case, that a corporation has a right to charge such rates as shall give it dividends upon all its capital stock, no matter what the capitalization may be? And if this bill gives authority to recapitalize the road at $400,000 per mile, or at ten hundred thousand dollars per mile, then I say that, from the rulings of the Supreme Court, there is danger of paying more than 5 cents fare, and it looks as if this was for the purpose of bringing about that result.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to correct one statement.

Mr. DOCKERY. I believe I have the floor. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Five minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield to the gentleman from Nevada five minutes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to correct one statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] as to the capitalization of the Capital Traction Company being $400,000 a mile. It is a little over $300,000 a mile. Now, what are the facts with reference to the capitalization of that road? It has gone through three periods of capitalization—first, the horse railroad system, then the cable system, which cost $200,000 a mile, and then the underground electric system, which cost from one hundred to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars a mile when put in entirely new, but did not cost as much in the case of this railroad. You must recollect that these railroads have to keep up with the times and have oftentimes to pass through three or four periods of capitalization.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman state that all of the capitalizations of these roads have been only upon the actual value of the roads or the actual outlay and not upon watered stock?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state now the facts with reference to the consolidation of those roads. I myself was interested in the Rock Creek Railway Company, which was a suburban road connecting Chevy Chase with Washington. We got the right to build a railroad from the corner of Seventh and U streets out to Chevy Chase. Our franchise imposed upon us the obligation to build the bridges across Rock Creek and Klinge Ford, bridges which cost us $300,000, and which are used by the public as well as by ourselves. We graded that entire street a distance of 4 miles, expending $250,000 in that, and graded it not simply the width of the railroad, but the entire width of the street for public purposes. We expended on that road nearly a million and a half of dollars.

But in this consolidation we got stock aggregating $1,250,000 par value. The market value of that stock to-day on the stock board is only $73 per share, so that we have to-day stock the market value of which is only $900,000 in return for an investment of nearly $1,500,000. Now, how was it with the Capital Traction Company? Gentlemen say that the power has been exercised here to enormously increase the capitalization. That company had the best franchise and the largest income of any company in the District of Columbia. It had an income that enabled it to pay between 4 and 5 per cent at that time on over $10,000,000, so that company got stock in the consolidation representing in this consolidation $10,750,000, the total capitalization being $12,000,000.

The value of that stock is now seventy-four or seventy-five dollars as against $100. It has shrunk to $9,000,000 instead of $12,000,000. Why? Because prior to the consolidation that company had the only rapid transit system in Washington. Under the whip and spur of Congress, to which I have alluded, the Metropolitan, paralleling the Capital Traction on F street and Ninth street and other parts of the city, put in its magnificent system, and the immediate effect of the competition was to reduce the gross revenue of the Capital Traction Company nearly $200,000, pretty nearly cutting the net revenue in half. These are the contingencies which meet all these investments; and the result was that, the dividend-earning power of that road being impaired, the value of its stock was reduced.

Now, what effect did it have on the stock. The stock fluctuated from 100 to 65 after the fire, and fluctuated from 65 to 75. Have the people shared in the misfortune when it fell or the good fortune when it rose? You have had the same fares and the same service, and an increased tax has been imposed by an act at this session of Congress, and in all these things I say, so far as the public are concerned, they are amply covered by the power of regulation exercised by Congress. Are you simply to abandon all the machinery that belongs to civilization, the machinery that gives efficient service on the Metropolitan line and the Capital Traction line, the convenience of free transfers, and the convenience of long rides in the suburbs for one fare simply out of fear that these powers may be abused and the stock manipulated in the interest of stockjobbers, that the gentleman refers to, who may either make or lose?

The power conferred upon this Rock Creek road does not give power to issue bonds. It is a power simply to issue stock. It is a power to issue stock to an amount not exceeding the real consideration paid. Now, I say that the limitation as to how much there would be issued has been preserved in the competition of these roads. I know of no better way than to amend the two companies' charters, under which will be stated the amount of stock which they shall issue.

Now, I have no interest whatever in this Eckington road. I have studiously avoided either speaking for or having a word to say on any measure affecting the railroad in which I am interested and in which I was interested before I became a member of Congress, nor have I taken any interest in this case beyond this—I do claim to be a lover of justice and equality of right; and when the representatives of this Eckington Company, struggling under adversity, in the hands of receivers, came to me and said, "We desire this power of acquiring connecting and intersecting lines, the same power that you have, and we fear that the Capital Traction Company will oppose," I said "I will go and see the officers, and my advice would be to acquiesce in the acquisition of this power by all the roads in the District."

The Senate put on this provision, to confer upon this line, simply to the end that they might make it as efficient as other lines, this power of acquiring and purchasing connecting and intersecting lines, this power of the weaker to tie onto the stronger lines. The chairman of the District Committee stated that the House had twice by distinct vote voted against this proposition, and he would not report it to the House. The result was, the conference committee said that if one company was to have it all ought to have it, and that if all were not to have it the existing power to the Capital Traction Company should be repealed. That repeal has been stricken out on the point of order that it was not germane to the original Senate amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand the gentleman to say that the Capital Traction Company and the Rock Creek Company, with which the gentleman was formerly connected, have the right now to consolidate with all these roads.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Of course.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has there been any effort made to do that?

Mr. NEWLANDS. None whatever that I know of by the officers of the companies. There has been some talk on the outside.

Mr. RICHARDSON. They have had that power for years.

Mr. BABCOCK. They have had it since 1895.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Three years. They still have that right.

Mr. NEWLANDS. They still have that right, and my judgment is that this power will be simply exercised by tying the weaker lines to the stronger lines, because the requirements that you have made for the efficiency of the service and for the underground system will absolutely drive these weak lines out of existence.

Mr. MAHANY. And the result will be the annihilation of competition for all future time in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yielded the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. What is the good of competition with six tickets for a quarter?

Mr. DOCKERY. It is obvious that my good friend from Illinois may be depriving himself of some advantages. He talks about six tickets for a quarter of a dollar, but suppose the roads were capitalized at the actual cost, he and I might get twelve tickets for a quarter of a dollar, and then we would revel in luxury. It does not follow that six tickets for a quarter should be the rate for all time.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me at this time, it is in the power of Congress now, if in view of the actual cost of these roads at this time or in the future they can afford it, to compel them to sell twelve tickets for a quarter. It is in the power of "Alderman CANNON" and "Alderman DOCKERY" to compel them to sell twelve tickets for a quarter and throw in a glass of beer. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. My friend the "alderman from Illinois" knows that practically it is a difficult power to exercise. Now, I want to look at this matter for a moment, because I am in the same situation with my friend from Illinois. Neither one of us owns a foot of real estate in this District; neither one of us owns any stock in any street railroad. I venture to say that neither the gentleman from Illinois nor myself owns one dollar of property that could be affected by our votes on any public question in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CANNON. No; I think we are equally in poverty. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Both poverty stricken. So the gentleman from Illinois and myself can fairly approach the consideration of this question without being affected by personal interest or personal bias. My friend from Nevada, an able and distinguished gentleman, said a moment ago that the result would be to wipe out the weak lines and said they desired to be wiped out.

Mr. NEWLANDS. They want the machinery that will enable them to be acquired by the stronger line.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am glad to have that statement made, because it shows the irresistible trend of monopoly. There was never a trust that reared its head in this country, from Maine to the Rio Grande, that did not offer as an argument for its existence the fact that the cost of administration would be less, and my friend from Michigan [Mr. SPALDING] knows that to be true. But the trouble with my friend from Nevada and those who hold similar views is this: If the proposed law had been on the statute books ten years ago, the probabilities are that, instead of that splendid street-car line on Pennsylvania avenue and the one on the Metropolitan line, we should have to-day one line rather than two. Why? Because it would have paid the incorporators enjoying the privilege of monopoly to compel the public to use the one line instead of building the two. There is the defect in the proposition made by my friend from Illinois. The moment you put this law on the statute book, that moment you paralyze extensions here and there and all over the District. Why? Because you have a monopoly that enjoys the trade and controls it.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me right there, because he wants to be just, the common council of the city of Washington is in session from year to year, and has plenary power, and if the condition arises that my friend from Missouri predicts, it can authorize any corporation or individual to build a railway line upon each and every street and avenue in Washington.

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes. But there is not a Representative on the floor better posted on the question, because of his long and illustrious services, than the gentleman from Illinois, and he knows that it is almost impossible to pass even the Ten Commandments through the two bodies as an independent bill. It is very difficult to enact independent legislation.

Mr. CANNON. I think anything can be passed in the long run, and perhaps soon enough to meet public sentiment, that the business interests of the greatest number require.

Mr. DOCKERY. I admit that ultimately, by the power of persistent effort, the people may triumph, but why give this power to any body of men? I do not complain of the men who own stock in the street corporations. If I were a stockholder, I would be knocking at the doors of Congress just as they are knocking. I would be asking, because human nature is the same, for a monopoly just as they are asking. I would seek to post notices around the District of Columbia that "no competitor need enter here, as monopoly enjoys the privileges of exclusive prerogative."

Mr. CANNON. There are two street railway companies in the city that are successful.

Mr. BABCOCK. Three.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, three. One is the Metropolitan Company, one is the Capital Traction Company, and the other is the Columbia. They strike certain centers of population over which they can carry enough passengers to give a first-rate service. The Eckington and Soldiers' Home and the Belt Line have sought to develop in the absence of people to convey, and they give a poor, miserable service.

They are no good to themselves and no good to the people they undertake to serve, and here is a proposition to give these people who have blown in their money, like drowning men catching at straws, the power to consolidate and let them make the best trade they can, and let the roads make a trade that will give the public a good service, and thereby benefit the people and the purchasers, and save to the owners a little bit of the money that they have so improvidently blown in. And when that proposition is made, my friend from Missouri, who is able and strong and just and has good judgment, proceeds, as it seems to me, to draw upon his imagination and suppose that somebody is going to be oppressed. I think my friend, usually right, is on this question all wrong.

Mr. DOCKERY. Just one word. If there is a weak line of railway anywhere in this city desiring to connect itself with a strong line, all that is necessary is to come to Congress and ask for the privilege of consolidation. In that way we can deal with each case singly and alone. And possibly in the case of some little line somewhere it might be for the interest of the public as well as of the stockholders to allow a consolidation. I do not know whether that would be true or not.

But let us see where the logic of my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] leads. And let me say that I almost feel lonesome, fighting as I do here to-day without my friend from Illinois, because he is nearly always right, and I am sorry to find him wrong in this case. [Laughter.]

According to my friend's logic, the cost of operation is decreased when we consolidate one or more great competing railroad lines. It is probable that the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Baltimore and Ohio, and the Chesapeake and Ohio under one management could be operated more cheaply than under three distinct managements. But what would be the result? A monopoly controlling the lines of east and west railroad transportation, no progress, but little extension of the lines into new territory because of the existence of such a monopoly; and the result would be, sooner or later, increased cost of transportation.

Mr. MAHANY. It would be a benefit to the corporations, but a menace to the people.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think so.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand that my friend is opposed to this proposition because, as he says, it is a monopoly.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will create a monopoly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, I ask the gentleman whether there is not an absolute monopoly when the Capital Traction Company has this right without question and no other company has it? They can purchase and consolidate and get control of all the roads in the District. This amendment simply allows all other roads to do the same. Now, the gentleman is insisting on the worst kind of a monopoly, because, if his view prevails, this privilege is allowed to the Capital Traction Company alone. Why not let all the companies have it?

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman has stated the case accurately; but I would apply a different remedy.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We tried to do so, but could not.

Mr. DOCKERY. I know. The point of order was interposed. But instead of broadening the present monopoly, I would bring in a bill repealing the powers already given by Congress to the Capital Traction Company. Congress can never eradicate a disease by aggravating it. We can not "stamp out" yellow fever by spreading it all over the country. Congress must take hold of this monopoly right on the threshold of its appearance here in the District and strangle the life out of it, if we would subserve the best interests of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I think the House pretty thoroughly understands this matter. There are only two points involved in it—two vital points: First, shall Congress recede from its past practice and permit these lines to acquire other lines and issue an unlimited amount of stock?

Mr. HILL. Has it not been the practice with reference to new organizations to limit issues of stock to the cost of the proposed improvements? I understand that is precisely what we are proposing to do here.

Mr. BABCOCK. No. The alternative is either to limit themselves to a fixed amount or to go before the supreme court of the District of Columbia and have the amount fixed.

Mr. MOODY. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin say that the effect of adopting the amendments in question would be to permit these corporations to issue an unlimited amount of stock?

Mr. BABCOCK. I do.

Now, I want it clearly understood I was not in favor of attacking the Capital Traction Company or repealing any part of their charter. This is a matter that was forced on the House by the Senate. I do not think it has any business in this bill at all. For that reason I do not want the House to concur in this Senate amendment. I think we should nonconcur, should strike out the matter entirely, and let it go where it belongs.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. NEWLANDS, that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur therein, it was rejected—ayes 24, noes 49.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to this Senate amendment. I desire, then, to move that the House agree to a conference with the exception of this amendment, and on that I wish—

Mr. CANNON. A rejection of the motion to concur amounts to nonconurrence. We have nonconcurring in this amendment.

The SPEAKER. But this has reached another stage. This is a second stage of the proceedings, where the motion is to recede and concur, and a negative of that motion does not establish the affirmative of the proposition, which is to insist, the House having refused to accept the proposition of the Senate.

The gentleman moves to insist—that the House still further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the conference.

Mr. BABCOCK. There are other points of disagreement, Mr. Speaker, between the two Houses. But the House and Senate have fully agreed on all of the others. There is no question on anything else excepting this one particular item.

The SPEAKER. But the other amendments must be disposed of in the House, or else the House must further insist upon its disagreement to all of the amendments of the Senate and let the whole matter go back to conference.

Mr. BABCOCK. Then, perhaps, this motion will get it before the House. I move that the House agree to the report of the committee of conference, with the exception of the amendment No. 5, which is section 3 of the bill, and that upon that particular amendment the House insist upon its disagreement and ask a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that each amendment will have to be taken up separately and passed upon under the circumstances as they now exist. The best way would be to insist on the disagreement, however, and let the whole matter go to conference, where it can be adjusted; otherwise each amendment must be taken up separately and acted upon independently.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But by unanimous consent all of them can be concurred in except this one.

The SPEAKER. Are any of them modifications of this amendment?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. That is just the trouble. The House would have to act upon proper motions in each case to reach them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I thought that we might, by unanimous consent, agree to all of them but this one, and let that go to conference.

Mr. BABCOCK. The bill, Mr. Speaker, is entirely satisfactory to the House and the Senate, except the one provision which has been discussed and to which we have disagreed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the various amendments to be read, and then the gentleman can make such motions as he thinks desirable in connection with them, or in accordance with the modifications proposed by the conference committee, if he so desires.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement with the Senate on the amendment with reference to the consolidation of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home and other railroads, which has been discussed this morning.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to read the next amendment.

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the Chair understood the proposition. This is a part of the report of the conference committee, and my motion is that the House agree to the report, excepting the one single amendment which has been rejected.

The SPEAKER. The difficulty is that the matter now before the House is not the report of the conference committee, that having been rejected, and that brings the House to its former position before the conference was agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. I did not understand that the entire report was rejected.

The SPEAKER. It has to be rejected or accepted as a whole.

Mr. BABCOCK. Then I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to a further conference.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to ask unanimous consent, if it be in order, to call business up on Wednesday next reported from the District of Columbia Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that it shall be in order to call up on Wednesday next, on the part of the Committee on the District of Columbia, bills relating to the District, reported from that committee. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the conferees on the part of the House.

The following conferees were announced: Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, and Mr. RICHARDSON.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended and that the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 4936 be all nonconcurring in and a committee of conference asked for.

Mr. LOUD and others demanded a second.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry. If this motion prevails, would it be in order to move to concur in any part of the amendments?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

The gentleman from California demands a second.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. LOUD. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. MADDOX. I wish to submit an inquiry—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUP] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. MADDOX. I should like to know what it is that we are considering.

The SPEAKER. The amendments to the bill H. R. 4936.

Mr. MADDOX. What is that bill?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4936) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 2.

Mr. LOUD. That is hardly enough, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. It requires a majority of those voting.

Mr. LOUD. Does it not require a majority of the House for a second?

The SPEAKER. A majority of the House? The Chair never heard that proposition stated before.

Subsequently the Speaker announced—ayes 90, noes 2.

Mr. LOUD. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MAHON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. This can not be taken by yeas and nays. It is taken by tellers only. This is not a motion. It is the seconding of a motion, and the constitutional right to demand the yeas and nays does not exist as to a second.

Pending a count of the House.

Mr. MAHON said: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my motion, with the leave of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman proposes to withdraw the motion. If there be no objection, the motion will be withdrawn. There was no objection.

Mr. LOUD. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

PROTECTION OF THE PEOPLE OF THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman desire to press it now?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am very anxious to get it considered. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE], who has given very great attention to it, must leave for his home to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a conference report, which will be read by the Clerk.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read instead of the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAYNE). The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] asks unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that the statement be read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8381) for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 5, 6, 11, 19, 20, 27, 42, 43.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 20, 22, 24, 25, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 35, 36, 44, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words struck out insert:

"SEC. 3. That said courts are hereby given jurisdiction in their respective districts to try cases against those who may claim to hold as members of a tribe and whose membership is denied by the tribe, but who continue to hold said lands and tenements notwithstanding the objection of the tribe; and if it be found upon trial that the same are held unlawfully against the tribe by those claiming to be members thereof, and the membership and right are disallowed by the commission of the Five Tribes, or the United States court, and the judgment has become final, then said court shall cause the parties charged with unlawfully holding said possessions to be removed from the same and cause the lands and tenements to be restored to the person or persons or nation or tribe of Indians entitled to the possession of the same: Provided always, That any person being a noncitizen in possession of lands, holding the possession thereof under an agreement, lease, or improvement contract with either of said nations or tribes, or any citizen thereof, executed prior to January 1, 1898, may, as to lands not exceeding in amount 100 acres, in defense of any action for the possession of said lands show that he is and has been in peaceable possession of such lands, and that he has while in such possession made lasting and valuable improvements thereon, and that he has not enjoyed the possession thereof a sufficient length of time to compensate him for such improvements. Thereupon the court or jury trying said cause shall determine the fair and reasonable value of such improvements and the fair and reasonable rental value of such lands for the time the same shall have been occupied by such person, and if the improvements exceed in value the amount of rents with which such persons should be charged the court, in its judgment, shall specify such time as will, in the opinion of the court, compensate such person for the balance due, and award him possession for such time unless the amount be paid by claimant within such reasonable time as the court shall specify. If the finding be that the amount of rents exceed the value of the improvements, judgment shall be rendered against the defendant for such sum, for which execution may issue."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words struck out insert:

"SEC. 6. That the summons shall not issue in such action until the chief or governor of the tribe, or person or persons bringing suit in his own behalf, shall have filed a sworn complaint, on behalf of the tribe or himself, with the court, which shall, as near as practicable, describe the premises so detained, and shall set forth a detention without the consent of the person bringing said suit or the tribe, by one whose membership is denied by it: Provided, That if the chief or governor refuse or fail to bring suit in behalf of the tribe then any member of the tribe may make complaint and bring said suit."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words struck out insert:

"SEC. 9. That all actions for restitution of possession of real property under this act must be commenced by the service of a summons within two years after the passage of this act, where the wrongful detention or possession began prior to the date of its passage; and all actions which shall be commenced hereafter, based upon wrongful detention or possession committed since the passage of this act must be commenced within two years after the cause of action accrued. And nothing in this act shall take away the right to maintain an action for unlawful and forcible entry and detainer given by the act of Congress passed May 2, 1890 (26 U. S. Stats., page 95)."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the Senate recede from its disagreement numbered 10. In lieu of the words struck out insert: "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall in any way affect any vested legal rights which may have been heretofore granted by act of Congress, nor be so construed as to confer any additional rights upon any parties claiming under any such act of Congress;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words struck out insert: "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall impair the rights of any holder or owner of a leasehold interest in any oil, coal rights, asphalt, or mineral which have been assented to by act of Congress, but all such interest shall continue unimpaired hereby, and shall be assured to such holders or owners by leases from the Secretary of the Interior for the term not exceeding fifteen years, but subject to payment of advance royalties, as herein provided, when such leases are not operated to the rate of royalty on coal mined and the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and preference shall be given to such parties in renewals of such leases;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In addition to the words inserted insert also "and the clerk of said court shall record all papers and perform all the acts required of the recorder of the county, or the clerk of the county court, or the secretary of state, necessary for the incorporation of any city or town, as provided in Mansfield's Digest, and such city or town government, when so authorized and organized, shall possess all the powers and exercise all the rights of similar municipalities in said State of Arkansas;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words struck out insert:

"Sec. 15. That there shall be a commission in each town for each one of the Chickasaw, Choctaw, Creek, and Cherokee tribes, to consist of one member to be appointed by the executive of the tribe, who shall not be interested in town property, other than his home; one person to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, and one member to be selected by the town. And if the executive of the tribe or the town fail to select members as aforesaid, they may be selected and appointed by the Secretary of the Interior."

"Said commissions shall cause to be surveyed and laid out town sites where towns with a present population of 200 or more are located, conforming to the existing survey so far as may be, with proper and necessary streets, alleys, and public grounds, including parks and cemeteries, giving to each town such territory as may be required for its present needs and reasonable prospective growth; and shall prepare correct plats thereof, and file one with the Secretary of the Interior, one with the clerk of the United States court, one with the authorities of the tribe, and one with the town authorities. And all town lots shall be appraised by said commission at their true value, excluding improvements; and separate appraisements shall be made of all improvements thereon; and no such appraisement shall be effective until approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and in case of disagreement by the members of such commission as to the value of any lot, said Secretary may fix the value thereof."

"The owner of the improvements upon any town lot, other than fencing, tillage, or temporary buildings, may deposit in the United States Treasury, St. Louis, Mo., one-half of such appraised value; 10 per cent within two months and 15 per cent more within six months after notice of appraisement, and the remainder in three equal annual installments thereafter, depositing with the Secretary of the Interior one receipt for each payment, and one with the authorities of the tribe, and such deposit shall be deemed a tender to the tribe of the purchase money for such lot."

"If the owner of such improvements on any lot fails to make deposit of the purchase money as aforesaid, then such lot may be sold in the manner herein provided for the sale of unimproved lots; and when the purchaser thereof has complied with the requirements herein for the purchase of improved lots he may, by petition, apply to the United States court within whose jurisdiction the town is located for condemnation and appraisement of such improvements, and petitioner shall, after judgment, deposit the value so fixed with the clerk of the court; and thereupon the defendant shall be required to accept same in full payment for his improvements or remove same from the lot within such time as may be fixed by the court."

"All town lots not improved as aforesaid shall belong to the tribe, and shall be in like manner appraised, and, after approval by the Secretary of the Interior, and due notice, sold to the highest bidder at public auction by said commission, but not for less than their appraised value, unless ordered by the Secretary of the Interior; and purchasers may in like manner make deposits of the purchase money with like effect, as in case of improved lots."

"The inhabitants of any town may, within one year after the completion of the survey thereof, make such deposit of $10 per acre for parks, cemeteries, and other public grounds laid out by said commission with like effect as for improved lots; and such parks and public grounds shall not be used for any purpose until such deposits are made."

"The person authorized by the tribe or tribes may execute or deliver to any such purchaser, without expense to him, a deed conveying to him the title to such lands or town lots; and thereafter the purchase money shall become the property of the tribe; and all such moneys shall, when titles to all the lots in the towns belonging to any tribe have been thus perfected, be paid per capita to the members of the tribe: Provided, however, That in those town sites designated and laid out under the provisions of this act where coal leases are now being operated and coal is being mined there shall be reserved from appraisement and sale all lots occupied by houses of miners actually engaged in mining, and only while they are so engaged, and in addition thereto a sufficient amount of land, to be determined by the appraisers, to furnish homes for the men actually engaged in working for the lessees operating said mines and a sufficient amount for all buildings and machinery for mining purposes: And provided further, That when the lessees shall cease to operate said mines, then, and in that event, the lots of land so reserved shall be disposed of as provided for in this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words struck out insert "until their rights under said treaty shall be determined in such manner as shall be hereafter provided by Congress;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words adopted by the Senate insert "made after the 1st day of January, 1898, by the tribe or any member thereof shall be absolutely void, and all such grazing leases;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 15 strike out the word "shall;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended clause substitute the following: "prior to said date shall terminate;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Change the amended clause so that it shall read as follows: "on the 1st day of April 1890, and all such agricultural leases shall terminate on January 1, 1900; but this shall not prevent individuals from leasing their allotments when made to them as provided in this act, nor from occupying or renting their proportionate shares of the tribal lands until the allotments herein provided for are made;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit a portion of the words struck out, so that it shall read:

"Sec. 26. That before any allotment shall be made of lands in the Cherokee Nation, there shall be segregated therefrom by the commission heretofore mentioned, in separate allotments or otherwise, the 157,000 acres purchased by the Delaware tribe of Indians from the Cherokee Nation under agreement of April 8, 1867, subject to the judicial determination of the rights of said descendants and the Cherokee Nation under said agreement. That the Delaware Indians residing in the Cherokee Nation are hereby authorized and empowered to bring suit in the Court of Claims of the United States, within sixty days after the passage of this act, against the Cherokee Nation, for the purpose of determining the rights of said Delaware Indians in and to the lands and funds of said nation under their contract and agreement with the Cherokee Nation dated April 8, 1867; or the Cherokee Nation may bring a like suit against said Delaware Indians; and jurisdiction is conferred on said court to adjudicate and fully determine the same, with right of appeal to either party to the Supreme Court of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit a portion of the amendment, so that it shall read as follows:

"Sec. 30. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to locate one Indian inspector in Indian Territory, who may, under his authority and direction, perform any duties required of the Secretary of the Interior by law, relating to affairs therein."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit a portion of the amendment and amend the remainder, so that the amendment shall read as follows:

"Sec. 31. That on the 1st day of July, 1898, all tribal courts in Indian Territory shall be abolished, and no officer of said courts shall thereafter have any authority whatever to do or perform any act theretofore authorized by any law in connection with said courts, or to receive any pay for same; and all civil and criminal causes then pending in any such court shall be transferred to the United States court in said Territory by filing with the clerk of the court the original papers in the suit: Provided, That this section shall not be in force as to the Chickasaw, Choctaw, and Creek tribes or nations until the 1st day of October, 1898."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the first paragraph of the amendment, including lines 16 to 25, inclusive, on page 30, and lines 1 to 14, inclusive, on page 31, and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"Sec. 32. That the agreement made by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes with commissions representing the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians on the 23d day of April, 1897, as herein amended, is hereby ratified and confirmed, and the same shall be of full force and effect if ratified before the 1st day of December, 1898, by a majority of the whole number of votes cast by the members of said tribes at an election held for that purpose; and the executives of said tribes are hereby authorized and directed to make public proclamation that said agreement shall be voted on at the next general election, or at any special election to be called by such executives for the purpose of voting on said agreement; and at the election held for such purpose all male members of each of said tribes qualified to vote under his tribal laws shall have the right to vote at the election precinct most convenient to his residence, whether the same be within the bounds of his tribe or not: Provided, That no person whose right to citizenship in either of said tribes or nations is now contested in original or appellate proceedings before any United States court shall be permitted to vote at said election: Provided further, That the votes cast in both said tribes or nations shall be forthwith returned duly certified by the precinct officers to the national secretaries of said tribes or nations, and shall be presented by said national secretaries to a board of commissioners consisting of the principal chief and national secretary of the Choctaw Nation, the governor and national secretary of the Chickasaw Nation, and a member of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, to be designated by the chairman of said commission; and said board shall meet without delay at Atoka, in the Indian Territory, and canvass and count said votes and make proclamation of the result; and if said agreement as amended be so ratified, the provisions of this act shall then only apply to said tribes where the same do not conflict with the provisions of said agreement; but the provisions of said agreement, if so ratified, shall not in any manner affect the provisions of section 14 of this act, which said amendment is as follows."

Insert after the word "further," at the end of line 4, page 34, the following: "That the Commissioners to the Five Civilized Tribes shall make a correct roll of Chickasaw freedmen entitled to any rights or benefits under the treaty made in 1863 between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes and their descendants born to them since the date of said treaty, and 40 acres of land, including their present residences and improvements, shall be allotted to each, to be selected, held, and used by them until their rights under said treaty shall be determined, in such manner as shall hereafter be provided by act of Congress."

Strike out all after the word "land," in line 17, page 37, down to the second word "and," in line 1, page 38; strike out in lines 9 and 10, page 39, the words "member of the commission to the Five Civilized Tribes to be designated by the chairman thereof," and insert in lieu thereof the words "to be appointed by the President of the United States;" strike out, in line 4, page 40, the words "the same" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one residence and one business lot at 50 per cent of the appraised value of such improved property, and the remainder of such improved property;" strike out, in line 13, page 40, the words "they shall select a third person;" and insert in lieu thereof the words "or the limit or extent of said town, either of said commissioners may report any such disagreement to the judge of the district in which such town is located, who shall appoint a third member to act with said commission."

Strike out, in line 9, page 42, the words "Choctaw or Chickasaw constitutions;" insert, after the word "States," in line 10, page 42, the words "in force in said Territory;" insert, after the word "nations," in line 24, page 44, the following: "each of whom shall make full report of all his acts to the Secretary of the Interior quarterly. All such acts shall be subject to the approval of said Secretary;" insert, after the word "agreement," in line 22, page 45, the words "subject, however, to payment of advance royalties herein provided for;" strike out all after the word "void," in line 17, page 45, down to and including the word "agreement," in line 22, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall impair the rights of any holder or owner of a leasehold interest in any oil, coal rights, asphalt, or mineral which have been assented to by act of Congress, but all such interests shall continue unimpaired hereby and shall be assured by new leases from such trustees of coal or asphalt claims described therein, by application to the trustees within six months after the ratification of this agreement."

The proviso beginning in line 6, page 46, is amended to read as follows: "Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may reduce or advance royalties on coal and asphalt when he deems it for the best interests of the Choctaws and Chickasaws to do so. No royalties shall be paid except into the United States Treasury, as herein provided."

Strike out, in line 5, page 46, the words "on" — asphalt."

Insert, in line 9, page 46, after the word "embracery," the words "breaches, or disturbances of the peace and carrying weapons."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the first paragraph of section 33 of the amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 33. That the agreement made by the commission to the Five Civilized Tribes with the commission representing the Muscogee (or Creek) tribe of Indians on the 27th day of September, 1897, as herein amended, is hereby ratified and confirmed, and the same shall be of full force and effect if ratified before the 1st day of December, 1898, by a majority of the votes cast by the members of said tribe at an election to be held for that purpose; and the executive of said tribe is authorized and directed to make public proclamation that said agreement shall be voted on at the next general election, to be called by such executive for the purpose of voting on said agreement; and if said agreement as amended be so ratified, the provisions of this act shall then only apply to said tribe where the same do not conflict with the provisions of said agreement; but the provisions of said agreement, if so ratified, shall not in any manner affect the provisions of section 14 of this act, which said amended agreement is as follows:"

Insert after the word "made," in line 13, page 58, the following: "All citizens of said nation, from and after the passage of this act, shall be entitled to select from the lands of said nation an amount equal to 100 acres, and use and occupy the same until the allotments therein provided are made."

Strike out paragraph 7 of section 33, page 59, and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"7. The residue of the lands, with the improvements thereon, if any there be, shall be appraised separately, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and said lands and improvements sold in tracts of not to exceed 160 acres to one person, to the highest bidder, at public auction, for not less than the appraised value per acre of land; and after deducting the appraised value of the lands, the remainder of the purchase money shall be paid to the owners of the improvement."

Strike out all on page 61 between the word "land," in line 4, and the word "the" where it occurs the second time in line 12.

Strike out, in line 3, page 61, the words "an officer of the United States, to be designated" and insert in lieu thereof the word "appointed."

Strike out, in line 5, page 63, the words "said nation or of."

And the Senate agree to the same.

J. S. SHERMAN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
JOHN S. LITTLE,
Managers on the part of the House.
R. F. PETTIGREW,
O. H. PLATT,
JAMES K. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8381) for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report on each of said amendments, namely:

On Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 8, striking out the sections giving the United States courts in the Indian Territory jurisdiction in certain cases of unlawful detention of lands and tenements in said Territory: The Senate recedes from 2, 3, 5, and 6, and Nos. 1, 4, and 8 are so changed that there will be no conflict between the provisions of this act and the forcible entry and detention laws which have heretofore been extended over the Indian Territory. The sections as they now stand furnish a remedy whereby the so-called "intruder class," whose rights have been passed upon, may be dispossessed of the valuable lands they are now holding without right or title.

The House accepts the Senate amendment No. 7, which puts in force the laws and ordinances of the city of Fort Smith "for the preservation of the peace and health of said city" over a small tract of country adjoining it.

The House accepts the Senate amendment striking out the word "valuable," so as to reserve all "oil, coal, asphalt, and mineral deposits in the lands of any tribe to such tribes."

The House agrees to the amendment No. 10, which struck out the provision 7, section 11, in regard to certain land grants and which authorized parties claiming any rights under such grants to bring suits in the United States courts to hear and determine the same, with a substitute which leaves their rights unchanged.

The House accepts the Senate amendments 12, 13, and 14, which limits the time in which lands allotted are to be nontransferable, liable for obligations, and nontaxable.

The House accepts the Senate amendments 16 and 17, which makes the provisions apply to all minerals.

The Senate accepts the provision of the House continuing unimpaired the rights of the holders or owners of mineral leases acquired by the consent and authority of Congress, with an amendment making the provision apply to all mineral leases which have been "assented to by act of Congress."

The Senate recedes from its amendment numbered 19, which provides that in renewing any lease the rights of lessees who have made subleases shall be protected, it being the opinion that the rights of all parties were fully protected by the provisions of the bill.

The House accepts Senate amendment striking out the provisions of the House extending individual royalty on minerals under existing contracts for nine months after the passage of this act.

The House accepts Senate amendment No. 21 requiring the clerk of the court to record all papers and perform all acts required of the recorder of the county, or the clerk of the county court, or the secretary of state, as provided in Mansfield's Digest, with an amendment limiting such acts to such as are necessary for the incorporation of any city or town.

The House accepts Senate amendment No. 22, which provides for levy and collection annually of a tax upon the property of any city or town for school and other purposes, not to exceed in the aggregate 2 per cent of the assessed value thereof, in lieu of 1 per cent, as provided in the House bill.

The Senate recedes from its town-site amendment (No. 23), and a substitute is agreed to providing for a commission of three in each town, who are authorized to survey and lay out town sites and appraise the property. Owners of improvements are permitted to deposit one-half of the appraised value, and such deposit is to be a tender to the tribe. If the owner of improvements fail to make deposit of the purchase money, the lots may be sold, after due notice, to the highest bidder at public auction, by said commission, at not less than their appraised value, and provision is made for the purchase of the improvements by condemnation and appraisal. Unimproved lots are to be sold to the highest bidder at public auction.

The House accepts Senate amendment No. 25, striking out the House provision authorizing members of a tribe to use and dispose of minerals on their allotments.

The Senate accepts the House provisions making it a misdemeanor for any person to hold more than his share of the land and that of his family at the expiration of nine months after the passage of this act, and fixing a penalty for the violations of the provisions of sections 16 and 17 of this act.

The House accepts the Senate amendment striking out the House provisions in regard to rights of way granted to railroad corporations.

The House accepts the Senate amendment striking out the House provision in regard to the Commission to the Five Tribes finding that Choctaw Indians claiming rights in the Choctaw lands have removed to and in good faith become residents upon the lands of the Choctaw Nation.

The House accepts Senate amendment No. 32, which reserves from allotment of a sufficient amount of land to allot 40 acres of land to each of the Chickasaw freedmen; the House accepts amendment No. 33, which provides for the allotment of each of said freedmen 40 acres of land, including their present residences and improvements, and amendment No. 34 with an amendment which permits said freedmen to hold and use said 40 acres each until their rights shall be determined under the treaty of 1865, as shall be hereafter provided by Congress.

The House accepts Senate amendments Nos. 35 and 36, which change the House provisions in regard to the termination of all leases in the Indian Territory so as to limit them to agricultural and grazing leases; also amendment No. 37, which makes all such leases made after January 1, 1898, by any tribe or member thereof, void; and agrees to amendments Nos. 39 and 40, which fix the date for the termination of grazing leases made prior to January 1, 1898, on the 1st day of April, 1900, and agricultural leases made prior to said date at January 1, 1900, and so changes amendment 40 as to permit individuals to occupy or rent their proportionate shares of tribal lands until allotments are made.

The Senate accepts the House provisions in regard to the 157,000 acres of land purchased by the Delaware tribe from the Cherokee Nation, with an amendment striking out the provisions for allotment to registered Delaware and the reservation of a part of said lands to the descendants of deceased registered Delaware Indians, and the House accepts the Senate amendment authorizing the Delaware to bring suit against the Cherokee for the purpose of determining the rights of said Delaware Indians in and to the lands and funds of the Cherokee Indians.

The Senate recedes from its amendments authorizing appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The House accepts Senate amendment No. 50, with a change which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to locate one Indian inspector in the Indian Territory.

The House accepts Senate amendment No. 46, abolishing all tribal courts in the Indian Territory on the 1st day of July, 1898, and providing for a transfer of all civil suits to the United States court in said Territory, with amendments transferring all criminal as well as civil suits to said courts, and extending the time for the taking effect of said act in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Creek Nations until October 1, 1898.

Senate amendment No. 46 provides for the submission of the agreement which has heretofore been made between the Dawes Commission and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians. The object of the agreement is to settle the vexed questions in the Indian Territory. It has not been ratified by the Indians, and the House accepts the amendment with such changes that if they do ratify the same within six months, then the terms of the agreement shall supersede the provisions of the bill in conflict with the provisions of the agreement. The agreement is amended in several respects so as to protect the interest of the Chickasaw freedmen; to permit owners of improvements to buy one residence and one business lot at 50 per cent of the appraised value thereof; to permit either of the town commissioners to report any disagreement as to the value of lots to the judge of the district in which the town is located and requires the judge to appoint a third member to act with the commission; to make the provisions of the agreement conform as near as possible to the provisions of the bill in regard to mineral leases held by assent of Congress; to permit the Secretary of the Interior to reduce or increase the royalties on coal and asphalt when he deems it to be the best interest of the tribe; to prevent breaches or disturbances of the peace and the carrying of weapons.

Senate amendment No. 48 makes the same provisions in regard to the Creek agreement that amendment No. 47 does with the Choctaw and Chickasaw agreement, and the House accepts the same with amendments, so as to permit members of said Creek tribe to select 160 acres of land and use and occupy the same until allotments are made, and to provide for the selling of lands remaining after allotment to the highest bidder at public auction at not less than the appraised value and in tracts not to exceed 160 acres to one person.

There are a few other amendments along the line of those made in the Choctaw and Chickasaw agreement.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the conference report be agreed to. The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have given way now until it is 3 o'clock. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole—

Mr. HULL. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that now, because this is the only day upon which I can have an opportunity to get a rule for the consideration of Army bills that the War Department in question must be passed, if we are going to have a proper administration of affairs.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield now for the gentleman to ask unanimous consent, because if anybody opposes his motion it will be quite manifest there is no quorum here.

Mr. HULL. I do not want to be compelled to ask for a rule, because I believe if the House had an opportunity to pass upon these matters they would be agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. But my friend will notice that there is no quorum present, and therefore the matter must come up by unanimous consent, if at all.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why can we not have to-day for committee suspension?

Mr. CANNON. Well, there is no quorum present.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that Thursday, the 23d instant, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and that only bills shall be considered which the committee by a vote have instructed the chairman to call up for consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which will be reported by the Clerk.

Mr. BARTLETT. Reserving the right to object—I did not hear the resolution. Let it be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, the 23d instant, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and that only bills shall be considered which the committee by a vote have instructed the chairman to call up for consideration.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to enter any captious objection to any bill that may be brought up for consideration by the Committee on Military Affairs, but I am unwilling that there shall be consent given to a general rule to consider any and all classes of bills.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, this does not give permission to call up any and all classes of bills. If the gentleman from Georgia will permit me, I will state that it does not do that. It only takes up those bills which the committee decided of most importance, and I do not believe that if the gentleman will examine the bills he will object to them. They are bills that must pass if we are to have an efficient service. I will give you an illustration. There is the Ordnance Department. There has been no increase in the Ordnance Department since 1876. They are now taking care of a very large number of men and running the factories day and night.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will state to the gentleman that I have investigated that bill somewhat, and if he should ask unanimous consent to consider that bill I would have no objection.

Mr. HULL. But some other gentleman on that side of the House would object. I propose to put the number of all the bills in the RECORD, so that every member can examine them; and unless we do this we can not get them considered. While the gentleman may consent to consider this particular bill that I have mentioned, some other gentleman will object, and the only way to get bills considered by this House at this time is either to suspend the rules or by a rule from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BARTLETT. That can be done, Mr. Speaker. Now, I say, as to the bill the gentleman has mentioned, I do not intend to object to it; but I do not desire to give unanimous consent to consider bills increasing the officers in the War Department, or in the Army, or any of those things, until the Government says that they have to be presented. If the gentleman desires to call up that bill now, I will not object. I do not think that as to these bills that we do not know anything of that we should pass a rule to bind us to permit those bills to come up out of their order; and I desire to say further—

Mr. HULL. The only increase of the permanent force in the War Department is in the Ordnance and Engineers. That does make some increase in these two branches. In all the others it is simply for use during the war, and no permanence in it.

Mr. CANNON. Let the question of unanimous consent be put to the House.

Mr. HULL. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will have to antagonize that.

Mr. BARTLETT. If it is to be granted by unanimous consent, I object.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, we are willing to give up Friday for the consideration of private business, and I ask that next Friday may be substituted for to-day for the suspension of the rules, and that same right shall be given to suspend the rules on Friday as to-day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I object.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the general deficiency bill.

Mr. HULL. I want to say that I propose to offer this resolution, to go to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can be done by filing it with the Clerk.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DALZELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10691. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

Page 69, after line 22, insert the following:

"Thomas F. Tongue, one hundred."

And in line 24 strike out the word "seven" and insert the word "eight."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose last week I had the floor on this paragraph of the bill; but I believe the chairman of the committee suggested that he would yield to me five minutes more if I desired it.

Mr. CANNON. On what question was that?

Mr. BURKE. On the question of contested-election cases.

Mr. CANNON. If I have the time, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will be recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BURKE. I suggested, Mr. Chairman, the other day that the law being as it is with reference to these contested-election cases, it presented quite an incentive and inducement why men should bring these cases before this House. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that when government has furnished to litigants a tribunal into which they can go and litigate their causes without expense to themselves, the government, whether municipal, State, or national, has discharged its fullest duty and obligation to litigants. In these contested-election cases the Government has provided a tribunal—the House of Representatives of the American people—before which litigants can go and present their causes free of any cost to themselves. When the United States has done this I submit it has discharged its fullest duty and obligations to those who are contesting elections upon the floor of this House.

Why, Mr. Chairman, we all know the rule which obtains in the courts of this country to-day with reference to litigation between parties. If A sues B and fails to recover in that suit, he is cast in the costs, and I have been unable to see by what rule of right in a contested-election case the Government of the United States should be called upon to pay the costs both of the contestee and the contestant. Mr. Chairman, I stated the other day that a few months ago I called upon the Clerk of this House for some information respecting these contested-election cases. Since the law was passed allowing contestee and contestant each $2,000 as compensation, there have been presented to this House 157 contested-election cases. In the Fifty-fourth Congress there were 33 cases presented, and in this Congress, the Fifty-fifth, there have been presented 21 cases. In these two Congresses alone we have had 53 contested-election cases, which, under the statute as it exists to-day, cost the Government $212,000.

Mr. BRUCKER. When was that statute passed?

Mr. BURKE. In 1878; and since that time Congress has allowed nearly $700,000 as payment to contestants and contestees in these cases. I am informed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] sitting at my right that he has in this bill—not put in by himself—a provision for an allowance of $1,000. The gentleman repudiates the whole thing so far as he is concerned, for he stands emphatically opposed to offering a premium in this House for contested-election cases. Why, Mr. Chairman, I venture the prediction here that out of the membership of this House, 356 members, three-fourths of them received a notice immediately after the last election from Washington lawyers that their seats were to be the subject of contest.

I received such a notice myself, although I was elected to this House by a majority of nearly 8,000, and no man thought of contesting my right to a seat. I received three or four of these communications from Washington lawyers, all offering to me their services in the matter. I suppose nearly every gentleman on this side of the House received similar notices. The law is nothing more or less than a standing bid, offered by the Government, to bring before this House contested elections, a majority of which are without merit, from almost every State in this Union. While it is impossible for the House to do anything with this bill, because the law is unrepealed, I submit that the House owes it to itself that we rise equal to the occasion and absolutely wipe from the statute books this species of legislation offering a premium, at the expense of the public, to litigation before the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, as long as we are on the matter of contested-election cases, I see by the bill, page 70, a provision made for the payment of sums extending down to line 14, page 71—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that that portion of the bill has not yet been reached.

Mr. BULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Add at the end of page 60:

"That hereafter members of the House of Representatives who are chairmen of committees entitled to annual clerks shall be entitled to the same allowance for clerk hire as is authorized to other members of the House of Representatives who are not chairmen of committees by the joint resolution approved March 3, 1893, and by House resolution passed May 8, 1896, and the appropriation for clerk hire to Members and Delegates made in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1899 is hereby made available to pay such clerk hire as herein provided: Provided, That this provision shall apply to members of committees entitled to annual clerks during the vacation of Congress only."

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in support of this measure that it differs from the one under consideration last week in this, that it only allows clerks—

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to know whether it is in order—

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be taken off my feet now.

Mr. LOVE. I only want to reserve the point of order against this amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is too late for that; I have made observations on this matter.

Mr. LOVE. I made use of the first opportunity. The gentleman got the floor, and I regretted to interrupt him to make the point of order, but did so as soon as I could be recognized.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was recognized by the Chair and had proceeded.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this differs from the proposition before us last week in this, that it only allows clerks to the chairmen of committees having annual clerks during the recess of Congress. Personally, I believe they ought to have them during the entire Congress; but, at the same time, if we can not have all we are entitled to, we will take what we can get. Let me call attention to the situation. If a man is a new member, and does not have a chairmanship of a committee, he gets a clerk throughout the entire year. If he has been long enough in the House so that he is deemed worthy of having a chairmanship of a committee, the result is he must hire a private secretary and pay him out of his own pocket.

So that, in one sense, it is a damage to a man to have been long in Congress, unless he is a scoundrel and has feathered his nest in some way, and I know of none such here, for the longer we are here the poorer we grow. But that is the fact. Now, take the clerkships of nearly all the committees—none of them are stenographers or typewriters. The clerk of my committee has had all that he could possibly do. We have had our hands full of work, and even when you did not seem to know it we were busy, for we have had a great amount of work to do with the several bills before us, some 140, including the bankruptcy bill, and in the last Congress the fee bill, which involved a large amount of work.

My private secretary, my stenographer and typewriter, in addition to my own work, has to take down my dictation in answer to the hundreds of letters I receive on various matters before my committee. There are a few clerks of committees that are stenographers. One of the ablest clerks in any legislative body is the chief clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, but he is not a stenographer. Upon inquiry, I only know of one clerk of a committee who is a stenographer, and he is the clerk of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. It is not the theory of the law that the chairman of the committee shall use the clerk of the committee for his own personal use. The clerk is there to represent the House of Representatives in his official capacity as a clerk of the committee, and he is not there for the purpose of sending out documents, agricultural reports, and doing the personal work of the chairman.

Each chairman must have one private secretary besides the clerk of the committee. Is it just, gentlemen of the Committee of the Whole, that the expense of employing this secretary should be taken out of the pocket of the chairman when each of you have your own private clerk? And, remember, my private secretary is not working for me alone. When I am busy with other matters, he is at work serving my people, and it is in the interest of my people that he should work. And what is true in my case is true in every case. I should like to see this amendment adopted without a dissenting voice, for it is only a matter of simple justice to the people that we represent.

Mr. FLEMING. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FLEMING. I am heartily in favor of giving every member of the House (including chairmen of committees) a private secretary. I think they are entitled to it. But I want to ask the gentleman whether he could not put this amendment in such a shape as to accomplish that purpose and at the same time reduce the number of annual clerks of committees to such an extent as to allow such assistance only where really needed?

Mr. HENDERSON. Allow me to say that a very able member of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY], whom I will now ask to take the floor, has been giving that matter very close attention and intends to bring it up for consideration at the next session of Congress.

Mr. MOODY. I want to say only a word in reply to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING]. I have the honor to be not only a member of the Committee on Appropriations, but a member of the subcommittee which has had under consideration the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. When this matter of committee clerks came before that committee last December, I entered my protest against the indiscriminate allowance of annual clerks to committees that ought not to have them. I was told that the matter was properly within the province of the Committee on Accounts. When that committee made a report on this subject some time ago, I upon the floor of the House called their attention to this subject; and they in turn said that it was within the province of the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I for one am through with undertaking to trace the responsibility from one committee to another. I give notice that when this subject comes next December before the subcommittee of which I am a member, there will not be allowed, so far as I can prevent it, an appropriation for any annual clerk except where one may be needed. I am in earnest about this matter. I feel quite sure that if this proposition of the gentleman from Rhode Island passes, as it should pass, the matter will receive intelligent consideration. And if I can not prevail in the committee, I agree to bring the question to the House, so that the House shall have an opportunity to act on it at the next session.

Mr. FLEMING. I am very glad the gentleman makes that statement. I think that the two measures ought really to go hand in hand. But it seems that they can not go in that way now. On the faith of the promise which the gentleman from Massachusetts makes to the House, I am ready to vote now for this proposition as it stands.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Accounts, from whom this amendment virtually emanated, I want to say that we examined into this matter, and we were unanimously of the opinion that it was a great injustice that gentlemen who are chairmen of committees having annual clerks are not permitted to have secretaries like the rest of us, not only during vacation, but during the session of Congress.

When these various propositions were adopted providing members of Congress with secretaries, the idea seemed to prevail that the clerks of committees would be the private secretaries of the chairmen of committees. The Committee on Accounts, if I recollect correctly, has reduced the number of annual clerks. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi, who reserved a point of order, will not press that point of order against the amendment. I assure him, from investigation by myself as a member of the Committee on Accounts, that I deem it to be proper and just. These annual clerks remain here during vacation. Why should chairmen of committees be obliged, either during the session of Congress or during vacation, to pay money out of their own pockets for services similar to those which other members procure at the public expense?

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish to ask the gentleman whether Senators who are chairmen of committees having annual clerks are also allowed personal clerks?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know; I have not investigated the matter. I know this, that the clerks of Senators are on the pay roll, and they get pay for thirteen months in a year. I have not investigated the matter myself, as the expenses of the Senate do not come before our committee, but I am informed that such is the fact.

Mr. DOCKERY. No; Senators who are chairmen of committees having annual clerks have no personal clerks.

Mr. CANNON. But I call the gentleman's attention to the fact, however, that the Senate has more employees, in round numbers, in proportion to membership, than the House has, and without any desire whatever to criticize it, it is a well-known fact that they have many more annual clerks in proportion than the House, more assistant clerks, and more messengers; and if the Senate were a House body, I would criticize it by saying that they have much that is not necessary, in my judgment.

Mr. MOODY. I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] will not call the Senate's attention to anything that they have not got, because if he does they will certainly get it. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. No, I shall not; but I want this proposition to be accompanied by a resolution of apology to the Senate of the United States, because even that body has never entered on this character of legislation; and while we may indulge in criticism of the Senate for liberality toward its employees, this, at all events, is something that they have never asked and never claimed as a matter of privilege.

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Chairman, as stated by the gentleman from Missouri, it is not true that chairmen of Senate committees have these additional private secretaries. I want to ask gentlemen if Congress has not been going on, year after year, without these additional secretaries, with business just as pressing, and has the public service suffered for want of more employees? What reason or excuse can you give for increasing such expenses now while we are in the midst of war? It has not been deemed necessary heretofore to have these employees, and I claim that there is nothing so pressing that it makes it important or imperative that they should be now employed.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, he is in error. Every Senator not a chairman of a committee has an annual clerk.

It is also a matter of fact that more is paid for their services than the monthly allowance to members of the House; and they have had this service for a number of years past. In addition to that, I think, almost invariably, where a Senator is chairman of a committee, not only has he a clerk as chairman of such committee, but he has besides an annual clerk; and I believe, if I recollect aright, there is an assistant clerk to these committees, with messengers and other employees as they may deem essential. So that, so far as the Senate is concerned as compared with the House, it is only fair to say that for every Senator there is an expenditure for this service equal to four times that which is paid for the convenience of the individual members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. LOVE. I thank the gentleman from Illinois for the information. Of course he is better posted than I am on these questions. He has had more experience and understands legislation better, but still he does not justify this act nor advocate it on the grounds that the Senate is better served than the House; for to justify this act on the grounds of equality between the two Houses would be to even go a step further and pay our secretaries larger wages, place their names on the pay roll, as they should be, and give them one month's additional pay, as is now the case with secretaries of Senators.

I do not stand here as the "watch guard" of the Treasury and hope to bring about reforms in governmental expenditures that do not meet the approval and sanction of wiser and more experienced men. I know that there are many here on this floor who have far more experience and who are better qualified for that service than I am. But the question, if I understand it correctly, is that you propose to give to these gentlemen who are chairmen of committees private secretaries in addition to the annual clerks of their committees, who have heretofore served a double purpose.

There are three committees of the House, if I may with propriety name them—the Committees on Elections—which in all probability will have no need for secretaries until another Congress is elected. What business is now before those committees to warrant us in providing annual clerks for them, and why in the sense of reason and justice can not these secretaries serve their respective chairmen this fall and winter?

Mr. BARTLETT. I am willing to except them.

Mr. LOVE. That may be, but your resolution does not except them. Now, do you propose—

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman from Mississippi permit me?

Mr. LOVE. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY. This is a question which deals with the next fiscal year. Now, we have dealt with the general subject of clerks for the House of Representatives in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. In the bill upon that subject which will come before Congress in the short session we shall deal with the fiscal year beginning on the 1st of July, 1899; and upon that bill, if I can have the cooperation of the gentleman from Mississippi, I will undertake to rectify the undoubted and undisputed inequalities to which he has called attention.

Mr. LOVE. I do not question the sincerity of the gentleman from Massachusetts or his desire to rectify what I believe to be a great wrong. But of course the gentleman knows that it is impossible to state what may be the action of the House upon this question when presented next winter. He will be very fortunate indeed if he succeeds in getting such a measure before Congress.

But I was going on to say, Mr. Chairman, that my objection is that all of the committees of the House will be included in this resolution, whose secretaries, or some of them at least, will have nothing whatever to do during all the summer; and there is no reason in the world why they could not go to the homes of gentlemen who are chairmen of the committees to discharge the duties of private secretary there as well as here in Washington.

As I stated the other day, I know that there are some of these committees who have a great deal of business before them, and for the chairman of such a committee another secretary is necessary. I do not question the statements that have been made on the floor by gentlemen, but if we are to inaugurate a new system, as proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, let us wait until next winter to begin, and then I will gladly join in remedying the inequalities complained of.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLMSTED. I should like to call attention to an item found in lines 16 and 17, on page 69, appropriating $1,359.95 to W. S. Vanderburg in a contested-election case.

The CHAIRMAN. That item has already been passed and adopted.

Mr. OLMSTED. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider that item, for reasons which I will state.

Mr. CANNON. What amendment does the gentleman propose?

Mr. OLMSTED. It has been stated that that item includes the expenses of taking testimony by the contestant after the legal time for taking testimony had expired. I am unable to get hold of the clerk of the committee to-day or the papers, but I think my friend from California [Mr. MAGUIRE] is familiar with the circumstances, and I will ask him if he thinks an amendment is necessary.

Mr. CANNON. Under the law, these items are placed in this bill on the certificates of the respective Committees on Elections. Now, it would not be proper to change that, as I understand, unless the certificate of a reauditing is furnished. Is there any such certificate?

Mr. OLMSTED. My recollection is that the gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE] made that certificate, and I should like to hear his statement.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Chairman, the matter to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] refers was called to my attention this afternoon. Upon an examination of the record, I find that a portion of the fee of Mr. John F. Hall, one of the attorneys of Mr. Vanderburg, was undoubtedly for services rendered in taking testimony after the time for taking testimony had expired under the law. I was on the subcommittee to whom Mr. Vanderburg's expense account was referred by Committee on Elections No. 2, and in that capacity approved it upon what seemed to me to be sufficient evidence.

In examining the expense account, I found the several items supported by proper vouchers and verified by the proper oath of the contestant. Upon an examination of the record, I found that services had been rendered by the persons whose receipts were filed with the account as vouchers. The claim of John F. Hall, attorney at law, was for services rendered in taking certain testimony in Coos County. While that testimony appears to have been taken after the time allowed by law for taking testimony had expired, part of it seemed to have been taken by consent, attorneys for both parties appearing and, pursuant to notice, witnesses being examined.

It now appears that a portion of the work of Mr. Hall was not based upon any such foundation, and as to that portion I agree that the fee charged should not be allowed. His services in taking the admissible testimony, which was printed and considered by the committee and the House, were not worth $200, the amount allowed. I have been unable, of course, to submit the matter to the full Committee on Elections since it was brought up to-day, but I have consulted such of the members as are present, and we are of the opinion that the item of attorney's fee to Mr. Hall ought to be cut down from $200 to $100. That would reduce Mr. Vanderburg's allowance by $100.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman's proposition is that the amount in the bill should be $1,259.95 instead of $1,359.95?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes, sir. Now, I want to say to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that I have not the authority of Committee on Elections No. 2 for taking this action, but I am satisfied from all that has come to my knowledge to-day that it should be done, and I am also satisfied from the positive opinions of the members present that the committee would authorize the action if in session.

Mr. CANNON. Then I ask unanimous consent to return to this item, and that the sum, by unanimous consent, be fixed at $1,259.95 instead of $1,359.95, and that the total be corrected accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked to return to the item in lines 16 and 17, page 69, and to substitute $1,259.95 for $1,359.95. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. That will necessitate a further change in line 24.

Mr. CANNON. My request for unanimous consent included the correction of the total.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that change will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. LOVE. My understanding is that all these amounts have been certified to by the Committees on Elections.

Mr. CANNON. That is correct.

Mr. STEELE. By the chairman of the Committee on Elections. The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Alexander McDowell, Clerk of the House of Representatives, the amount due for services in compiling, arranging, and preparing for the printer, reading of proof, indexing of testimony, supervision of the work, and expenses incurred in the contested elections to the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Congresses, as authorized by the act entitled "An act relative to contested elections," approved March 2, 1887, $3,128.20; and the additional sum of $2,000 to such persons as were actually engaged in the work, designated by the said Alexander McDowell, and in such proportion as he may deem just for assistance rendered in the work; in all, $5,128.20.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what proportion of this amount is appropriated for pay of cases in the Fifty-fourth Congress? Now, there were only, as I remember, in the Fifty-fourth Congress thirty-two cases—thirty-three, in fact—where there was an index, and this work was done by the Clerk of the Fifty-third Congress. When we came here in the Fifty-fourth Congress, on the very first day of the Fifty-fourth Congress, on page 7 of the RECORD of that Congress, I find a report of the Clerk of the Fifty-third Congress.

He made a report to the House of these contested-election cases, and the printing and abstracting of the evidence—his account for that work in the Fifty-fourth Congress was referred to the Committee on Elections No. 1. It was audited by that committee and was put in the deficiency appropriation bill passed in the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress. Now, we gave him the sum of $4,267.57 for this work in the Fifty-fourth Congress. If I remember aright, there were only two additional cases in the Fifty-fourth Congress to that work that was done by the Clerk of the Fifty-third Congress. One was the case of Watson against Black, of the Tenth district of Georgia, which is a case containing about 800 pages of printed matter, and the other was the case of Benoit against Boatner, which was in the Fifty-fourth Congress, containing about 250 pages.

Now, I do not understand, and I would like to have some information upon it, and therefore call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to it. This is a provision to pay to the Clerk of this House $5,128.20 for work done on contested-election cases in the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Congresses. The gentleman will find by reference to the deficiency bill of the Fifty-fourth Congress that we paid the Clerk of the Fifty-third Congress for all of those cases except those I have mentioned. There were thirty-two contested-election cases in the Fifty-fourth Congress and there were only twenty-one cases in this. In some of them there was no evidence, or very little, and in some there was not a great deal of testimony.

I would like for the chairman of the committee to inform me under what authority the Clerk presents this account for an additional allowance not only for himself but giving $2,000 for the pay of people whom he had employed to do this work; because it occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that there is a sum appropriated for this work which is a little unusual and large. We had only 31 cases in the Fifty-fifth Congress, and we had 32 in the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I suppose the gentleman and the House are familiar with the fact that the House throws this duty upon the Clerk of the House under legislation that was enacted—

Mr. BARTLETT. In 1887.

Mr. CANNON. On March 2, 1887. Now, I do not know anything about the merits of this matter. I do hold in my hand a certificate from the chairmen of the three Election Committees, Nos. 1, 2, and 3, with the names of the employees and the amount to each, and in the exact language which is inserted in this bill as to the amount and everything else. Now, whether this is too much or too little—

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand the law provides for it, but I want to call attention to the fact that in the Fifty-fourth Congress we provided a little over $4,000 when there were 32 cases, and in the Fifty-fifth Congress, when there were only 21 cases, we have an amount of $3,000 more than was paid for the same character of work in the Fifty-third Congress, there appearing here a larger sum for two-thirds of the number of cases that occurred in the Fifty-third Congress and in the Fifty-fourth Congress, when this work was done.

Mr. CANNON. Well, as I understand it, now we appropriate for the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Congresses. Now, the Fifty-sixth Congress will appropriate for the Fifty-fifth. But just how it is arranged I do not know; and the truth is that I have so much of detail to look after that when, under the law and practice, some other committee, in the performance of its duties, certifies to my committee under the law, I am always gratified to put it in.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman has a great deal to do and has performed his work, and he has done so most admirably and excellently; but I want to call his attention to this fact that I have endeavored to point out, that we paid the Clerk—

Mr. CANNON. I will ask my friend a question right there. Is he not a member of the Committee on Elections?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; I am.

Mr. CANNON. Was not this matter called to the attention of the gentleman's committee? We put it in verbatim et literatim, exactly as it was given to us by the three Committees on Elections.

Mr. BARTLETT. I know. The accounts of Mr. Kerr, the Clerk of the Fifty-third Congress, was submitted to the Fifty-fourth Congress, and he was paid. I do not know what was done by this Congress, but I do know that we are paying a large amount now for a third less cases than were disposed of in the last Congress. I do not know how to remedy it.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, I am informed by one who ought to know that the compensation is by day, or that the compensation here represents the pages. My friend will remember that twenty cases at one time may require twice as much work as twenty cases in another Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT. I can answer the gentleman's question. In the Fifty-fourth Congress there were 15,627 pages of printed matter and in the Fifty-fifth Congress 17,857 pages, and this bill gave the Clerk nearly a dollar a page for the 2,000 pages in excess of the cases in the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. CANNON. We are appropriating for the Fifty-fourth Congress now.

Mr. BARTLETT. What is that?

Mr. CANNON. We are appropriating for the Fifty-fourth Congress now.

Mr. BARTLETT. Only for the two cases I have mentioned.

Mr. CANNON. What is the motion before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no motion except to strike out the last word.

Mr. CANNON. Then I hope the Clerk will read.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

To reimburse the official reporters of the proceedings and debates of the House of Representatives and the official stenographers to committees for moneys actually paid by them from March 4, 1897, to March 4, 1898, for clerical hire and extra clerical services, $750 each, except that there shall be paid to Andrew Devine $487.50, and to Renel Small $362.50, and to John J. Cameron $240; in all, $5,490.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 71, after line 19, insert "to reimburse the assistant stenographer of committees for money actually paid by him for clerical hire and extra clerical services, $25."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why it is that this bill carries appropriations for contestants in the Fifty-fifth Congress and not in the Fifty-fourth? There were some forty-five cases in the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. CANNON. The contestants in the Fifty-fourth Congress were appropriated for during the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. MADDOX. There is a bill pending in this House to pay contestants in the Fifty-fourth Congress, of which I am one.

Mr. CANNON. That is in cases in excess of $2,000.

Mr. MADDOX. And this is in excess of $2,000.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. MADDOX. Then I beg the gentleman's pardon. But I want to say this, that I am opposed to the payment of a dollar over the $2,000 allowed by law. If I had it in my power we would not pay a cent for the contestants, for I stand here to-day as one of the victims who would never have had a contest except for the payment of $2,000 for expenses. It happened in my case that the wife of the contestant was one of the attorneys that received the most of the fee. [Laughter.] Now, I say that I am opposed wholly to this business, and if we would wipe it off the statute book there would not be one-quarter as many contests for seats in this House. I would amend it so as to pay only the party who got his case, as it is in all other courts. If this bill provides for the paying of a contestant $2,000 allowed by law, then I have nothing to say.

Mr. CANNON. That is all.

Mr. MADDOX. But if it went beyond that, I did desire to say something.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

JUDGMENTS IN INDIAN DEPREDAATION CLAIMS.

For payment of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases, certified to Congress at its present session in House Document No. 32 of this session, $31,886, and the further sum of $75,000 to pay certain judgments of the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases rendered in 1892 and 1896, and reported to Congress in Senate Executive Documents No. 7, parts 1 and 2, and Nos. 82 and 123, Fifty-third Congress, second session; in all, $106,886; said judgments to be paid after the deductions required to be made under the provisions of section 8 of the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," shall have been ascertained and duly certified by the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury, which certification shall be made as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and such deductions shall be made according to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, having due regard to the educational and other necessary requirements of the tribe or tribes affected; and the amounts paid shall be reimbursed to the United States at such times and in such proportions as the Secretary of the Interior may decide to be for the interests of the Indian service.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 79, at the end of line 5, insert "providing no one of the said judgments provided for in this paragraph shall be paid until the Attorney-General shall have certified to the Secretary of the Treasury that there exists no ground sufficient, in his opinion, to support a motion for a new trial or an appeal in said case."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Printing and binding: For printing and binding for the Navy Department, to be executed under the direction of the Public Printer, for the six months beginning July 1, 1899, $30,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 19 strike out the word "nine" and insert "eight;" so it shall read "1898."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For freight, tolls, cartage, advertising, washing of bed sacks, mattress covers, pillowcases, towels, and sheets, funeral expenses of marines, stationery and other paper, telegraphing, rent of telephones, purchase and repair of typewriters, apprehension of stragglers and deserters, per diem of enlisted men employed on constant labor for a period not less than ten days, repair of gas and water fixtures, office and barracks furniture; mess utensils for enlisted men, such as bowls, plates, spoons, knives, and forks; packing boxes, wrapping paper, oilcloth, crash, rope, twine, camphor and carbolized paper, carpenters' tools, tools for police purposes, iron safes, purchase and repair of public wagons, purchase and repair of public harness, purchase of public horses, services of veterinary surgeons and medicines for public horses, purchase and repair of hose, repair of fire extinguishers, purchase of fire hand grenades, purchase and repair of carts, wheelbarrows, and lawn mowers; purchase and repair of cooking stoves, ranges, stoves, and furnaces where there are no grates; purchase of ice, towels, soap, combs, and brushes for offices; postage stamps for foreign postage; purchase of books, newspapers, and periodicals; improving parade grounds, repair of pumps and wharves, laying drain, water, and gas pipes, water, introducing gas, and for gas, oil, and introduction and maintenance of electric lights; straw for bedding, mattresses, mattress covers, pillows, sheets.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if this applies to enlisted men in the Army or simply to the Marine Corps?

Mr. CANNON. It is for the Marine Corps. It begins on page 81 and closes at page 83.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. The reason I ask is I have had inquiries in regard to straw to be furnished for the soldiers.

Mr. CANNON. That is done by the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. And they said it would require a special act.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no. They might have said so, but the general appropriation is sufficient beyond a question.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Well, I went to see about a bill in regard to Mississippi troops, and they said that the straw for mattresses and ice for the troops would not come under the "incidentals" included in the bill, therefore there would have to be a special act. But I see this morning they have referred it to a commission, and probably that will cover the case.

Now, I want to ask the gentleman if he will go back to page 80 of the bill, line 15, where it says, "For emergency fund to meet contingencies that can not possibly be foreseen, but which constantly arise, etc., $10,000,000." It seems to me that there might be some explanation about that. I am not offering any captious objection, but I would like to be informed about it.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that this is more largely a naval war in which we are engaged than it is a land war, although the great bulk of the expense comes from the Army, because there is so much more of the Army than there is of the Navy. But there is the purchase of ships, the taking of auxiliary cruisers, and a thousand accidents that may happen from accidents of war that it is impossible to foresee. Therefore, while I have as much objection as my friend can possibly have to indefinite appropriations, yet it seems to me, after conference with the Secretary of the Navy and the fullest inquiry we could make, entirely proper and necessary that there should be a discretionary fund to meet matters that it was impossible to foresee.

Mr. LOVE. Who will have the discretion in paying out this money?

Mr. CANNON. The Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. LOVE. Will an itemized account be kept?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly; the money all has to be accounted for; the accounts must all be audited.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I wish to say that I appreciate the existing situation and stand ready to vote whatever may be needed to carry on the war; but it strikes me as a very remarkable thing that an item of this sort should go in as a mere contingent matter, and I asked for some explanation that the House might understand it.

Mr. CANNON. It struck the committee that reported the bill as a provision that nothing except a state of war could justify. Upon the best inquiry that we could make, after consultation with the Secretary of the Navy and several heads of bureaus, it seemed to be necessary, as we are to adjourn now in a few days, I hope, until December, that there should be a fund that might be called an emergency fund.

Mr. LOVE. Will the Secretary of the Navy draw on this fund without the consent or the approval of the President?

Mr. CANNON. He would not do so in fact without the approval of the President, because the latter is his superior officer; but the money is to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval station, Key West, Fla.: For dredging and filling in, $25,000.
Floating dry docks: For two floating dry docks for use on the Gulf coast, $250,000.

Mr. LOVE. Have these matters relating to naval stations and navy-yards been heretofore appropriated for by Congress?

Mr. CANNON. No.

Mr. LOVE. Has this particular work been provided for by Congress?

Mr. CANNON. Not except as it has been necessary in connection with the existence of public works.

Mr. LOVE. Has the committee investigated each of these places, and does it think the work necessary at each of them on account of war exigencies?

Mr. CANNON. We reported these appropriations after the best investigation we could give and after every possible inquiry of the Secretary of the Navy and the various heads of bureaus. Nothing is inserted here except what seemed to be absolutely necessary. We have in one or two cases cut out estimates for coaling stations and one for a steel dry dock at Portsmouth. We have cut out everything we could cut out except where the Departments, upon very thorough inquiry, convinced us that the appropriations asked were absolutely necessary from a war standpoint.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs and preservation, navy-yards: For repairs and preservation at navy-yards and stations for the six months beginning July 1, 1898, $90,000.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 22, after line 3, insert:

"The Secretary of the Navy may employ, and pay out of the appropriation for public works herein authorized, under the Bureau of Yards and Docks, such additional temporary expert aids, draftsmen, writers, and copyists as may be necessary for the preparation of plans and specifications."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The temporary force authorized by this section of this act and the clerical force and other employees appropriated for in the act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes, approved June 14, 1898, and the act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the payment of pensions and for other objects for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes, approved May 31, 1898, shall be appointed for a term not exceeding one year, as authorized, respectively, without compliance with the conditions prescribed by the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service," approved January 16, 1893.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like some explanation of this paragraph. To what extent does it wipe out the civil-service regulations?

Mr. CANNON. In the war revenue bill $100,000 was appropriated for putting its provisions immediately in force in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or elsewhere. There was one-tenth of 1 per cent allowed in connection with the bond issue that might be expended in placing the bonds. A deficiency act passed a week or two ago provided for a force of seventy-odd clerks for the Auditor's Office of the War Department and the Auditor's Office of the Navy Department, from the passage of the act up to the 31st of March next. Then there is in this bill, in round numbers, $500,000 for carrying out the revenue act just passed and temporary employees for six months in the War Department.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does that mean $500,000 appropriated for payment of temporary employees?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; none can be appointed for longer than a year. A part of them are for six months and a part of them for nine months.

Mr. STEELE. That does not interfere with any of the present force at all?

Mr. CANNON. No; not at all. The employees provided for are temporary employees in fact. Your committee on investigation found that it was not practicable to call into motion the machinery of the Civil Service Commission for the purpose of making these appointments. It was necessary to have the force, and to have it at once.

Further than that, we were told, Mr. Chairman, that the machinery of the Civil Service Commission could not be invoked without damage to the commission itself and damage to the so-called civil-service reform, because it is not adapted to the employment of emergency or temporary people. And when you undertake to make it grind out something that it is not adapted to and not intended for and which does not come within the alleged evils for which the law was originally passed, you do not improve the character of the employees you acquire under it, and you only work injury to the reform itself.

Therefore from every standpoint we found it much better, after the very fullest investigation we could give to the matter, to report this provision in the pending bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman a further question. I assume that he has made the necessary calculations. The $500,000 which is proposed to be appropriated here is to employ these additional clerks for the specific purpose contemplated for a period of six months. How many will be employed under that provision?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Alabama did not understand my answer to his former question. I will restate it. There was $100,000 carried in the revenue bill for the purpose of putting that bill into operation and force. Then provision was made for the one-tenth of 1 per cent on the bond issue to put that provision in force. In addition to that there is $500,000 appropriated here for the coming fiscal year, which is made necessary on account of the new revenue bill.

But the appointments under that provision may not exceed one year. How many clerks will be employed there is nothing at present to indicate. We do not know. There are clerks general and deputy clerks; in fact, everybody that is necessary to put the new revenue act in force; but there is no provision for their employment longer than one year.

Mr. MOODY. If the gentleman will permit me, I can state, perhaps, in answer to the gentleman from Alabama, the result of an inquiry made of the Commissioner and the Assistant Commissioner of Internal Revenue. They said that the number of clerks required for the temporary service would not exceed 30—25 to 30—and the time likely to be employed would probably not exceed three months.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to understand clearly the point the gentleman from Massachusetts has just suggested. If we are to have but twenty-five or thirty clerks, and the time that they will be employed is not to exceed three or, say, even six months, why do you appropriate $100,000 to pay thirty clerks for that length of time?

Mr. CANNON. My friend from Alabama has failed to understand the full scope of the reply of the gentleman from Massachusetts. As I understand it, he did not intend to convey the idea that this number would comprise the entire clerical force required to get the act in force, but simply that they were to be temporarily employed, being clerks in the Bureau of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. But that, as the gentleman will understand, is a very small portion of the expense. There is an army of revenue agents, a company, almost, of deputy revenue collectors, and so on. In other words, let me say to my friend—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Then, Mr. Chairman, if I can be recognized, I will take the floor in my own right to answer the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama.

In other words, it costs in round numbers now to collect $160,000,000, under the former internal-revenue law, three and one-half millions dollars. Now then, here is $150,000,000 more to be collected under the late revenue law, almost as much more as that which is collected, or has been collected heretofore, under the old law, and the estimate is that $600,000 will do the work. That is the best estimate we can get. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue so stated.

Now, he may fall short in his estimate or he may exceed it. He may not be able to do it with that sum. We did the best we could under the circumstances, and made the best estimates we could, and if he runs short it will be in the power of Congress to give something in the way of a deficiency in December next, if it shall be found necessary.

So you will see that this is not a large additional appropriation when you consider the immense amount of work to be done.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the reason I asked the question. I wanted to know if there was not before the committee some indication of the number of men proposed to be employed under this sum.

Mr. CANNON. No; the gentleman from Massachusetts inquired—which I did not—as to how many clerks would be necessary, in the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to accomplish the work. Twenty-five or thirty was the answer given. But that related to the employees of his special department. We did not go into any minute calculations or require the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to give by detail how many people would be required. That was manifestly impossible to determine in advance. If he had known just how many, and the salaries, we could have written them into the bill. But after the best investigation we could make it was determined that he would require the $500,000 in addition to the $100,000 carried by the revenue bill itself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Did the Department recommend to the Committee on Appropriations that these clerks should be selected at large as temporary clerks, or under the civil-service rules?

Mr. CANNON. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue was very clear in his response; and in addition to what he said, the Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue was equally clear—a man who has long held place under all Administrations since he was first appointed. He was perfectly clear that it was not practicable, with the law going into effect at once, to get the force under the civil-service rules.

Mr. LOVE. Now, if the gentleman will permit me a question right there for information, if I understand the language of the bill, these clerks that will be employed under this special act will not come under the civil-service law?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. LOVE. Now, when their time expires—

Mr. CANNON. They will go out.

Mr. LOVE. Will these particular employees go out, or will others be discharged and these retained?

Mr. MOODY. Oh, yes.

Mr. LOVE. These particular men that are employed without standing civil-service examination?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. NORTHWAY. They are only appointed for one year.

Mr. CANNON. They can not be appointed for longer than a year.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 8 regimental staff officers for 96 unassigned organizations, $112,800.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk reads so fast that nobody on earth can keep up with him. I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, with great deference, the meaning of the item:

For 8 regimental staff officers for 96 unassigned organizations, $112,800.

Does that mean eight staff officers for each one of those regiments?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that I am not very well posted touching the technique of the Army, if that is the proper word to use. I do not know whether it does or not.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Anything will do between friends.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, were here, he could answer that question, no doubt, better than I can; but I understand this to be for exactly what it says, for 8 regimental staff officers for 96 unassigned organizations, $112,800. The gentleman will understand that this is in the exact wording of the estimate. There has been some legislation under which there have been two calls for volunteers, and also for 10 immune regiments, and possibly some other additional regiments not mentioned, that are not yet filled.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Does the gentleman understand that this $112,800 is for the pay of eight regimental staff officers who are not yet assigned?

Mr. CANNON. It says, "For eight regimental staff officers for ninety-six unassigned organizations, $112,800."

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. That is pretty high pay for each officer.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; I think so.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I know there will be many applications for the places.

Mr. STEELE. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, there are eight staff officers in each organization. That is what it means—eight staff officers to each regiment. There are three adjutants, a quartermaster, a chaplain, a surgeon, and two assistant surgeons, making eight.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. A chaplain is a very necessary officer!

Mr. STEELE. He is very necessary.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Oh, certainly; very necessary.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The word "each" ought to be put in there.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Do you not think you ought to amend that in some way to make it more certain or to explain it?

Mr. CANNON. I think not. The clerk of our committee furnishes me with the estimate, which reads as follows:

Pay of officers of the line and staff (act of April 22, 1898, and May 4, 1898): Eight regimental staff officers for 96 unassigned organizations—

Referring to the same act—

$112,800.

Then follows:

For 119 regiments of infantry.

And so on. Now this is in the language submitted by the Department, and the Departments are generally pretty accurate about the language, because the estimates are generally submitted after consultation with the accounting officers. Unless the gentleman knows something more about it than I do—and I confess I know very little—I think it would be better to leave it in the exact language of the estimate.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. It is not my bill, and I am not charged with explanation of the item.

Mr. CANNON. I think it would be safer to let it stand as they have estimated for it, in that language.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I just wanted to call attention to it, because it looked to me as though it was susceptible of a different interpretation, and if it was to get out that eight regimental staff officers—

Mr. CANNON. Were to have that amount of money—

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Were to be assigned to 96 unassigned organizations, at $112,800, we could not rest, because many people would want those positions.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is right about that, and I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], who has been a warrior and who knows about these things and who is familiar with military affairs, for coming to my rescue, because his explanation sets the matter right.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If you insert the word "each," that will make it clear.

Mr. CANNON. If somebody had asked me whether there were eight of these staff officers for each regiment, I should have said at once, "I give it up; ask me something easy."

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I have been something of a soldier myself, and we never paid them that much.

Mr. SHAFROTH. You might insert the word "each."

Mr. PAYNE. That would make it $112,000 apiece.

Mr. CANNON. I think the safer way is to leave it as the estimate is submitted.

Mr. SAYERS. It is right just as it is.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 20 per cent increase, $2,340,980.19; in all, $14,000,881.18.

Mr. LOVE. I would like to understand what is meant by this increase of 20 per cent—$2,300,000. Will the gentleman please explain that?

Mr. CANNON. That was expressly provided by war legislation reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, and increases the pay of all men in the Army.

Mr. LOVE. The regular pay of the soldiers?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Two dollars and sixteen cents over the $13 a month to the private.

Mr. LOVE. I so understood it; but I wanted to know if that was the case.

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchase of subsistence supplies: For issue, as rations to troops, civil employees when entitled thereto, hospital matrons, general prisoners at posts, prisoners of war (including Indians held by the Army as prisoners, but for whose subsistence appropriation is not otherwise made); for sales to officers and enlisted men of the Army; for authorized issues of candles; of toilet articles, barbers', laundry, and tailors' materials, for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances, and recruits at recruiting stations; of matches for lighting public fires and lights at posts and stations and in the field; of flour used for paste in target practice; of salt and vinegar for public animals; of—

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Will the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations please tell us what they want with salt and vinegar for public animals? I know they might use salt, but I do not know what they want to use vinegar for.

Mr. CANNON. That is exactly the language of the appropriation in the Army bill, in which this appropriation is made, and exactly the language of the estimate.

Mr. STEELE. Salt and vinegar are used in case of sprains, and various other purposes.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Will the gentleman explain what they use vinegar for?

Mr. STEELE. Vinegar is used by the veterinary surgeons. If horses are sprained, there is not much better remedy than vinegar.

Mr. CANNON. These appropriations, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi, are made somewhat in detail. I think myself that it might be greatly shortened. I think that we might appropriate in four or five sentences for this whole service; but the practice has grown up, commencing from the foundation of the Government. To use such language as this, "For subsistence of the Army," for all purposes would be quite sufficient, and that would save pages and pages of detail; but so many people, legislators and common people in the country like myself, do not know as to the details here, and in Congress after Congress appropriations have been made more and more in detail, so as to convey to the mind of the legislator and the citizen some idea of what the appropriations are for.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I think that is very well, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CANNON. I am not sure but what there could be a reform enacted in this respect. The estimates might be in detail and we might appropriate by a short enactment the estimates, with such changes as we might make. I think myself that is the practice in the British Parliament; but, nevertheless, we have not got to it yet, if we ever do.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the six months beginning July 1, 1898, $44,000,000.

Mr. TODD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of line 12, page 110, after the word "eight," "forty-four" and insert "twenty;" so that it shall read "twenty millions."

Mr. TODD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of line 12, page 110, after the word "eight," "forty-four" and insert "twenty;" so that it shall read "twenty millions."

Mr. TODD. Mr. Chairman, having introduced in the House of Representatives the first resolution declaring war with Spain and recognizing the independence of the Cuban Republic, surely I feel as deep an interest and as great a responsibility regarding the successful conclusion of the war as can be felt by any member, and believing that our action in the present conflict is inspired by lofty motives, I shall gladly support every measure tending toward a speedy victory of American arms, the freedom of the brave Cubans, and the restoration of peace, with advanced prosperity and happiness to all parties to the conflict.

But, sir, while I desire to provide most generously for every legitimate need of our Government, I feel it my duty to do my part to see that the money which the people are so patriotically and freely supplying shall be wisely used; and, believing that the amount named in the bill for military transportation for the ensuing six months, $44,000,000, is greatly in excess of all possible requirements, if properly administered, I have offered this amendment. This same unfortunate condition regarding transportation was also found to permeate the Post-Office and military appropriation bills recently passed in this House, and to which I called attention at the time.

The present bill carries with it $224,055,913.58, of which $218,203,751.46 are for war expenses, being the greatest appropriation bill passed by Congress for over thirty years, or since the civil war. I regret that for the convenience of members the committee in charge of the bill did not submit a tabulated statement, showing at a single glance the most important items, at least, of this vast amount named for war expenses. But I have carefully gone through the twenty-four pages of items for the military establishment (exclusive of the twelve pages devoted to the naval establishment), and have made a brief tabulated statement of the most important items, which I submit herewith, as follows:

Pay Department.....	$45,271,831.18
Quartermaster's Department.....	91,950,000.00
Medical Department.....	54,000.00
Ordnance Department.....	12,894,625.00
Armament of fortifications.....	1,000,000.00
Engineers' Department.....	160,000.00
Gun and mortar batteries.....	2,800,000.00
Torpedo and harbor defense.....	1,300,000.00
Total.....	155,630,554.18

Of the $91,950,000 for the Quartermaster's Department, $53,000,000 is for transportation, of which $44,000,000 is asked for the six months only which commence July 1 next.

It will be seen by referring to the above table that the amount asked for transportation is approximately three times the amount provided for food and subsistence for the Army for the same period, the items for which cover a page and a half, amounting to $15,967,112.28. This transportation item is, furthermore, four times the amount required for regular supplies for the Army, which is but $11,500,000, and is nearly double the combined cost of food, subsistence, and regular supplies! It is also nearly identical with the amount needed for the entire pay of the Army—officers and men!

It should be remembered that this bill also carries with it an appropriation of $9,000,000 for transportation as "deficiency" for the present year in addition to $6,000,000 appropriated for the same purpose a couple of months ago, so that we would be appropriating, if the provisions of this bill are not amended, $59,000,000 during the present session of Congress for the single item of military transportation!

Can it be possible that it costs three times as much to carry our soldiers once across the country and back as it will to feed and care for them, or twice as much as it does to both provide their subsistence, camp equipage, and the thousand various things with which our loyal troops should be provided for a period of six months? A careful study of the facts show otherwise.

For the purpose of gaining exact and authentic information, I recently visited the War Department and spent some time there in studying the situation, and through the courtesy of the Quartermaster-General and the Superintendent of Ocean and Inland Transportation I was able to secure information bearing practically upon the question, which I respectfully submit to the House, in tabulated form and otherwise. By these tables it will be seen that the average rate now paid for the transportation of troops is approximately 1.5 cents per mile, including 150 pounds of freight or camp equipage for each soldier. Let us see what it is liable to cost for their transportation during the next six months.

We have now in the Army approximately 275,000 men, as follows:

Regular Army, including the recently authorized increase.....	61,000
First call for volunteers.....	125,000
Second call for volunteers.....	75,000
Immunes.....	10,000
Engineers.....	8,500
Total.....	274,500

For convenience, we will say there are 275,000 men. Now, suppose all of these men travel on an average 1,000 miles by land to the seat of war (which is an extravagant estimate), whip the Spanish in less than six months (which is not an extravagant estimate), and return home, they will have traveled 2,000 miles, which would amount to $30 each, or $8,250,000. Allowing each man 1,000 pounds freight for food, etc., to be transported on the average 1,000 miles at $1 per hundred pounds (or 2,000 pounds at an average haul of 500 miles), would be $10 each, amounting to $2,750,000. Estimating that 30,000 horses and mules will be required, both for the services of cavalry, transportation, etc., at $30 each for transportation, will amount to $900,000, making a total amount of $11,900,000 for inland transportation upon an exceedingly generous estimate.

Regarding the ocean transportation of troops and supplies I submit a table herewith furnished me by the Quartermaster-General's Department, by which it will be seen that we are now paying for chartered vessels for transportation on the Atlantic and the Gulf a daily rate of $20,825. Upon the Pacific per day, $5,210, a total daily expense of $26,035, which for the six months ensuing amounts to $4,686,300, which, added to the amount for inland transportation, makes a grand total of $16,586,300 for both inland and marine requirements, approximately but one-third of the amount asked for in this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TODD. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. Have these figures that the gentleman is giving us had the approval of the Secretary of War?

Mr. TODD. The figures are my own computations from data and rates which are now actually being paid, as recently given me by the War Department. I will submit for the information of the House the official tables of rates, etc., both for inland and ocean transportation, as furnished me from the office of the Quartermaster-General. The computation is made from the rates actually in force and now being paid by the Government; yet I am informed that better rates are demanded and expected by the War Department. I have in my estimates used a slightly increased number of men over those which will be in actual service; so that my estimate is surely a generous one.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. TODD. I should like five minutes longer. This is a very important matter.

Mr. STEELE. I object.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman may continue for five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Has the gentleman his matter prepared in manuscript?

Mr. TODD. I have not.

Mr. CANNON. I was going to suggest that from the ground the gentleman has laid out he can not possibly complete his remarks in five or ten minutes, and would it not answer his purpose just as well to extend them in the RECORD?

Mr. TODD. I would willingly consent to that, but I understand that the chairman of the committee is going to insist on a vote to-night, and therefore his facts and figures could not be gotten before members before they are called upon to vote. Nobody would have an opportunity to see the documents.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The objection is withdrawn, and the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. TODD. Mr. Chairman, I submit the following tables, showing the owners, names, tonnage, cost per day, etc., of the vessels now employed in the military service. The exact amount we are now paying for marine transportation on the Atlantic, the Gulf, and the Caribbean Sea in relation to the Cuban expeditions is $20,825 a day. The rate per day of those on the Pacific Ocean amount to $5,210, making a total daily rate for all marine transportation of $26,035.

The following information has been furnished me by the War Department:

I desire to call attention to some of these items. The railroads charge the Government $58.45 from San Francisco, Cal., to Mount Gretna, Pa., whereas their present open rate to the public is but $25 to New York, a longer distance. If they reply that this is below cost and simply a "rate war," it is no good answer, for the purpose and result of rate wars is to ultimately fasten more firmly upon the people extortionate rates. In the meantime the roads having been "wrecked" by bad management, so that the directors can freeze out the smaller stockholders and secure control of the stock at a low price.

I am informed $2,900 was recently demanded by each of the two short lines from Washington to Tampa, Fla., for hauling a hospital train of empty coaches which the Government had provided, which was double a fair rate, and as these two roads had combined to bid the same they expected to be able to secure their extravagant price and divide the profit. But some less wealthy lines were found who would haul the train by a longer route for $1,500. Again, a rate had been made from some northern points to Chickamauga, Tenn., at $3, but these same roads asked an advanced rate from Washington, which is a shorter distance. It was found that the Government could save money by sending the troops first north and then back through Washington again; but when the roads saw the ridiculous position they were in they of course made the same rate as for the longer distance.

When the military appropriation bill was recently before us providing $6,000,000 for railroad transportation against only $2,750,000 for subsistence of the Army, I objected to such allowance, and called the attention of Congress to the fact that after a rate of $7.20 had been fixed for the transportation of the Michigan Naval Reserve from Detroit to Norfolk, Va., it was raised without authority of law to over $12 through the action of President Thompson of the Pennsylvania Railroad and President Blanchard of the "Trunk Line Pool," both of whom had asked and received permission from the Secretary of War to take charge of the Government transportation business, maintain the "pool" rates, and as "Government officers" contract with and to themselves as railroad and pool presidents at fabulous rates.

I immediately introduced in Congress, as it will be remembered, a resolution of inquiry, directed to the Secretary of War, for information as to the appointment of railroad officials to control Government business, asking the rates paid, whether competition existed, etc. I am glad to learn the publicity given this matter and the public disapproval so emphatically pronounced caused a halt in the proposed appointments.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that my amendment will prevail, and that by a wise expenditure of the people's money, combined with the heroism of our Army and Navy, already so splendidly demonstrated to the world, with the patriotic cooperation of our citizens, a successful conclusion of the present war may be speedily reached in the interest of justice and humanity.

And may the inhabitants of the West Indies and the Philippines, rescued from their oppressors and enjoying the blessings of civil liberty guaranteed by our Republic, join the other nations of the earth in renewed reverence for our nation and its flag! [Applause.]

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk, continuing the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For publishing charts, and for extra labor required in printing and issuing charts of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, to be expended under the direction of the Superintendent, fiscal year 1898, $5,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 117, at the end of line 21, insert "to continue available during the fiscal year 1899."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, continuing the reading of the bill, read as follows:

PRINTING AND BINDING.

For printing and binding for the Treasury Department, $25,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 117, after line 24, insert "for establishing, equipping, and maintaining, at such places as the President may direct, meteorological observation stations in connection with the public defense, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, to be expended under the direction of the President, $75,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, from this point to the end of the bill the appropriations are for audited claims, and I will ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the bill.

Mr. LOVE. On page 118 are appropriations for the employment of additional Capitol police. I want to inquire if the amendment we adopted last Friday applied to this number of police, giving them an extra month's wages?

Mr. CANNON. No; that was the date of the 1st of June.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the reading of the remainder of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to offer the following amendment:

On page 31, after line 2, insert:

"BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS IN AND AROUND WASHINGTON.

"For an assistant surveyor and draftsman for the fiscal year 1899, $1,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 43, line 1, insert "for engraving the illustrations sent necessary for the monographs and bulletins to remain available during the fiscal year 1899, $10,000."

"Also for printing and binding the monographs and bulletins, to remain available during the fiscal year 1899, $30,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON, by unanimous consent, offered the following amendment; which was adopted:

On page M, in line 12, strike out "expense of telegraphing" and insert in lieu thereof "miscellaneous expenditures."

Mr. CANNON. There is one matter which by agreement was reserved—the provision in reference to the jail in the Indian Territory.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I offered an amendment the other day which I now withdraw and ask consent to offer a substitute.

There being no objection, the following amendment (by Mr. CURTIS of Kansas) was read, and agreed to:

In line 16, page 53, strike out "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "seventy-five."

Mr. CANNON. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a recommendation that it pass as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DALZELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10691) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with a recommendation that the bill as amended by the Committee of the Whole do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think a separate vote will be demanded on the amendments.

There being no objection, the question was taken on agreeing to the amendments; and they were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. R. 175. Joint resolution providing for the printing of additional copies of certain volumes of Decisions of the Department of the Interior Relating to Public Lands for sale and distribution—to the Committee on Printing.

S. 4783. An act providing for the public printing and binding and distribution of public documents, approved January 12, 1895—to the Committee on Printing.

S. 346. An act providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 1114. An act for the establishment of a light and fog signal on or near Sabine Bank, Texas—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 1618. An act to authorize the President to place William T. Godwin on the retired list, with the rank of first lieutenant—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4741. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge over Tombigbee River, in the State of Mississippi—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 4744. An act granting a pension to Mary E. Hatch—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3872. An act for the relief of Dr. John B. Read—to the Committee on Claims.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 6388. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph R. Mathers;

H. R. 7844. An act to increase the pension of Mary Broggan;

H. R. 6098. An act to correct the military record of N. Ward Cady, late major Second Mounted Rifles, New York Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge;

H. R. 9729. An act granting an increase of pension to William L. Smithson;

H. R. 4961. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Osborn;

H. R. 6379. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph C. Berry, alias Joseph White;

H. R. 8861. An act granting an increase of pension to George H. Givens;

H. R. 9338. An act to restore to the State of New York the flag carried by the One hundred and fourth New York Volunteer Infantry;

H. R. 7314. An act for the relief of John B. Tyre;

H. R. 7696. An act granting an increase of pension to William Christenberry;

H. R. 7321. An act granting an increase of pension to Lauritz Olsen;

H. R. 8181. An act granting a pension to John A. Bingham;

H. R. 619. An act granting an increase of pension to Frank Rockwith; and

H. R. 3243. An act for the relief of Cordell B. Green, Company D, Sixteenth Michigan Infantry.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3515. An act granting an increase of pension to May L. Page;

S. 2541. An act granting a pension to Clara R. Rodgers;

S. 4533. An act to increase the pension of Lucinda Booth;

S. 914. An act to compel street-railway companies in the District of Columbia to remove abandoned tracks, and for other purposes; and

S. 484. An act granting an increase of pension to Carlton W. Muzzy.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. ROBBINS, indefinitely, on account of business.

To Mr. DAVIDSON of Wisconsin, for one week, on account of important business.

RECLAMATION OF ARID LANDS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it shall be in order on Wednesday, the 22d day of June, 1898, immediately after the reading of the Journal, to consider House bill No. 9994, entitled "A bill for the reclamation of arid lands, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. From what committee does this come?

Mr. SHAFROTH. From the Committee on Public Lands. It is a unanimous report. I do not think it will take over fifteen or twenty minutes to dispose of it.

Mr. CANNON. It does not make any appropriation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. None whatever. It is simply amendatory of the law now in force, known as the Carey Act.

The SPEAKER. It does not make any appropriation of money, but makes an appropriation of land.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Carey Act granted 1,000,000 acres of arid land to the various arid-land States. On account of certain provisions in that act it has been found inoperative except as to Wyoming. This bill, which has been framed by the Public Lands Committee after a number of meetings and upon consultation with engineers, formulates a plan by which the law can be taken advantage of by these various States.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to the consideration of this bill (subject to the priority of appropriation bills) if the gentleman will consent to it being considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly. I have no objection to that. The bill meets with the approval of the Interior Department.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that immediately after the reading of the Journal on Wednesday next the bill the title of which has been read by the Clerk shall be in order to be considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I object.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

Mr. BABCOCK. I renew my request for unanimous consent to consider District business next Wednesday.

Mr. LOUD. I do not think the gentleman ought to make that request in the absence of the gentleman who has persistently objected.

Mr. BABCOCK. He has no objection to anything on our Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is ordered accordingly.

And then, on motion of Mr. CANNON (at 5 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of James N. Maples against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers together with a copy of a report submitting plans and estimates for the improvement of Hillsboro Bay—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 21, 1898.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 5880) to vest in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia control of street parking in said District;

A bill (H. R. 6149) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, of the District of Columbia, the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 8581) for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10200) to repeal an act of Congress, approved March 2, 1893, entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10280) to require the Brightwood Railway Company to abandon its overhead trolley on Kenyon street, between Seventh and Fourteenth streets, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, and Mr. RICHARDSON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the concurrent resolution of the House providing for the distribution of the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PERKINS, Mr. CHICKERING, and Mr. RICHARDSON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 1726) concerning attorneys and marshals of the United States;

A bill (S. 4738) to authorize the Kansas, Oklahoma and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Chillico Indian Reservation, Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 4750) granting right of way through the Pikes Peak Timber Land Reserve and the public lands to the Cripple Creek District Railway Company;

A bill (S. 4759) to authorize the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company to straighten and restore the channel of the South Canadian River, in the Indian Territory, at the crossing of said railroad; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 168) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to refund and return to the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company $15,335.76, in accordance with the decision of the Secretary of the Interior dated March 3, 1898.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10691) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

MEMORIAL.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut presented the memorial of Sarah W. Bulkley and sundry other members of the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Connecticut, remonstrating against the use of the national flag for advertising purposes; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9195) granting a pension to Foster C. Carl, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9140) granting an increase of pension to Felix Tait, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4977) granting a pension to Mary Hannah Clark, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8670) granting a pension to Pryor Perkins, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report, accompanied by an amendment, relative to the claim of Jeronemus S. Underhill for further compensation for the construction of the ironclad steam battery Modoc, etc., intended to be proposed to the bill (S. 3546) for the reference of certain claims against the Government of the United States to the Court of Claims; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself April 19, 1898, relative to the appropriation of $280,000 for the payment of awards under condemnation for land taken for the extension of Connecticut avenue and Florida avenue to the Waterside drive, etc., intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

PAY OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. MORGAN, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report statements before the Select Committee on the Construction of the Nicaragua Canal June 15, 16, and 17, 1898, be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

MARY J. BROWN.

Mr. GALLINGER. On Friday last I reported adversely from the Committee on Pensions the bill (H. R. 4973) for the relief of Mary J. Brown, and it was indefinitely postponed. I move a reconsideration of the vote whereby the bill was postponed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL AMERICAN BANK.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that Senate bill No. 3414, to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference by the incorporation of the International American Bank, be printed as it passed the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10891) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ANNEXATION OF THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution 259.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 259) to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President—

Mr. ROACH. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me a moment?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege somewhat personal to myself. My attention has been called to an alleged interview in yesterday's Evening Star of this city. It is in the column headed as follows:

On annexation—Senators express their views on the Hawaiian question—A majority favor the resolution—Many think the opposition will soon break down—Few will filibuster.

Among the interviews, or alleged interviews, is the following:

AN ABSOLUTE NECESSITY.

Senator ROACH (Democrat, North Dakota): "My own opinion is that the annexation of Hawaii is an absolute necessity for this country at the present time. We have practically destroyed the neutrality of this little Republic by coaling there, and must fight for it under any circumstances; and as that is the case, we had better own it when it comes as a free gift. The Nicaragua Canal, which will be built in the near future, makes the ownership of these islands a necessity for the United States. The Philippine Islands is another matter. We are taking possession of them as a war measure, and that can be considered in the future. My own feeling is in favor of staying here all summer, if that is necessary, to secure the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands."

Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of commenting on this interview. The alleged statements are not mine. I never made use of any such expression, for the very good reason that I have spoken to no one, newspaper man or other, in that way. Those with whom I have conversed, my colleagues here on the floor and persons outside, know that I have always been opposed to the annexation of Hawaii.

Now, I am not inclined to charge and I do not wish to think that this is a willful misrepresentation. I would rather think that a journal such as the Evening Star has always been supposed to be would not descend to any such misrepresentation of a person in my position. I would rather think that it is the mistake, probably, of some raw interviewer who has mistaken the sentiments of some other Senator for my own. In that view of the case I make this statement and let the matter drop.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, just before the outbreak of the present war it was loudly claimed by the advocates of Hawaiian annexation that a majority of the people of this country were with them. If this was really the condition, it came through feeding the people on fine phrases until there was no room left for the hard food of truth. They were not convinced by argument. They had been carried away by catch-words: "Manifest destiny," "the logic of events," "now is the golden hour," "the mastery of the Pacific." The simile of "ripe fruit falling into the lap" has been a favorite with many, unmindful of the warning of the poet in the matter of sea fruit:

The Dead Sea fruit that tempts the eye
But turns to ashes on the lips.

The serious study of public questions is a good deal like work. It is easier to float gayly along on an intoxicating tide of sentimental gush.

And now the Philippines be upon us. The nation, shorn of its judgment, is led captive by its emotions. We are to establish ourselves permanently in the far East, and must have a coaling station in mid-Pacific as a basis for aggressive action. Under a passing stress of war we are to be pressed into taking a first step in imperialism—a policy which may benefit the favored few, but to the ordinary mortal it means the path to the barracks or possibly the poorhouse. All this at the precise time when we should avoid compromising ventures. Europe already questions our sincerity in the declaration touching Cuba. The seizure of Hawaii would remove any doubt as to our all-round land-grabbing intentions. Giving no heed to the war whoop, we should consider this subject dispassionately.

Annexation might help Hawaii itself. But our duty requires us to look at this question from a purely selfish standpoint. Unless this measure is clearly to the advantage of the United States, we must cast it out.

While annexation ought not to be permitted without a full and free expression on the part of the Hawaiians, still it is not material whether the Hawaiian population, in mass or in any proportion, desire annexation or not. It is for them to show a clean bill of political health as a condition precedent to admission. The men in the bowels of the wooden horse were anxious to enter Troy, but they proved undesirable citizens after they were let in. Are we bound to admit to our domestic circle every wanderer who raps at our door? Before we enter into a business partnership we scrutinize. Before entering into a political partnership we should be more careful still, for the bonds are more difficult to dissolve. We owe the Hawaiians much. In times past they have sent us bananas and we have returned them fleas and gunpowder. They have sent us pineapples and we have returned them muskets, mosquitoes, and the measles. There is an uncomfortable balance against us, but to demand annexation to square accounts is asking too much.

Putting aside all considerations of the constitutionality of this resolution and pinning ourselves down strictly to the question of expediency, are there any common-sense grounds for the acquisition of these islands? Will the diverse peoples which inhabit them bring a strengthening element to our body politic? Are they of sufficient commercial and strategic value to warrant a large outlay of money? I believe that all these questions may be safely answered in the negative.

The area of the islands is not extensive, a little over 6,000 square miles. Of this only about one-quarter is fit for cultivation. The interior of the islands is devoted to raising volcanoes. If the United States is in search of mountain property, they can not do better. But one would think that the "Rockies" ought to suffice in this line. A narrow strip along the shore, of intermittent fertility, is devoted to raising cane—sugar cane. In the sea grow an abundance of fish and tidal waves. The climate is mild and equable. There is an inviting stanza that touches our sensibilities:

Come to this land of the sunset sea,
Where the year is wrapped in golden weather.
Where the months are strung on sunbeam threads
And clasped with roses and pinks together.

Nothing but sunbeams and flowers becomes monotonous to distraction. They cloy like a steady diet of sugar candy. For nine months of the year the wind is constantly in the northeast—no fitful breeze, but a steady blow; something between a zephyr and a typhoon. During the rest of the year, by way of compensation, it blows from the southwest.

In trying to take this Hawaiian rainbow apart, I have not confined my reading to the special pleas of the pamphleteers. From what appears to be an unprejudiced source, I quote words written some years ago, before sugar had become king, and before the importation of Mongolian and Portuguese laborers:

The Hawaiian Islands can hardly be regarded as a field for emigration. Farming, as we understand it, is unknown. The dearth of insectivorous birds seriously affects the cultivation of the soil. The narrow gorges, in which terraced "patched cultivation" is so successful, offers no temptations to a man with the world before him. The larger areas require labor, and labor is not to be had. Though wheat and other cereals mature, attacks of weevils prevent their storage, and all the grain and flour consumed is imported from California. Beef is plentiful and sells for enough to pay for cutting up the carcass. Cacao, cinnamon, and allspice are subject to an apparently ineradicable blight. The blight which has attacked the coffee shrub is so severe that the larger plantations have been dug up, and coffee is now raised by patch culture, mainly among the guava shrub which fringes the forest. Oranges suffer from blight also, and some of the finest groves have been cut down. Cotton suffers from the ravages of a caterpillar.

The mulberry tree, which, from its rapid growth, would be invaluable to silk growers, is covered with a black and white blight. Sheep are at present very successful, but in some localities the spread of the pestilent oat burr is depreciating the value of their wool. The forests, which are essential to the well-being of the island, are disappearing in some quarters, owing to the attacks of a grub as well as the ravages of cattle. Cocoanuts, bananas, yams, sweet potatoes, and kaho are free from blight, and so are potatoes and rice. While everyone can live abundantly and without the sweat of the brow, but few can make money, owing to the various forms of blight, the scarcity of labor, and the lack of a profitable market. Settlements are disappearing, valley lands are falling out of cultivation, and hilo grass and guava scrub are burying the traces of a former population.

In 1896 the total value of imports into Hawaii was about $7,000,000. Of this the United States contributed a little less than $5,000,000. This is a commerce in which other countries can not compete with us, and no change in the political condition of the islands would deprive us of it. In 1896 there was exported of rice, $195,000; bananas, $125,000; hides, $60,000; coffee, $53,000. Leaving out sugar, these figures show the relative importance of the chief products of the islands and also the insignificance of the coffee crop.

The total value of exports for 1896 was $15,515,000, of which sugar figures for $14,932,000. With the exception of $163 worth, all this sugar came to the United States. If the sugar imported into the United States had paid a duty of 2 cents a pound, some $7,000,000 would have gone into the United States Treasury. Speaking roundly, in 1896, of the fifteen and a half million dollars of exports, but half a million was made up of products other than sugar. It is evident that sugar is supreme in Hawaii. All other industries are insignificant. In the production of sugar large capital is essential to pecuniary success. Some forty capitalists control the sugar industry of the islands. There were in their employ in 1896, 23,780 laborers. Of these, there were 1,615 Hawaiians, 2,268 Portuguese, 12,593 Japanese, 6,289 Chinese, 115 South Sea Islanders, and 600 of all other nationalities. About half of all these men are contract laborers, living under a condition of virtual chattel slavery, a condition that the present Republic has not seen fit to remedy.

These men are paid from $12.50 to $15 per month, without board. Practically the Mongolians produce the sugar of the islands. They work for wages that white men would not accept, and they suffer hardships and privations that white men could not endure. American laborers who may migrate to Hawaii in the hope of betterment, if they continue to exist at all, would rapidly degenerate. They would succumb to their surroundings, stained like the dyer's hand by the element it works in.

The Mongolian is essential to the profitable production of sugar. It is admitted that the undertaking would be a financial failure without him. Broadly speaking, sugar is all there is to the Hawaiian Islands commercially, and the Mongolian is all there is to sugar, except the big capitalist. The big capitalist is afraid of the abrogation of the present treaty; hence the annexation project, which is a clumsy cover for a mercenary scheme. Saccharine trickles out all around it; the trail of sugar is over it all. It is quite time that this assertive commodity gave this Legislature a respite.

But lands, imports, exports, manufactures, money do not make a nation. It is men—men strong in their ability to toil, firm set in those civic virtues that alone make self-government possible. In the words of an eminent divine:

The greatness of America is in her democracy. America, as no other nation, honors manhood, consecrates its rights and gives it the freedom to develop its powers and satisfy its ambition. America is the nation of the people, and to become of the people of America it suffices to be man.

Do the inhabitants of Hawaii rise to the high requirements of American citizenship? In 1896 there were 109,020 inhabitants in the Hawaiian Islands. Of these there were 31,019 full-blooded Hawaiians, 8,435 part Hawaiians, 24,407 Japanese, 21,616 Chinese, 15,191 Portuguese, 2,266 Americans, and 1,538 subjects of Great Britain. From these figures it will be seen that the three important races, numerically, in the islands are the Hawaiians proper, the Mongolians, and the so-called Portuguese.

These three races figure 100,000 out of a population of 109,000. The Hawaiian is an insouciant, indolent creature. With him a longing for repose is a gift of nature. He is more inclined to aesthetics than to ethics. He delights in flowers that grow without cultivation, in listening to music, and in seeing other people dance. Intellectually and industrially he lags superfluous on the scene. After a century's contact with civilization his race has dwindled from 400,000 to 40,000. The white man has stamped out his religion, his traditions. His lands have slipped away from him. He no longer has a voice in the Government. It does not lie in human nature for him to be friendly to the white man, and he would prove a permanent menace to our Government.

The Mongolian—the gentle heathen—we are already acquainted with. Such a citizen is he that we have thought fit to deal with him after the Draconian method.

There was a provision in the treaty now withdrawn, which is tacked onto this resolution, seeking to prevent the Chinese now in Hawaii from removing to other parts of the United States in the event of annexation. In other words, persons safely within our borders and guiltless of any offense against our laws are forbidden from moving freely throughout our territory. I would like to be a Chinaman—not for a great while—just long enough to test this monstrous doctrine. It looks very much like a return to the days when the serfs were part and parcel of the soil.

The so-called Portuguese is a mixture of many bloods, and all inferior. He came from the Island of Madeira and not from Portugal. He is a degraded peon, without a single quality that goes to make up the acceptable American citizen.

Senators on this floor have lately taxed their ingenuity in framing bills to exclude from the United States the compatriots of Hofer, Kosciusko, Kosuth, and Garibaldi, and now they ask us to swallow at a gulp this variegated agglomeration of the fag-ends of humanity. But this unsavory population is not all that we will have to swallow. At the foot of an insurmountable cliff there juts out from the Island of Molokai a low-lying, narrow peninsula, girt about by the impassable ocean. On this strip of land are segregated some fourteen hundred lepers—doomed beings, who have shut to themselves the doors of their own sepulcher.

Stevenson writes from personal experience:

On landing on Molokai you behold the stairs crowded with abominable deformations of our common manhood, and find yourself in the midst of such a population as only now and then surrounds us in the horror of delirium. As we move on, every fourth face forms a blot upon the landscape. We visit the hospital and see the butt ends of human beings lying there almost unrecognizable, but still breathing, still thinking, still remembering. It is a pitiful place to visit and a hell to dwell in. Here one breathes the atmosphere of affliction, disease, and physical disgrace.

Molokai is neglected by travelers. None of the gentlemen who recently went from Washington to Hawaii for investigation visited it. This is strange, because this leper colony is unique the world over. It is the most interesting point in the island, pathologically speaking. Leprosy is a mysterious disease, about which but two things are definitely known: It is not hereditary and it is contagious. Dr. Morrow, in the North American Review, writes:

That in addition to the lepers in Molokai there are probably two or three times as many at large in whom the disease is latent or in the incubative stage, yet none the less sure to develop. It is probable that with the relaxation of our strict regulations on the Pacific coast, which may be assumed would follow annexation, many lepers would, in their desire to escape Molokai, emigrate to this country. The principal danger would come from the establishment of more intimate commercial relations, the opening of new enterprises inviting capital and labor, and consequent thereon the influx of Americans into the islands and their exposure to contact with the tainted population.

That such contact is not devoid of danger is evident from the number of foreigners who contract the disease. In the event of annexation it would be idle to think of confining leprosy to the islands, or rather excluding it from this country, by quarantine measures. In its earlier stage leprosy defies detection, and no system of quarantine has ever been devised which would exclude the importation of a disease so little manifest on ordinary inspection as leprosy; only the more advanced cases could be detected. There would seem to be no reasonable doubt that the annexation of Hawaii would create conditions favorable to the dissemination of the seeds of leprosy in this country. Experience shows that in all countries where leprosy has become epidemic its advance is insidious. It spreads slowly, and before the health authorities awaken to the realization of danger it has made such headway that its further progress can not be arrested. All of these facts should be carefully considered and their importance from a sanitary point of view carefully weighed by our legislative authorities before deciding upon the annexation of Hawaii with its leprosy population.

Dr. Morrow estimates that more than 10 per cent of the Hawaiian race is affected with leprosy. Another writer puts it at 5 per cent of the total population. Of course accurate leper statistics are not to be obtained. The Hawaiian officials are dumb on this subject, and Government publications are significantly silent.

That portion of the President's annual message which treats of Hawaii is a feat in composition. How carefully he has lifted the English language over the rough spots—the many difficulties that beset this question. Out of verbal confusion rings one clear utterance:

Every consideration of dignity and honor requires the confirmation of the treaty.

Dignity is a matter of taste, and need not be discussed. If honor requires annexation, conversely those who oppose confirmation are lacking in the point of honor. This is a grave charge, but one which neither history nor the humanities will sustain. A handful of aliens have traded the natives out of their birthright, and we are asked in the name of honor to confirm their title. A few conspirators, aided by a United States minister, acting without specific authority, have overthrown the accepted, legitimate Government of the islands. They have substituted an oligarchy of their own, and now, in the name of honor, we are asked to stamp with our approval their proceedings. Since the advent of the white man every leaf in the history of Hawaii is either red with blood or black with intrigue and jobbery. In the name of honor we are asked to bind up these tarnished pages in the book of records of this Republic. It is travesty to dress up this political manikin of the further seas in the garb of honor. It is a misfit, a waste of good material.

If annexation is to harden into fact, one of two things will happen: Either Hawaii will become a State, a rotten borough, with two representatives on this floor, or it will remain a Territory in perpetuity, a proconsulate, a condition repugnant to our institutions. If such a political programme is to prevail, our idea of manhood equality before the law is simply a passing show, a piece of theatrical machinery to be relegated to the "property room," never again to be trundled out upon the stage.

I am not here in a narrow spirit. I propose to legislate for the welfare of the whole nation. Still I can not refrain from asking myself this question: In the region of country from which I come, universal political contamination aside, what direct interest have the people in this mirage of the Pacific? That some Mercutio of ours may lay down his life in this masquerade of mock democracy is probable. That we will throw away good money in this venture is certain. Beyond these things, Hawaii will have no more existence for us than the Island of Monte Christo.

In his message the President implies that three-quarters of a century of American diplomacy has ripened into a necessity for annexation. I do not read history in that light. In 1842 President Tyler wrote:

Hawaii should be respected and all its rights strictly and conscientiously regarded. It is deemed not unfit to make the declaration that our Government seeks no peculiar advantages, no exclusive control over the Hawaiian Government, but is content with its independent existence, and anxiously wishes for its security and prosperity.

In 1843 Mr. Webster, as Secretary of State, entered into a treaty agreement with England and France to keep their hands off the Hawaiian Islands. He writes:

We seek no control over the Hawaiian Government, nor any undue influence whatever. Our only wish is that the integrity and independence of the Hawaiian territory may be scrupulously maintained.

In 1849 President Taylor said:

We desire that the islands may maintain their independence and that other nations may concur with us in this sentiment.

In 1850 Mr. Clayton, Secretary of State, agreed with this view.

On July 14, 1851, Mr. Webster wrote:

In acknowledging the independence of the islands and of the government established over them it (namely, the United States) was not seeking to promote any peculiar object of its own. What it did, and all that it did, was done openly in the face of day, in entire good faith, and known to all nations.

 This Government still desires to see the nationality of the Hawaiian Government maintained, its independent administration of public affairs respected, and its prosperity and reputation increased. But while thus disposed to exercise sinister influence itself over the councils of Hawaii, or to overawe the proceedings of its government by the menace or the actual application of superior military force, it expects to see other powerful nations act in the same manner.

In 1851 President Fillmore declared:

The islands should not pass under the control of any great maritime state, but should remain in an independent condition, and so be accessible and useful to the commerce of all nations.

Mr. Blaine wrote on November 19, 1881:

The Government of the United States has, with unvarying consistency, manifested respect for the independence of the Hawaiian Kingdom and an earnest desire for the welfare of its people.  The Government of the United States has always avowed, and now repeats, that under no circumstances will it permit the transfer of the territory or sovereignty to any of the great European powers.

In 1867 Secretary Bayard said to our Minister Merrill:

As is well known, no intent is cherished or policy entertained by the United States which is otherwise than friendly to the autonomic control and independence of Hawaii.

James A. Garfield declared:

Hawaiian annexation would weaken the power of our people and Government.

In this unbroken chain of opinion there is not one word which suggests annexation. "Hands off all round" has been our consistent policy in the past, and autonomy ought to be our plan in the future.

The conduct of the friends of annexation has been somewhat reprehensible. Not content with importing the President of a sister Republic to awe this Legislature, not long ago they brought into this Chamber a map of the Pacific Ocean. This confronted us day after day like a threatening cloud. On their map they painted lurid streaks "that did the multitudinous sea incarnadine"—streaks that burnt into the retina a bloodshot vision not to be dispelled. But this day and night mare has not been without its uses. How edifying to watch lines scurrying from all over the globe, concentrating irresistibly on this magnetic speck in midocean! The shooting star of empire at last has found a resting place. And then these converging lines form a web which recalls our happy childhood and the recitation:

"Will you walk into my parlor?"

Said the spider to the fly;

"Tis the prettiest little parlor

That ever you did spy."

And what a walk it is! Hawaii is farther from anywhere else than any other spot on earth. Falkland is 6,379 miles away; the Nicaragua Canal, 4,210; Auckland, 3,350; Sitka, 2,395; while Japan, our rival for the Hawaiian hand, is in the seductive proximity of 3,399 miles.

But it seems that it is distance that lends enchantment to the strategic eye. From the Washington Post of December 10, 1897, I quote:

There are few men in the country as well qualified to speak in regard to Hawaiian matters as Lieut. Col. Charles F. Egan, United States Army, one of the most accomplished gentlemen in Uncle Sam's service. Speaking with friends at the Elbitt yesterday, Colonel Egan said: "Now is the golden opportunity of the United States to annex Hawaii. The time may never be so favorable again if we let the present chance pass. The argument that the country is too far away is absurd; in fact, the distance is rather an advantage. It will give an opening for our ships of war and will be an additional reason for the upbuilding of our Navy."

Other Army and Navy officers have expressed themselves in the same strain. It is natural they should do so. On any proposition looking toward an increase of either branch of the service their answer is ready-made. I do not accept professional soldiers as my guides in public policy. It is true we are a fighting people—our graveyards attest it. But we are not a belligerent power. May Heaven preserve us from such a fate. What makes England great is her formidable navy. What has made us great in the past is the absence of heavy armaments. It is the one undisputed advantage that we have over all civilized nations. Thomas Jefferson does not agree with Colonel Egan in the doctrine of dispersal. He wrote to President Monroe, in 1809, touching the proposed annexation of Cuba:

It will be objected to our receiving Cuba that no limit can be drawn to our future acquisitions. Cuba can be defended by us without a navy; and this develops the principle which ought to limit our views. Nothing should ever be accepted which would require a navy to defend it.

Secretary Frelinghuysen wrote to Mr. Langston under date of June 20, 1893:

The policy of this Government, as declared on many occasions in the past, has tended toward avoidance of possessions disconnected from the main continent.

In 1884 he said to the same minister:

A conviction that a fixed policy, dating back to the origin of our constitutional Government, was considered to make it inexpedient to attempt territorial aggrandizement which would require maintenance by a naval force in excess of any yet provided for our national uses, has led this Government to decline territorial acquisitions. Even as simple coaling stations such territorial acquisitions would involve responsibilities beyond their utility. The United States has never deemed it needful to their national life to maintain impregnable fortresses along the world's highways of commerce.

William E. Gladstone writes of the destiny of this Republic in his Kin Beyond the Seas:

The United States has the natural base of the greatest continuous empire that has ever been established by man, and the distinction between a continuous empire and one dispersed over the sea is vital. America will probably become what we are now, the head servant in the great household of the world, because her service will be most and the ablest; for the growth in one century from 3,000,000 to 65,000,000 encourages the belief that in 1900 America will have 500,000,000 of people.

On the subject of naval expansion I quote from an able paper written by M. S. Stuyvesant, of St. Louis:

I do not believe that we need what is known as "sea power" for use outside of our own waters. To put it in another way, we will not have to keep pace with England and the continental powers in this expensive matter of building battle ships if our coasts are impregnable, because—

1. We have no foreign colonies to defend.
2. We are not in the business of appropriating the lands of defenseless people and have no "zones of influence" to squabble over.
3. We have no coaling stations scattered all over the world to fortify and maintain connection with.
4. Our chances of having to go to war would be materially lessened. No nation would be anxious to quarrel with us if they could not hurt us. We can safely leave the struggle for preponderant sea power to other nations less fortunately situated, if only our coast defenses are in condition to repel attack.

On the strategic advantages of Hawaii Capt. A. T. Mahan has been appealed to and has dutifully come to the front. He says:

Too much stress can not be laid on the immense disadvantage to us of any maritime enemy having a coaling station well within 2,500 miles, as this is, of every point of our coast line from Puget Sound to Mexico. Were there many others available we might find it difficult to exclude them all. There is, however, but one. Shut out from the Sandwich Islands as a coal base, an enemy is thrown back for supplies of fuel to distances of 3,500 or 4,000 miles, or between 7,000 and 8,000 miles going and coming, an impediment to sustained maritime operations well nigh prohibitive. * * * It is rarely that so important a factor in the attack or defense of a coast line—of a sea frontier—is concentrated in a single position, and this circumstance renders it doubly imperative upon us to secure it if we righteously can.

According to Captain Mahan, with these islands in our possession a navy seeking to attack our coast would have to steam some 7,000 miles without re-coaling. He speaks of an enemy being thus thrown back for supplies. What possible enemies have we to encounter in the Pacific? There are but two—England and Japan. Frowning over our frontier, near the southern extremity of Vancouver Island, is the first-class naval arsenal of Esquimaux. With this and her master navy England is indifferent as to whether we hold Hawaii or not. The Japanese are a long-headed people. They are not given to running on quixotic errands. They do not dream of attacking our Pacific coast. If they ever attempt it, their ships would have no need of re-coaling on the return trip.

Captain Mahan's opinion and my crude notions of strategy do not agree. I have always understood that in war the more one spreads out the more one is weakened, the more one concentrates the more one is strengthened. The advocates of annexation constantly refer to Hawaii as an outpost. An outpost is a detachment from the main body thrown forward for purposes of observation, retreating and reinforcing the main body when occasion requires. In the event of war Hawaii could not fall back, it could not fall forward, and it would refuse to sink into the sea. It would have to be defended by fortifications and guarded by a fleet.

It is but fair to admit that Hawaii has its attractive features, its allurements. To the world-stroller it offers a blissful sojourn—a life with something of the Garden of Eden about it—plenty of leisure and few clothes. Here the traveler breathes the fragrance of flowers, regales himself on rich fruits, and revels in the ever-tepid sea. When the sensuous palls upon him, there is subject for moralizing. He can climb Mount Kilauea, peep into its crater, which does the most active business on the islands, and ponder over the possibilities of the future.

At nightfall he seeks the shelter of the lanai, a shed with live trees for posts and interwoven palm leaves for a roof. Here, seated on the grass, his neck encircled with a lei, a wreath of flowers, he joins in the luan, a native banquet. The food is served on leaves of aromatic plants by way of tablecloth. With his fingers he dips poi out of a calabash. He partakes of sucking pig, roasted in a unu, an underground oven. He devours raw fish, live shrimps, yams, and watermelon, washing the whole down with copious draughts of awa, the alcoholic beverage of Polynesia. Satiated, with a parting aloha, he retires to some opening among the palm trees and takes a moonshine bath, meanwhile copying the Kanaka, if he is an American with aspirations, knowing that an acquaintance with that dialect will be a requirement in the next catechism of the Civil Service Commission.

Uncle Sam may long for relaxation of this kind; but, after all, he will be wise to imitate the sage Ulysses. As he approached the island of the Sirens, whose song was death, Ulysses filled his sailors' ears with beeswax to dull their hearing and had himself bound to the mast for fear that he might weaken. Then, signaling his men to bend to their oars, he swiftly fled the dangerous coast.

Mr. WHITE obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, there are very few Senators in the Senate Chamber, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum being suggested by the Senator from Arkansas, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon,	Fairbanks,	McBride,	Sewell,
Baker,	Foraker,	McEnery,	Shoup,
Bate,	Frye,	McLaurin,	Spooner,
Berry,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Stewart,
Burrows,	Gear,	Mallory,	Teller,
Butler,	Hale,	Martin,	Thurston,
Carter,	Hanna,	Mitchell,	Tillman,
Chilton,	Hansbrough,	Morgan,	Turley,
Clark,	Harris,	Pasco,	Warren,
Clay,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Wellington,
Cockrell,	Heitfeld,	Pettus,	Wetmore,
Cullom,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, Conn.	White,
Daniel,	Jones, Nev.	Platt, N. Y.	Wilson,
Davis,	Kyle,	Pritchard,
Dobson,	Lindsay,	Rawlins,
Elkins,	Lodge,	Roach,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. WHITE addressed the Senate. After having spoken for an hour and five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Senator from California will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3698) for the restoration of annuities to the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the pending joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from California will proceed.

Mr. WHITE resumed his speech. After having spoken fifty minutes.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, I wish to suggest that there is not a quorum of the Senate present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baker,	Gorman,	Mantle,	Shoup,
Bate,	Hanna,	Mills,	Spooner,
Berry,	Harris,	Money,	Stewart,
Burrows,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Sullivan,
Butler,	Heitfeld,	Nelson,	Teller,
Carter,	Hoar,	Pasco,	Thurston,
Chilton,	Jones, Nev.	Penrose,	Tillman,
Clark,	Kyle,	Perkins,	Turley,
Cullom,	Lindsay,	Pettus,	Warren,
Davis,	Lodge,	Platt, Conn.	Wellington,
Elkins,	McBride,	Platt, N. Y.	White,
Fairbanks,	McEnery,	Pritchard,	Wilson,
Foraker,	McLaurin,	Rawlins,
Frye,	McMillan,	Roach,
Gallinger,	Mallory,	Sewell,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from California will proceed.

Mr. WHITE resumed his speech; and after having spoken for an hour and a half, he said:

I desire to inquire of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] if it would be agreeable to him to take the usual adjournment now? I have occupied the floor for quite a while, and I am rather tired.

Mr. DAVIS. I am perfectly willing that we shall proceed to the transaction of some other business.

Mr. WHITE. Certainly. I do not wish that the Senate should adjourn; but, if agreeable, I should like to desist for the evening.

THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I submit a conference report on the bill (H. R. 8581) for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, and ask that it may be considered at the present time.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to inquire whether the report will lead to debate?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think not.

Mr. DAVIS. If it does, I shall have to object to its consideration at this time.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am very sure there will be no debate on the adoption of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8581) for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 5, 6, 11, 19, 26, 27, 42, 43.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 20, 22, 24, 25, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 35, 36, 44, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words struck out, insert:

"SEC. 3. That said courts are hereby given jurisdiction in their respective districts to try cases against those who may claim to hold as members of a tribe and whose membership is denied by the tribe, but who continue to hold said lands and tenements notwithstanding the objection of the tribe; and if it be found upon trial that the same are held unlawfully against the tribe by those claiming to be members thereof, and the membership and right are disallowed by the commission to the Five Tribes or the United States court, and the judgment has become final, then said court shall cause the parties charged with unlawfully holding said possessions to be removed from the same and cause the lands and tenements to be restored to the person or persons or nation or tribe of Indians entitled to the possession of the same: Provided always, That any person being a noncitizen in possession of lands, holding the possession thereof under an agreement, lease, or improvement contract with either of said nations or tribes, or any citizen thereof, executed prior to January 1, 1898, may, as to lands not exceeding in amount 160 acres, in defense of any action for the possession of said lands, show that he is and has been in peaceable possession of such lands, and that he has, while in such possession, made lasting and valuable improvements thereon, and that he has not enjoyed the possession thereof a sufficient length of time to compensate him for such improvements. Thereupon, the court or jury trying said cause shall determine the fair and reasonable value of such improvements and the fair and reasonable rental value of such lands for the time the same shall have been occupied by such person, and if the improvements exceed in value the amount of rents with which such person should be charged, the court, in its judgment, shall specify such time as will, in the opinion of the court, compensate such person for the balance due, and award him possession for such time, unless the amount be paid by claimant within such reasonable time as the court shall specify. If the finding be that the amount of rents exceeds the value of the improvements, judgment shall be rendered against the defendant for such sum, for which execution may issue."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words struck out insert:

"SEC. 6. That the summons shall not issue in such action until the chief or governor of the tribe, or person or persons bringing suit in his own behalf, shall have filed a sworn complaint, on behalf of the tribe or himself, with the court, which shall, as near as practicable, describe the premises so detained, and shall set forth a detention without the consent of the person bringing said suit or the tribe, by one whose membership is denied by it: Provided, That if the chief or governor refuse or fail to bring suit in behalf of the tribe then any member of the tribe may make complaint and bring said suit."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words struck out insert:

"SEC. 9. That all actions for restitution of possession of real property under this act must be commenced by the service of a summons within two years after the passage of this act, where the wrongful detention or possession began prior to the date of its passage; and all actions which shall be commenced hereafter, based upon wrongful detention or possession committed since the passage of this act must be commenced within two years after the cause of action accrued. And nothing in this act shall take away the right to maintain an action for unlawful and forcible entry and detainer given by the act of Congress passed May 2, 1890 (26 U. S. Stat., page 95)."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 10. In lieu of the words struck out insert: "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall in any way affect any vested legal rights which may have been heretofore granted by act of Congress, nor be so construed as to confer any additional rights upon any parties claiming under any such act of Congress;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words struck out insert: "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall impair the rights of any holder or owner of a leasehold interest in any oil, coal rights, asphalt, or mineral which have been assented to by act of Congress, but all such interest shall continue unimpaired hereby, and shall be assured to such holders or owners by leases from the Secretary of the Interior for the term not exceeding fifteen years, but subject to payment of advance royalties, as herein provided, when such leases are not operated, to the rate of royalty on coal mined and the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and preference shall be given to such parties in renewals of such leases: And provided further;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In addition to the words inserted, insert also: "and the clerk of said court shall record all papers and perform all the acts required of the recorder of the county, or the clerk of the county court, or the secretary of state, necessary for the incorporation of any city or town, as provided in Mansfield's Digest; and such city or town government, when so authorized and organized, shall possess all the powers and exercise all the rights of similar municipalities in said State of Arkansas;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words struck out insert:

"SEC. 15. That there shall be a commission in each town for each one of the Chickasaw, Choctaw, Creek, and Cherokee tribes, to consist of one member to be appointed by the executive of the tribe, who shall not be interested in town property, other than his home; one person to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, and one member to be selected by the town. And if the executive of the tribe or the town fail to select members as aforesaid, they may be selected and appointed by the Secretary of the Interior.

"Said commissions shall cause to be surveyed and laid out town sites where towns with a present population of 200 or more are located, conforming to the existing survey so far as may be, with proper and necessary streets, alleys, and public grounds, including parks and cemeteries, giving to each town such territory as may be required for its present needs and reasonable prospective growth; and shall prepare correct plats thereof, and file one with the Secretary of the Interior, one with the clerk of the United States court, one with the authorities of the tribe, and one with the town authorities. And all town lots shall be appraised by said commission at their true value, excluding improvements; and separate appraisements shall be made of all improvements thereon; and no such appraisement shall be effective until approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and in case of disagreement by the members of such commission as to the value of any lot said Secretary may fix the value thereof.

"The owner of the improvements upon any town lot, other than fencing, tillage, or temporary buildings, may deposit, in the United States Treasury, St. Louis, Mo., one-half of such appraised value; 10 per cent within two months and 15 per cent more within six months after notice of appraisement, and the remainder in three equal annual installments thereafter, depositing with the Secretary of the Interior one receipt for each payment, and one with the authorities of the tribe, and such deposit shall be deemed a tender to the tribe of the purchase money for such lot.

"If the owner of such improvements on any lot fails to make deposit of the purchase money as aforesaid, then such lot may be sold in the manner herein provided for the sale of unimproved lots; and when the purchaser thereof has complied with the requirements herein for the purchase of improved lots he may, by petition, apply to the United States court within whose jurisdiction the town is located for condemnation and appraisement of such improvements, and petitioner shall, after judgment, deposit the value so fixed with the clerk of the court; and thereupon the defendant shall be required to accept same in full payment for his improvements or remove same from the lot within such time as may be fixed by the court.

"All town lots not improved as aforesaid shall belong to the tribe and shall be in like manner appraised and, after approval by the Secretary of the Interior, and due notice, sold to the highest bidder at public auction by said commission, but not for less than their appraised value, unless ordered by the Secretary of the Interior; and purchasers may in like manner make deposits of the purchase money with like effect as in case of improved lots.

"The inhabitants of any town may, within one year after the completion of the survey thereof, make such deposit of $10 per acre for parks, cemeteries, and other public grounds laid out by said commission with like effect as for improved lots; and such parks and public grounds shall not be used for any purpose until such deposits are made.

"The person authorized by the tribe or tribes may execute or deliver to any such purchaser, without expense to him, a deed conveying to him the title to such lands or town lots, and thereafter the purchase money shall become the property of the tribe; and all such moneys shall, when titles to all the lots in the towns belonging to any tribe have been thus perfected, be paid per capita to the members of the tribe: Provided, however, That in those town sites designated and laid out under the provisions of this act where coal leases are now being operated and coal is being mined, there shall be reserved from appraisement and sale all lots occupied by houses of minors actually engaged in mining, and only while they are so engaged, and in addition thereto a sufficient amount of land, to be determined by the appraisers, to furnish homes for the men actually engaged in working for the lessees operating said mines and a sufficient amount for all buildings and machinery for mining purposes: And provided further, That when the lessees shall cease to operate said mines, then, and in that event, the lots of land so reserved shall be disposed of as provided for in this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words struck out insert: "Until their rights under said treaty shall be determined, in such manner as shall be hereafter provided by Congress;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words adopted by the Senate insert: "Made after the 1st day of January, 1898, by the tribe, or any member thereof, shall be absolutely void, and all such grazing leases;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 15 strike out the word "shall;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended clause substitute the following: "prior to said date shall terminate;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Change the amended clause so that it shall read as follows: "on the 1st day of April, 1899, and all such agricultural leases shall terminate on January 1, 1900; but this shall not prevent individuals from leasing their allotments when made to them as provided in this act, nor from occupying or renting their proportionate shares of the tribal lands until the allotments herein provided for are made;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit a portion of the words struck out, so that it shall read:

"SEC. 26. That before any allotment shall be made of lands in the Cherokee Nation there shall be segregated therefrom by the commission heretofore mentioned, in separate allotments or otherwise, the 157,000 acres purchased by the Delaware tribe of Indians from the Cherokee Nation under agreement of April 8, 1867, subject to the judicial determination of the rights of said descendants and the Cherokee Nation under said agreement. That the Delaware Indians residing in the Cherokee Nation are hereby authorized and empowered to bring suit in the Court of Claims of the United States, within sixty days after the passage of this act, against the Cherokee Nation, for the purpose of determining the rights of said Delaware Indians in and to the lands and funds of said nation under their contract and agreement with the Cherokee Nation dated April 8, 1867; or the Cherokee Nation may bring a like suit against said Delaware Indians; and jurisdiction is conferred on said court to adjudicate and fully determine the same, with right of appeal to either party to the Supreme Court of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit a portion of the amendment, so that it shall read as follows:

"SEC. 31. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to locate one Indian Inspector in Indian Territory, who may, under his authority and direction, perform any duties required of the Secretary of the Interior by law relating to affairs therein."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit a portion of the amendment and amend the remainder so that the amendment shall read as follows:

"SEC. 31. That on the 1st day of July, 1898, all tribal courts in Indian Territory shall be abolished, and no officer of said courts shall thereafter have any authority whatever to do or perform any act theretofore authorized by any law in connection with said courts, or to receive any pay for same; and all civil and criminal causes then pending in any such courts shall be transferred to the United States court in said Territory by filing with the clerk of the court the original papers in the suit: Provided, That this section shall not be in force as to the Chickasaw, Choctaw, and Creek tribes, or nations, until the 1st day of October, 1898."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the first paragraph of the amendment, including lines 16 to 25, inclusive, on page 30, and lines 1 to 14, inclusive, on page 31, and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"SEC. 32. That the agreement made by the commission to the Five Civilized Tribes with commissions representing the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians on the 23d day of April, 1897, as herein amended, is hereby ratified and confirmed, and the same shall be of full force and effect if ratified before the 1st day of December, 1898, by a majority of the whole number of votes cast by the members of said tribes at an election held for that purpose; and the executives of said tribes are hereby authorized and directed to make public proclamation that said agreement shall be voted on at the next general election, or at any special election to be called by such executives for the purpose of voting on said agreement; and at the election held for such purpose all male members of each of said tribes qualified to vote under his tribal laws shall have the right to vote at the election precinct most convenient to his residence, whether the same be within the bounds of his tribe or not: Provided, That no person whose right to citizenship in either of said tribes or nations is now contested in original or appellate proceedings before any United States court shall be permitted to vote at said election: Provided further, That the votes cast in both of said tribes or nations shall be forthwith returned duly certified by the precinct officers to the national secretaries of said tribes or nations, and shall be presented by said national secretaries to a board of commissioners consisting of the principal chief and national secretary of the Choctaw Nation, the governor and national secretary of the Chickasaw Nation, and a member of the commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, to be designated by the chairman of said commission; and said board shall meet without delay at Atoka, in the Indian Territory, and canvass and count said votes and make proclamation of the result; and if said agreement, as amended, be so ratified, the provisions of this act shall then only apply to said tribes where the same do not conflict with the provisions of said agreement; but the provisions of said agreement, if so ratified, shall not in any manner affect the provisions of section 14 of this act, which said amendment is as follows:

And the Senate agree to the same.

Insert, after the word "further," at the end of line 4, page 34, the following: "That the commissioners to the Five Civilized Tribes shall make a correct roll of Chickasaw freedmen entitled to any rights or benefits under the treaty made in 1866 between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes and their descendants born to them since the date of said treaty, and 40 acres of land, including their present residences and improvements, shall be allotted to each, to be selected, held, and used by them until their rights under said treaty shall be determined in such manner as shall hereafter be provided by act of Congress;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Strike out all after the word "land," in line 17, page 37, down to the second word "and," in line 1, page 38.

Strike out, in lines 9 and 10, page 39, the words "member of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes to be designated by the chairman thereof," and insert in lieu thereof the words "to be appointed by the President of the United States."

Strike out, in line 4, page 40, the words "the same" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one residence and one business lot at 50 per cent of the appraised value of such improved property, and the remainder of such improved property."

Strike out, in line 13, page 40, the words "they shall select a third person" and insert in lieu thereof the words "or the limit or extent of said town, either of said commissioners may report any such disagreement to the judge of the district in which such town is located, who shall appoint a third member to act with said commission."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Strike out, in line 9, page 42, the words "Choctaw or Chickasaw constitutions."

Insert, after the word "States," in line 10, page 42, the words "in force in said Territory."

Insert, after the word "Nations," in line 24, page 44, the following: "each of whom shall make full report of all his acts to the Secretary of the Interior quarterly. All such acts shall be subject to the approval of said Secretary."

Insert, after the word "agreement," in line 22, page 45, the words "subject, however, to payment of advance royalties herein provided for."

Strike out all after the word "void," in line 17, page 45, down to and including the word "agreement," in line 22, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall impair the rights of any holder or owner of a leasehold interest in any oil, coal rights, asphalt, or mineral which have been assented to by act of Congress, but all such interests shall continue unimpaired hereby and shall be assured by new leases from such trustees of coal or asphalt claims described therein, by application to the trustees within six months after the ratification of this agreement."

The proviso beginning in line 6, page 46, is amended to read as follows: "Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may reduce or advance royalties on coal and asphalt when he deems it for the best interests of the Choctaws and Chickasaws to do so. No royalties shall be paid except into the United States Treasury as herein provided."

Strike out, in line 5, page 46, the words "on asphalt."

Insert, in line 9, page 48, after the word "embracery," the words "breaches or disturbances of the peace and carrying weapons."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the first paragraph of section 33 of the amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 33. That the agreement made by the commission to the Five Civilized Tribes with the commission representing the Muscogee (or Creek) tribe of Indians on the 27th day of September, 1897, as herein amended, is hereby ratified and confirmed, and the same shall be of full force and effect if ratified before the 1st day of December, 1898, by a majority of the votes cast by the members of said tribe at an election to be held for that purpose; and the executive of said tribe is authorized and directed to make public proclamation that said agreement shall be voted on at the next general election, to be called by such executive for the purpose of voting on said agreement; and if said agreement as amended be so ratified, the provisions of this act shall then only apply to said tribe where the same do not conflict with the provisions of said agreement; but the provisions of said agreement, if so ratified, shall not in any manner affect the provisions of section 14 of this act, which said amended agreement is as follows:

Insert, after the word "made," in line 13, page 53, the following: "All citizens of said nation, from and after the passage of this act, shall be entitled to select from the lands of said nation an amount equal to 160 acres, and use and occupy the same until the allotments therein provided are made."

Strike out paragraph 7 of section 33, page 53, and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"7. The residue of the lands, with the improvements thereon, if any there be, shall be appraised separately, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and said lands and improvements sold in tracts of not to exceed 160 acres to one person, to the highest bidder, at public auction for not less than the appraised value per acre of land, and after deducting the appraised value of the lands the remainder of the purchase money shall be paid to the owners of the improvement."

Strike out all on page 61 between the word "land," in line 4, and the word "the," where it occurs the second time in line 12.

Strike out, in line 3, page 62, the words "an officer of the United States to be designated," and insert in lieu thereof the word "appointed."

Strike out, in line 5, page 65, the words "said nation of."

And the Senate agree to the same.

O. H. PLATT,

JAMES K. JONES,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. S. SHERMAN,

CHARLES CURTIS,

JOHN S. LITTLE,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Arkansas, it was Ordered, That H. R. 8581, "An act for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," be printed as agreed to in conference.

BRIGHTWOOD RAILWAY COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10280) to require the Brightwood Railway Company to abandon its overhead trolley on Kenyon street, between Seventh and Fourteenth streets, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Senate agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. GALLINGER, and Mr. FAULKNER were appointed.

NIAGARA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 1073) to provide for the construction of a bridge across Niagara River.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STREET PARKING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5890) to vest in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the control of the street parking in said District, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"The jurisdiction and control of the street parking in the streets and avenues of the District of Columbia is hereby transferred to and vested in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

"Sec. 2. That the park system of the District of Columbia is hereby placed under the exclusive charge and control of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the President of the United States through the Secretary of War.

The said park system shall be held to comprise:

"(a) All public spaces laid down as reservations on the map of 1894 accompanying the annual report for 1894 of the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds;

"(b) All portions of the space in the streets and avenues of the said District, after the same shall have been set aside by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, for park purposes: Provided, That no areas less than 250 square feet between sidewalk lines shall be included within the said park system, and no improvements shall be made in unimproved public spaces in streets between building lines or building lines prolonged until the outlines of such portions as are to be improved as parks shall have been laid out by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That the Chief of Engineers is authorized temporarily to turn over the care of any of the parking spaces included in class "b" above to private owners of adjoining lands under such regulations as he may prescribe and with the condition that the said private owner shall pay special assessments for improvements contiguous to such parking under the same regulations as are or may be prescribed for private lands: And provided further, That where in any portion of a street more than one-half of the front is occupied and used for business purposes, the Commissioners are authorized and directed to denominate such portion of the street as a business street and shall authorize the use for business purposes by abutting property owners of so much of the sidewalk and parking as may not be needed, in the judgment of the said Commissioners, by the general public, under such general regulations as the said Commissioners may prescribe.

"Sec. 3. This act shall not affect in any manner the provisions in the act of March 3, 1891, entitled 'An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for prior years, and for other purposes,' that no permits for projections beyond the building line on the streets and avenues of the city of Washington shall be granted except under special application and with the concurrence of all said Commissioners and the approval of the Secretary of War; and the operation of said provision is hereby extended to the entire District of Columbia.

"Sec. 4. That when, in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the public necessity or convenience require them to enter upon any of the spaces or reservations under the jurisdiction of the Chief of Engineers, for the purpose of widening the roadway of any street or avenue adjacent thereto or to establish sidewalks along the same, the Chief of Engineers, with the approval of the Secretary of War, is authorized to grant the necessary permission upon the application of the Commissioners.

"Sec. 5. That when in accordance with law or mutual legal agreement spaces or portions of public land are transferred from the jurisdiction of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, as established by this act, to that of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or vice versa, the letters exchanged between them of transfer and acceptance shall be sufficient authority for the necessary change in the official maps and for record when necessary.

"Sec. 6. That the said Chief of Engineers and the said Commissioners are hereby authorized to make all needful rules and regulations for the government and proper care of all the public grounds placed by this act under their respective charge and control, and to annex to such rules and regulations such reasonable penalties as will secure their enforcement.

"Sec. 7. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed, but nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect in any way any pending litigation involving the validity or invalidity of the occupation of any public space or reservation in the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

- A bill (S. 4451) granting a pension to Nancy Barger.

SUBURBAN HIGHWAYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10209) to repeal an act of Congress approved March 2, 1893, entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

J. H. GALLINGER,
JAMES McMILLAN,
CHARLES J. FAULKNER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. W. BABCOCK,
G. M. CURTIS,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

SELECTION OF GRANTED LANDS BY UTAH.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4694) to permit the State of Utah to select certain granted lands.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in line 3, before the word "granted," to insert "lands;" and after the word "granted" to strike out "lands" and insert "in quantity;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in its selection of lands granted in quantity under the terms and restrictions of an act entitled "An act to enable the people of Utah to form a constitution and State government and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," approved July 16, 1894, the said State of Utah shall be, and is hereby, permitted to select such lands in legal subdivisions of not less than one-sixteenth section, subject, however, to all the other conditions and obligations of such grant or grants of land imposed by said act of July 16, 1894; and the grant or grants of lands made by said act of July 16, 1894, are hereby ratified to such lands as may be selected in legal subdivisions of not less than one-sixteenth section, according to the terms of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I move to further amend the bill by inserting after the word "quantity," in line 8, the words "or in lieu."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. How will the bill then read?

The SECRETARY. As proposed to be amended the bill will read:

That in its selection of lands granted in quantity or in lieu under the terms and restrictions of an act entitled "An act to enable the people of Utah to form a constitution and State government and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," approved July 16, 1894, the said State of Utah shall be, and is hereby, permitted to select such lands in legal subdivisions of not less than one-sixteenth section, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS PAUL.

Mr. WILSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3557) for the relief of Thomas Paul.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to sell the following-described tract of land, to wit: Lot 6, section 34; lot 7, section 34; the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 34; lot 6, section 35; lot 7, section 35; all in township 8 north, of range 35 east of the Willamette meridian, aggregating 132.15 acres, to Thomas Paul for $1.25 per acre.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSIGNMENTS OF VOLUNTEER OFFICERS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (H. R. 10006) to amend section 10 of an act approved April 22, 1898, entitled "An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes." It is a bill much desired by the War Department.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to repeal so much of section 10 of the act approved April 22, 1898, entitled "An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes," as provides that "officers appointed or assigned to the staff of commanders of Army corps, divisions, and brigades shall serve only in such capacity, and that when relieved from such staff service such appointments or assignments shall terminate," and that assignments of the officers of the volunteer staff shall be governed by the same rules and regulations as those of the Regular Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LETTERS PATENT TO MARY J. DAY.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move that the bill (H. R. 6512) granting an extension of letters patent No. 20394 to Mary J. Day, inventor, be recommitted to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

HARBOR DEFENSES AND FORTIFICATIONS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg leave to ask for the consideration at this time of the bill (S. 4714) to protect the harbor defenses and fortifications constructed or used by the United States from malicious injury, and for other purposes. The necessity for it will be seen when the bill is read.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. SPOONER. Is not five years' imprisonment a tremendous punishment for a misdemeanor?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no objection to the term of imprisonment being less. We do not know how much the damage may be. It may be a fatal injury to a very important defense. There has been already a great deal of injury to telegraph lines, etc.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not speaking of the fine. I am speaking of the imprisonment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no objection to that being reduced.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. These words ought to be stricken out—"shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." An offense of this kind is something more than a misdemeanor. It is punished by an imprisonment of five years. It is a felony, an infamous crime; and the words I have read ought to be stricken out.

Mr. SPOONER. I suggest to the Senator that the offense is a very grave one, as I understand, and it should be declared to be a felony instead of a misdemeanor.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suggest that we should strike out the language "shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor," and that it should read: "shall be punished, on conviction," etc.

Mr. SPOONER. That is all right. The offense is an enormous one; but here it is made a misdemeanor, and a punishment of five years' imprisonment is provided for.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does my colleague move to strike out the words "shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor?"

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 9, after the words "shall be," it is proposed to strike out "deemed guilty of a misdemeanor;" and in line 10, after the word "conviction," to insert "thereof;" so as to read:

Shall be punished, on conviction thereof, in a district court of the United States for the district in which the offense is committed.

Mr. SPOONER. By fine and imprisonment. What is the penalty here?

The Secretary read as follows:

By a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, or with imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let us dispose of the pending amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. What was the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SPOONER. I am entirely satisfied with the bill as it stands.

Mr. HAWLEY. I now ask that the amendments of the Committee on Military Affairs may be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, in section 1, line 3, after the word "maliciously," to insert "trespass upon;" so as to read:

That any person who shall willfully or maliciously trespass upon, injure, or destroy any of the works or property or material of any submarine mine or torpedo, or fortification or harbor-defense system owned or constructed or in process of construction by the United States, or shall willfully or maliciously interfere with the operation or use of any such submarine mine, torpedo, fortification, or harbor-defense system, shall be punished, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 9, after the word "State," to insert "or is occupied upon the written consent of the owner of the land;" and in line 11, after the word "building," to insert "or structure;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That when any offense is committed in any place jurisdiction over which has been retained by the United States or ceded to it by a State, or which has been purchased with the consent of a State, or is occupied upon the written consent of the owner of the land, for the erection of a fort, magazine, arsenal, dockyard, or other needful building or structure, the punishment for which offense is not provided for by any law of the United States, the person committing such offense shall, upon conviction in a circuit or district court of the United States for the district in which the offense was committed, be liable to and receive the same punishment as the laws of the State in which such place is situated now provide for the like offense when committed within the jurisdiction of such State, and the said courts are hereby vested with jurisdiction for such purpose; and no subsequent repeal of any such State law shall affect any such prosecution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF SAMUEL MILLIKEN.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2388) for the relief of the Marion Trust Company, administrator of the estate of Samuel Milliken, deceased, of Indianapolis, Ind., for services rendered as mail contractor on route No. 9704, between Paducah, Ky., and Iuka, Miss., in the year 1861.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Marion Trust Company, administrator of the estate of Samuel Milliken, deceased, of Indianapolis, Ind., $901.92, being the amount now standing to the credit of said Samuel Milliken on the books of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department for services rendered by him as contractor in carrying the United States mails on route No. 9704, between Paducah, Ky., and Iuka, Miss., from April 1 to June 6, 1861, inclusive.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HUFF JONES.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent for consideration at this time of the bill (S. 4200) for the relief of Huff Jones for breach of contract with Indian agent.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Huff Jones, of Oconto, Wis., $1,228.39, in full for money expended under an agreement with William T. Richardson, United States Indian agent at Greenbay, Wis., in November, 1872, by which agreement Huff Jones was to cut pine on the Menominee Indian Reservation, in Wisconsin, and build shanties, stables, and roads, and a supply road 5 miles in length, when he was ordered to stop work by Indian Agent Boardman, who succeeded Agent Richardson; and the buildings and roads were subsequently used by Agent Boardman in cutting and hauling lumber on the reservation for a number of winters, and the said Jones has never been reimbursed any part of the amount he so expended under the agreement.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SPOONER, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Huff Jones."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WILSON. I had intended to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bridge bill, but it is somewhat lengthy and many Senators express a desire to go into executive session, and I therefore withhold the request.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 22, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Agriculture to ask that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 4124) for the protection of song birds and that the same be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the change of reference will be made as indicated by the gentleman from New York.

There was no objection.

LIZZIE HAGNY, ADMINISTRATRIX.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2678) for the relief of Lizzie Hagny, as administratrix of the estate of Frank B. Smith, deceased.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lizzie Hagny, as administratrix of the estate of Frank B. Smith, deceased, the sum of $1,237.52, being the amount expended by said Frank B. Smith for clerk hire in excess of his allowance during his incumbency as postmaster at Wichita, Kans., from October 1, 1886, to June 30, 1887.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask if there is a report accompanying this bill?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to its present consideration? Mr. LOUD. Unless the report is read, or some satisfactory explanation is given, I shall be compelled to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. McEWAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2678) for the relief of Lizzie Hagny, as administratrix of the estate of Frank B. Smith, deceased, have carefully considered the same and respectfully submit the following report:

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lizzie Hagny, as administratrix of the estate of Frank B. Smith, deceased, the sum of $1,237.52, being the amount expended by said Frank B. Smith for clerk hire in excess of the allowance during his incumbency as postmaster at Wichita, Kans., from October 1, 1886, to June 30, 1887.

The committee find that Frank B. Smith submitted vouchers to the Department for clerk hire from October 1, 1886, to June 30, 1887, as follows:

October 1 to December 31, 1886	$1,567.20
January 1 to March 31, 1887	1,596.35
April 1 to June 30, 1887	1,832.41

Total	4,995.96
-------	----------

The amount allowed during the period was—

October 1 to December 31, 1886	$650.00
January 1 to March 31, 1887	1,332.50
April 1 to June 30, 1887	1,775.00

Total	3,757.50
-------	----------

The amount expended, as shown by vouchers on file, in excess of amount allowed was $1,237.52.

Mr. Smith took charge of the post-office at Wichita, Kans., October 1, 1886. The population of Wichita had begun to increase at an extraordinary rate about this time, and the business of the post-office increased and continued to increase to an enormous extent during the first year of the incumbency of the said Frank B. Smith.

The city was in the midst of what is called a "boom" of extraordinary proportions. Thousands of people from all parts of the country were flocking to the city. The streets and hotels were filled with strangers and proposed settlers month after month during this time.

The demands upon the post-office officials were extraordinary, and were far beyond the capacity of the regular force allowed to the office.

It was not unusual to see hundreds of people in line, reaching not only out of the office, but far down the street, waiting for their turn at the delivery windows to obtain their mail.

The amount of mail received and distributed during this period was beyond all precedent, both on account of the increase in the legitimate population and the extraordinary influx of strangers at this time.

During this period Mr. Smith was not only at work night and day, and all his clerical force allowed by the Department, but also a considerable clerical force employed by Mr. Smith in excess of what the Department paid for. This state of affairs continued for a considerable period of time, and finally the matter was presented to the Department. A special agent was sent there, and an allowance was finally made to cover future necessities, but no provision was made for reimbursement for the large outlay which Mr. Smith was compelled to make prior to the time the special agent made his investigation. This bill is for reimbursement for that outlay.

The committee has on file the following communication from the First Assistant Postmaster-General, to whom this bill was referred for recommendation in the Fifty-fourth Congress:

Hon. E. O. WOLCOTT,

Chairman of Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, United States Senate.

SIR: Referring to Senate bill No. 3084, as above described, I have the honor to advise you that from an examination of the records of this Department it would appear that the claim of the estate of the late Frank B. Smith for reimbursement in the sum of $1,237.52, expended by him in excess of regularly authorized clerk-hire allowance during his incumbency as postmaster at Wichita, Kans., from October 1, 1886, to June 30, 1887, is a meritorious one, and the same is hereby approved.

A report similar to this was made on H. R. bill 8262, under date of April 24, 1896.

Very respectfully,

F. H. JONES,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Believing that this is a meritorious bill, the committee recommend that it be passed without amendment.

Mr. SIMPSON. This, Mr. Speaker, is a Senate bill, and has the unanimous report of the Senate and House committees.

Mr. LOUD. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that I wanted some information on the subject covered by the bill, inasmuch as there are hundreds of these bills now before Congress. The Department having recommended the enactment of this legislation, and the bill having received the approval of the committees, there is no objection on my part.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

There being no further objection, the bill was considered, and ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. SIMPSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

OWNERS OF SHIP ACHILLES.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4630) for the relief of the owners of the ship Achilles.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that the passage of this bill is regarded as somewhat important as an act of comity to a British ship that went very much out of its way, and at large expense, to rescue twenty-eight seamen from an American vessel.

Mr. LOUD. Why does not the general law—

Mr. DINGLEY (continuing). The general law, I will state, does not reach the particular case, and the Department has referred to it to us for consideration.

Mr. ROBB. I object.

Mr. DINGLEY. The amount is so small, ordinarily—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has made objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. Very well.

COURT OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. FERGUSSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10290) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 13, 1891, and the act amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1893, with a view to concurring in the amendment of the Senate, and also the amendment offered to the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the Senate will be read.

The Senate amendment was read; also the amendment to the title.

There being no objection, the amendments were considered, and concurred in.

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RESTORATION OF CHANNEL OF THE SOUTH CANADIAN RIVER, INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill No. 4759, to authorize the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company to straighten and restore the channel of the South Canadian River, in the Indian Territory, at the crossing of said road.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

An act to authorize the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company to straighten and restore the channel of the South Canadian River, in the Indian Territory, at the crossing of said railroad.

Whereas the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company, heretofore, under and pursuant to authority conferred upon it by an act of Congress of the United States, built and constructed its line of railroad through the Indian Territory and through the Creek and Choctaw nations, and pursuant to said Congressional authority, as a part of its said line of railroad, many years since, at great expense, built and constructed a railroad bridge across the South Canadian River; and

Whereas the said South Canadian River, at the point it is crossed by said railroad bridge, and for a long distance on both sides, forms the established boundary line between the said Creek and Choctaw nations; and

Whereas recently unprecedented floods occurred in the South Canadian Valley, resulting in that river overflowing its banks at many points and flooding the contiguous territory and also resulting in the diversion of that river from its old channel at the point it was so bridged by the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company and for some distance above and below, and the formation of a new course some distance to the north of said bridge, washing away the railroad and railroad bed for a distance of about 2 miles, seriously interrupting and impeding the transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and interstate commerce generally; and

Whereas it is important that the course of said river be restored to the old channel at and below the bridge of said Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company, and so established immediately above said bridge as to prevent as far as practicable any further shiftings of the channel of the river and breaking of the railway embankments and overflows of adjoining farm lands, and make possible the continued and uninterrupted use of said railroad and said railroad bridge: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That said Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company be, and it is hereby authorized, at its sole expense, to restore the said river to its original channel, under and below said railroad bridge, and to that end to straighten and shorten the river above said bridge by excavating and constructing a channel for the river, commencing at said bridge and extending thence across sections 28 and 29 of township 9 north, of range 15 east, to the South Canadian River, at or near the northwest corner of said section 29, and for that purpose the said railway company is authorized to enter upon lands adjacent to said railroad.

SEC. 2. That before said channel shall be excavated and constructed through any lands held by individual occupants according to the laws, customs, and usages of the Creek and Choctaw nations full compensation shall be made to such occupants for all property to be taken or damaged by reason of the construction of said channel. In case of failure to make amicable settlements with any occupant, the railway company may file its petition in the United States court in the Indian Territory for the district in which the lands lie, reciting its failure to make such amicable settlement, and thereupon said court shall appoint a commission of three disinterested persons, having the qualifications of jurors in said court, to review the premises and appraise the damages to be sustained by such occupant, who, before entering upon their duties, shall take and subscribe before said courts or the clerk thereof an oath that they will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties imposed by their appointment, which oath, duly certified, shall be returned with their award. The award of a majority of said commissioners shall be the award of the commission, and such award shall be filed within ten days after the appointment of said commission. Either party being dissatisfied with the award may file exceptions in said court thereto within ten days from the filing of the same, and a trial of the issues raised by such exceptions shall be had in said court as in other cases. If neither party files exceptions the railway company shall pay into court, before entering upon the land condemned, the amount of said award, together with all costs, assessed as in ordinary cases in said court: Provided, That said commissioners shall be allowed and paid $4 per day, with mileage at 5 cents per mile. If either party files exceptions, then the railway company shall pay into court double the amount of the award to abide the judgment thereof, and may at once proceed with the construction of said channel.

SEC. 3. That the boundary line between the Creek and Choctaw nations shall be and remain unchanged by reason of the work hereinbefore authorized to be done by said railway company.

SEC. 4. That the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company by such condemnation proceedings and the construction of said channel, and the diversion of the river through same, shall have no other or further rights in and to said river than it now has.

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right of objection, I would like to hear some statement made with reference to this proposition.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I will take pleasure in making a statement to the House.

Mr. McEWAN. There are two questions that I would like to ask the gentleman. The first question is, How are the rights of the Government to be safeguarded? The usual practice is through the Secretary of War by the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. This, I will state to the gentleman, is an unnavigable river in the Indian Territory, and the lands belong to two Indian tribes, and the Government has no interest in it except as the trustee of the Indians. The bill provides for the protection of the rights of the Indians by condemnation proceedings and full payment for any lands that may be taken in straightening and restoring the channel of the stream.

This legislation is consented to by all the chiefs of both of the tribes affected, and the passage of the bill will be a great benefit to all those living along the river at this particular point, as it will prevent all future overflows of the South Canadian River at that place.

Mr. McEWAN. My second question is, Has it received the recommendation of the appropriate committee of this House?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. It has. It was unanimously reported by the Senate committee and passed the Senate. It has been unanimously reported by the House committee, and, I am informed, was submitted to and approved by the Department.

Mr. McEWAN. If the land, as it would seem, belongs to two of the Indian tribes, and they ask for the grant, and this is a non-navigable stream, I have no objection, especially as it is shown to give nothing but the privilege of straightening the channel and thus benefiting the people of the Territory at the cost of the railroad.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. A nonnavigable stream.

Mr. McEWAN. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PRINTING OF COPIES OF DIGEST AND MANUAL.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged resolution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 2,000 copies of the Digest and Manual of the Rules and Practice of the House of Representatives for the second session of the Fifty-fifth Congress, the same to be bound and distributed under the direction of the Speaker and Clerk of the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Was there not a resolution like this passed at the extra session?

Mr. PERKINS. No; a resolution was presented upon the floor, but objection was made, and nothing further was done with the matter.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thought if it was passed some other gentleman got my copies of the Manual.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to ask my colleague, if I may be permitted, whether this is the usual distribution?

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, yes.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH PIKES PEAK TIMBER LAND RESERVE.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4750) granting right of way through Pikes Peak Timber Land Reserve and the public lands to the Cripple Creek District Railway Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Cripple Creek District Railway Company, a corporation created and existing under the laws of the State of Colorado, be, and it hereby is, authorized to construct and maintain a railway over and through the Pikes Peak Timber Land Reserve (heretofore reserved from entry or settlement and set apart as a public reservation by Executive order), said railway to enter said Pikes Peak Timber Land Reserve at such a point on the eastern or northern boundary thereof in El Paso County, Colo., as may be found to be the most feasible for the route of said railway, running in a westerly direction from Colorado Springs, Colo., thence proceeding by the most practicable route through the reserve to the western boundary thereof; also, to proceed by such side tracks, extensions, switches, and spurs as may be necessary to reach any groups of mines in said forest reserve, all in said El Paso County; and the said railway company is hereby also granted right of way through the public lands to the town of Cripple Creek, in the said State of Colorado; said right of way being granted subject to the rules and restrictions and carrying all the rights and privileges of an act entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875, said act being hereby made applicable to the right of way hereby granted: Provided, That no timber shall be cut by said railroad company for any purpose outside of the rights of way herein granted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PORT OF DELIVERY AT TITUSVILLE, PA.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10585) designating Titusville, Crawford County, Pa., a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Erie, Pa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Titusville, Pa., be, and is hereby, designated a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Erie, Pa., and that the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisal be, and the same are hereby, conferred upon said port.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means, was read:

In line 4 strike out the words "subport of entry" and insert in lieu thereof the words "port of delivery."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. Has this been reported by the committee?

Mr. DALZELL. It has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. DOCKERY. How many new offices does it create?

Mr. DALZELL. It does not create any new offices and involves no expense. It simply makes Titusville a port of delivery.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent, the title was amended so as to read:

A bill designating Titusville, Crawford County, Pa., a port of delivery in the customs district of Erie, Pa.

On motion of Mr. DALZELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SAN JOAQUIN RIVER, ETC., CALIFORNIA.

Mr. DE VRIES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 221, for the survey of and improvement of San Joaquin River and Stockton and Mormon channels, California.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend for improvements and surveys of the waterways hereinafter named and their tributaries any sums of money now to the credit of and heretofore appropriated for the improvement of the San Joaquin River and Stockton and Mormon channels, California, as and where, in his discretion, will best improve the commercial capacity of said waterways.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. DE VRIES. I desire to say that this resolution is supported by a favorable report of the Chief of Engineers, is unanimously recommended by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and reported by them. On a previous occasion I asked unanimous consent to have this resolution considered, and it was objected to by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON], who has now investigated the matter, and assures me that upon that investigation he has no further objection to offer, and that the resolution ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 8299) granting an increase of pension to Thomas S. Tefft, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. HANSBROUGH, and Mr. MITCHELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 6411) granting an increase of pension to Henry K. Opp, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. HANSBROUGH, and Mr. MITCHELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6148) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway in the District of Columbia, and the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and had agreed to the further conference asked for by the House of Representatives, and had appointed Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

- S. 125. An act granting a pension to George W. Palmer;
- S. 4451. An act granting a pension to Nancy Barger;
- S. 4004. An act granting a pension to Julia E. Warner;

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8541) to define the rights of purchasers of the Belt Railway, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6148) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia and Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments joint resolution (H. Res. 251) to limit section 3 of "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1898 and 1899, and for other purposes;" in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

HIGHWAYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10200) to repeal an act of Congress approved March 2, 1893, entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

J. W. BABCOCK,
G. M. CURTIS,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
J. H. GALLINGER,
JAMES McMILLAN,
CHARLES J. FAULKNER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

The House bill repealed the highway act of 1893 and provided that future extensions of streets in the District of Columbia be made under the law of 1888. The Senate amended the House bill by repealing those sections in the act of 1893 which had given rise to trouble and expense, and provided for the continuation of the maps on the unsubdivided property in the District of Columbia. By this arrangement all reasonable objections—and, in fact, all but one or two individual objectors—have been accommodated, and the District will retain the benefit of the maps, which have cost something over $50,000, while at the same time the people owning unsubdivided property will have the great advantage of knowing where the streets and avenues are to run as the city expands and their property comes into the market. This advantage is enjoyed by the people of New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, and other cities, and has proved to be of great benefit to the owners of lands on the outskirts of those cities.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

J. HENRY RIVES.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4918) for the relief of J. Henry Rives.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to pay to J. Henry Rives, of Virginia, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $885.57, being the amount of the attorney's fees and expenses necessarily incurred and paid by him in the arrest of John C. Henry, deputy collector, for embezzlement.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Claims were read:

Strike out the words "eight hundred and eighty-five dollars and fifty-seven cents;" and insert in place thereof the words "two hundred and ninety-three dollars and ninety cents;" and strike out, in line 7, the words "attorney's fees and."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to hear the report read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. McEWAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4918) for the relief of J. Henry Rives, respectfully report the same with an amendment and recommend that it do pass when amended as indicated. Amend by striking out the words "eight hundred and eighty-five dollars and fifty-seven cents;" and inserting in place thereof the words "two hundred and ninety-three dollars and ninety cents;" and by striking out, in line 7, the words "attorney's fees and."

This claim was before the Forty-sixth Congress, and has been before each Congress since that time. It was reported upon favorably by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives of the Forty-sixth Congress (House Report No. 604) and by the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress (House Report No. 2225). It has several times been reported favorably to the Senate by the Committee on Claims, and has twice passed the Senate.

Your committee adopt and submit as a part hereof the report made by this committee during the first session of the Fifty-first Congress.

[Senate Report No. 451, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 883) for the relief of J. Henry Rives, having carefully examined the same, respectfully report:

We adopt the report made by this committee during the first session of the Fifty-first Congress and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill passed the Senate last Congress.

This claim was before the Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, and Forty-ninth Congresses. There was a favorable report on the claim made to the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress. No report was made in the House at the Forty-seventh Congress, but at the Forty-eighth Congress there was a favorable report, and the bill passed the Senate.

The report made to the Senate by Mr. Cameron, of Wisconsin, during the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress fully and fairly presents all the facts bearing upon the right of the claimant to relief, and is adopted by your committee.

That report is as follows:

"Mr. Rives was collector of internal revenue for the Fifth district of Virginia, and John C. Henry his deputy. February 5, 1874, it was discovered that his deputy was an embezzler to the extent of $36,241, and that he had fled. Thereupon Mr. Rives took prompt and efficient measures for his arrest and the recovery of the funds. The deputy was arrested, tried, convicted, and sentenced to four years in the Albany Penitentiary, and there was recovered from him in money and by sale of property over $31,000, leaving a balance of deficit of about $5,241, which was ultimately paid by his sureties. It is evident that this result was very largely due to the promptness, energy, and fidelity of Mr. Rives.

"The expenses attendant upon the arrest and prosecution of the defaulting deputy were $885.57, which were paid by Mr. Rives from his own funds. No appropriation, it seems, was available to reimburse him. The claimant asks to be reimbursed the amount expended by him.

"Under date of February 17, 1890, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue said relative to this claim, in a letter to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House:

"Mr. Rives is entitled to commendation for the promptness and energy displayed in the arrest and prosecution of this defaulting officer and the recovery of the money, which was all deposited in a reasonable time. * * * Under the circumstances I think this claim is entitled to your favorable consideration."

"Under date of February 1, 1884, the Commissioner, answering a letter of inquiry from this committee, said:

"In reply to the questions asked by the committee, I would state: First, that it does not appear from the records of this office that the embezzlement of Deputy Henry occurred through any carelessness or negligence on the part of Collector Rives; but, on the contrary, it was reported that his deputy conducted his fraudulent transactions so skillfully as to deceive the collector and evade the checks which had been established by the collector to prevent such frauds."

"It further appears from the Commissioner's letter that it was Rives's duty, under the practice of the service, to cause to be arrested and prosecuted the defaulting deputy, such duty not forming a part of the duties of the special agents of the Department.

"The following is a statement of the expenses incurred by Collector Rives:

Bills for telegrams sent to insure the capture of J. C. Henry.....	$93.90
Paid J. P. Parrant $50 and S. H. Carrick $50, for arresting Henry.....	100.00
Expenses in pursuit of deputy collector.....	100.00
Paid different attorneys in civil suits to recover amount embezzled.....	$61.67

Total..... 885.57

"The committee are of opinion that Collector Rives should be reimbursed for the amount expended by him in the capture and conviction of Henry, as it was, as appears from the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, his duty to cause Henry's arrest. The amounts paid to attorneys in the civil suits, however, should not be allowed, because such suits were brought by the collector to protect himself, as he was responsible for the amount of the embezzlement.

"The committee therefore report back the bill with the following amendments: Strike out the words 'eight hundred and eighty-five dollars and fifty-seven cents,' in lines 5 and 6, and insert in place thereof the words 'two hundred and ninety-three dollars and ninety cents;' in line 8 strike out the words 'prosecution and conviction;' in lines 9 and 10 strike out the words 'and the recovery of the money embezzled;' and recommend that the bill do pass as amended."

Your committee would therefore report Senate bill 517 favorably, and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Virginia if this includes payment of attorney fees that the marshal spent in protecting himself?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. It does not. Those words are all stricken out. It only includes the expenses of arresting and prosecuting this man.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia if this is not a bill that was presented on a former occasion?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. The same bill was presented on a former occasion.

Mr. DOCKERY. And I objected?

The SPEAKER. It was presented April 7.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. It was not objected to by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think I objected.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. You did not object. Objection was made by the gentleman from Virginia and he withdrew it, and then the regular order was called for.

Mr. DOCKERY. This is for a very small amount, and I do not like to interpose an objection; but the precedent, it seems to me, is a very vicious one. I do not think this bill ought to pass and this official ought not to come here to ask for this relief.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. It has been reported three or four times.

Mr. DOCKERY. This man was involved in a defalcation of $30,000 by his deputy, and is getting out of it with a loss of $200. The report thanks him for his diligence for protecting his own interests.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. No, sir; he did not protect his own interest, because no attorney fees have been allowed. It is only for prosecution and arrest of the criminal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WALKER of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MAHON. Regular order!

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report. I desire to say that this report is on the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway bill, that the House rejected yesterday. The Senate has receded from the objectionable amendment No. 5, and has passed the bill in accordance with the views of the House. I do not think it will be necessary to read the report again, as it has been read twice and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LOVE. Will the chairman just explain the report without having it read?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the report should be read. The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 6148, "An act to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered from 1 to 4, inclusive, 6 to 9, inclusive, 11, 12, 16 to 18, inclusive, 20 to 24, inclusive, and 26, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter proposed to be inserted, after the word "lighting," in line 6, insert the words "and propelling;" and in the same line, after the word "cars," insert the words "and other machinery;" and at the end of said matter add the following: "Provided, however, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to permit street-railway companies using the underground electric system to construct conduits not exceeding five blocks in length to connect their existing conduits for the purpose of conveying electric current to be used for street-railway purposes only;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same amended by inserting, after the words "from the opening," the words "and grading;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5 and 14.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same amended as follows: On page 3, line 7, strike out the words "unless the roadway of;" all of lines 8, 9, and 10, and in line 11 the words "between New York avenue and G street," and insert "the roadway shall be widened to a width of 45 feet, one-half at the expense of said company and one-half at the expense of any District of Columbia appropriation available for such work;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same amended as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out and inserted on page 4, line 13, strike out all after the word "act" to the end of the section and insert the following: "Or otherwise: Provided, That such stock and bonds shall be issued to such an amount and upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the majority stockholders of such company: And provided further, That the issue of such bonds and stock shall not in the aggregate exceed the amount necessary for effecting any such purchase, lease, or acquisition and for the construction, reconstruction, and equipment aforesaid, and the total outstanding bonds and stock shall in no event exceed the sum of $150,000 per mile of single track."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same amended as follows: In line 3 of the matter proposed to be inserted strike out the word "Company" and insert the words "of Washington;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. W. BABCOCK,
G. M. CURTIS,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
JAMES McMILLAN,
CHAS. J. FAULKNER,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. PAYNE. Is there any statement accompanying the report?

Mr. BABCOCK. The statement has been read.

Mr. PAYNE. It has not been read this morning.

Mr. BABCOCK. I think not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement. [After a pause.] The Chair is informed that there is no statement here.

Mr. BABCOCK. The statement was attached to the papers, and it was printed in the RECORD on Saturday.

Mr. PAYNE. This is a new report.

Mr. BABCOCK. No, sir. The Senate simply recedes from the amendment numbered 5 that was discussed on the floor and rejected by the House yesterday. That is the only change in the report.

Mr. DALZELL. That is the amendment on which the point of order was made?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes. They have receded from that amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The House has had its way.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for a vote.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

PARKING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I call up a conference report on the bill H. R. 5980, on the parking of the District of Columbia. It is on the Speaker's table.

[For report of committee of conference see proceedings of June 10.]

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, this matter was presented to the House some two or three weeks ago. The House will remember at that time the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] made some objection to the bill as reported. The report was withdrawn, and after further conference the bill was reported in its present shape. As it is now reported the bill proposes to put the control of street parking under the District Commissioners. That, as gentlemen know, is a portion of the street, but under the law there is some dispute as to who is entitled to control it. The bill proposes to put the control of parks under the Chief Engineer, and it sets out what shall be the parking system of the District. Since reporting it before we have eliminated that portion of the bill that puts the parks acquired under the highway act of 1893 under the park system.

We have also eliminated that clause of the bill that made the intersections of street parkings, triangles, and trapezoids a part of the system. If this should be enacted into a law, the park system will consist only of the parks laid down as reservations in the map of 1894, which was a map accompanying the report of the Chief of Engineers, and intended to represent the parks then under his control. The system will comprise in addition to that only such portions of the spaces in the street as shall be set aside by the District Commissioners as a part of the park system. The other features of the bill will meet, I think, with no opposition; they only provide necessary regulations for street parkings and the entering of parks for laying gas mains and things of that kind.

Mr. CANNON. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the triangle at the street intersections, like the park in which the Rawlins statue is situated, is under the District Commissioners or under the Chief of Engineers?

Mr. COWHERD. I do not know anything about the triangle where the Rawlins statue is situated. These triangles and trapezoids at the intersections of streets, unless they are contained in the map of 1894, marked as a part of the public parks, or unless set apart by the District Commissioners, will not be in the park system.

Mr. CANNON. I understand. That is as I thought the report was, but I misunderstood the gentleman's statement. If I understand the report, the map he refers to designates all the 100 parks, triangles, trapezoids, etc., in the city of Washington proper as being under the jurisdiction of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman does not mean that it designates all of them. It designates all that were under the control of the Chief of Engineers in 1894, as laid down in the map accompanying his report.

Mr. CANNON. That is substantially all of them. Now, I understand that the report goes further, and while it eliminates the parks under the highway act, yet it does include all parks in the District of Columbia designated hereafter by the District Commissioners.

Mr. COWHERD. I beg the gentleman's pardon, it does not. It does not include any parks except those set out in the map of 1894, and the only thing the District Commissioners can designate are the spaces in the streets, not the public parks.

Mr. CANNON. That would be the triangles, trapezoids, and so on.

Mr. COWHERD. Yes; but none of the large parks.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I understand that. I have no doubt the gentleman is correct about that. Now, take these triangles and trapezoids, etc., in the Woodley addition, away out northwest 3 or 4 miles, or at Petworth—I merely speak of these places because I happen to know where they are—and out beyond the Soldiers' Home. It is in the power of the District Commissioners, as to all such triangles in the streets and adjacent thereto, to designate them as parks that shall be under the Chief of Engineers' Office. Now, that is now. There is no park under the jurisdiction of the Engineer Office outside of the city of Washington proper, and others may be added.

I do not know that I could succeed, if I would, in antagonizing the gentleman's report, but I take this opportunity to say that if nobody else does, I will to the best of my ability, when we come to appropriate for the maintenance of the government in the District of Columbia, do what is in my power to put all the hundreds of reservations in Washington proper, and the hundred more that are to follow, which are under the Chief of Engineers—to put their care and improvement precisely as other District appropriations are cared for, viz, payable one-half from the District revenue and the other half from the Treasury of the United States, and not all from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. COWHERD. I hope the gentleman will do so.

Mr. CANNON (continuing). Because, while in theory the District revenues pay one-half of these expenses, yet in practice they lack a great deal of doing so. I think they ought to pay absolutely one-half.

It is quite immaterial to me whether the District Commissioners have jurisdiction or the Chief of Engineers. It is quite competent for Congress to give either or both jurisdiction. Both are servants of the public as the law shall provide. So that I do not see that there is any point involved here except the point of expense, which somebody seems to have had in mind—not the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD]—in seeking to put these new triangles and trapezoids ad infinitum under the jurisdiction of the Chief of Engineers—no doubt with the hope and probably the expectation that as to those new points the improvement would be exclusively at the expense of the general Treasury.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am very glad the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has made this statement. I hope he will jog the memory of the subcommittee on the District of Columbia appropriation bill at the next session, so that the reform he suggests may be carried out.

Mr. CANNON. I will do it now. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I accept the gentleman's notice.

Mr. COWHERD. I heartily agree with the gentleman from Illinois in his statement as to how these expenses should be borne, but it is unquestionably true that the control of parks and parking ought to be vested in some officer of the General Government, and that is all that this bill attempts to do. It does not affect the question of how the expenses shall be paid. I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was adopted.

On motion of Mr. COWHERD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIGHTWOOD RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House business on the Speaker's table.

The bill (H. R. 10280) to require the Brightwood Railway Company to abandon its overhead trolley on Kenyon street, between Seventh and Fourteenth streets, was laid before the House, with the amendment of the Senate, which was read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Committee on the District of Columbia recommend nonconcurrence in this amendment. I move that the House nonconcur and ask a conference with the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, and Mr. RICHARDSON as conferees on the part of the House.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a slight correction. In a colloquy the other day between the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and myself I seem to have done injustice to a Senator from my State, who calls to my attention—

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the gentleman had better withhold his statement for the present.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement making the correction which seems to be proper.

The SPEAKER. The Chair prefers that the present order of business should not be interrupted.

PURCHASE OF BOOKS, ETC., FOR WAR DEPARTMENT.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 251) to limit section 3 of "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898 and 1899, and for other purposes," was laid before the House, with the amendments of the Senate, which were read.

Mr. DOCKERY. This resolution was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. I think the amendments are proper; but perhaps it might be well—

Mr. PAYNE. As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, is not here, I suggest that the bill remain on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will remain on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection.

REBELLION RECORDS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, with an amendment of the Senate, the following House concurrent resolution:

*Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to furnish one complete set of the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate of the Fifty-fifth Congress not already entitled by law to receive the same; and he is further authorized to use for this purpose such incomplete sets as remain unsold or uncalled for by the beneficiaries designated to receive them under the authority contained in the several acts of Congress providing for the distribution and sale of this publication: Provided, That the Secretary of War may call upon the Public Printer to print and bind such parts of said work as will enable him to complete the sets herein provided for.*

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. PERKINS, Mr. CHICKERING, and Mr. RICHARDSON as conferees on the part of the House.

KANSAS, OKLAHOMA AND GULF RAILWAY.

The SPEAKER. There is on the Speaker's table Senate bill 4738. An equivalent House bill has been reported and is on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the Senate bill be taken up and passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 4738) to authorize the Kansas, Oklahoma and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Chilocco Indian Reservation, Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That a right of way 100 feet in width through the Chilocco Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Oklahoma, is hereby granted to the Kansas, Oklahoma and Gulf Railway Company, a railway corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of said territory; and also is hereby granted to said company, where there are heavy cuts or fills, the right to use such additional grounds as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the roadbed, not exceeding 50 feet in width on each side of the said right of way, or so much thereof as shall be included in the cuts or fills: Provided, That no part of the lands herein granted shall be used except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railway and telegraph and telephone lines, and when any portion thereof shall cease to be used for such purposes the same shall revert to the United States: And provided further, That a map of definite location, showing the entire route of said railway through the said Indian reservation, shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior before any part of the said railway shall be constructed through or into said reservation.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PROTECTION FOR GIRLS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees rests with the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, when this call was last under consideration before the House the Judiciary Committee had presented the bill H. R. 1136, which had passed to the question on the final passage of the bill. Upon that the point of no quorum was made; and so it stands now for a vote upon the passage.

The SPEAKER. Were the yeas and nays ordered?

Mr. HENDERSON. They were not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1136) to raise the age of protection for girls in the District of Columbia to 18 years.

Mr. HENDERSON. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BRODERICK] has charge of the bill.

Mr. BRODERICK. I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRODERICK. When this bill was before the House a few days ago for consideration the amendments of the committee were adopted and the bill passed a third reading, and on the final passage the question of a quorum was raised. Now, I desire to know if by unanimous consent I could offer an amendment at this time?

The SPEAKER. Was the House dividing when the question was up for consideration?

Mr. BRODERICK. I think it was. I think a division was called for.

Mr. HENDERSON. On a standing vote no quorum appeared, whereupon the point was made, and an adjournment was carried.

The SPEAKER. It is too late now to offer an amendment except by reconsidering the motion by which the engrossment and third reading of the bill were ordered—if that is not now too late.

But, without objection, the motion by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time will be considered as vacated.

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask my colleague the nature of the amendment proposed to be offered?

Mr. BRODERICK. I will send it to the desk and have it read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 11, page 1, after the word "imprisonment," the following: "Provided, That the uncorroborated evidence of the female involved shall not be sufficient to warrant a conviction under this act."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the bill read as it will stand after the amendments are incorporated.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let us have the bill read as it will stand if amended.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be read as it will read if amended as proposed.

The bill was read at length with the proposed amendments.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman from Kansas will permit me, it seems to me that this amendment is not fortunately worded. It ought to be that the uncorroborated evidence shall not be "conclusive," not that it shall not be "sufficient," because there may be instances where it might be entirely sufficient, but the jury would not be permitted to consider it as sufficient or conclusive under the wording of the amendment as proposed.

Mr. BRODERICK. I will say to the gentleman that a similar statute exists in many of the States of the Union. They are differently worded in the different States. This amendment is substantially in the language of the statute of the State of New York.

Mr. McMILLIN. But under this provision, if the testimony in question were the only evidence offered, then the jury, even if they were absolutely convinced of the guilt of the party, could not find a conviction under it; whereas by changing the phraseology and using the word "conclusive" in place of "sufficient" you leave the question for the determination of the jury.

Mr. BRODERICK. Does the gentleman suggest an amendment?

Mr. McMILLIN. I would simply make that modification.

Mr. RAY of New York. No kind of evidence can ever be "conclusive" in a criminal case, because, even if it is uncontradicted testimony, it is a question of fact for the consideration of the jury.

Mr. McMILLIN. But here, even if the jury is convinced, and if they are satisfied of the guilt of the party, all the evidence must be set aside and no conviction can follow unless the testimony is corroborated in some other way.

Mr. RAY of New York. But this is a proposition simply that the uncorroborated evidence of one of the parties shall not be sufficient to warrant conviction.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is just the point I am making. That under no circumstances could a conviction follow, in the language of that amendment, even in a case where the jury and the community and all are satisfied that the evidence is ample and sufficient to warrant conviction. Now, you do not leave to the determination of the jury the question of the conclusiveness of the evidence, but you provide explicitly that this uncorroborated evidence shall not be sufficient to warrant the conviction. You should provide, if you are going to amend it in this way, that such evidence shall not be conclusive—not that it shall not be sufficient, because in many cases it may be entirely sufficient.

Mr. BRODERICK. This is in substance the language of the statute of many of the States.

Mr. McMILLIN. That may be—

Mr. MORRIS. Let me ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. How could a case arise where the uncorroborated testimony of one of the parties involved could be conclusive or sufficient unless there were other corroborating circumstances?

Mr. McMILLIN. Oh, there are many convictions on the testimony of one witness only. Many murder cases have been determined upon the testimony of a single witness, and many murderers have been hung and many men punished for the crime of arson and other crimes on the testimony of a single witness.

Mr. BRODERICK. There are, Mr. Speaker, as I have already said, statutes similar to this in nearly all of the States of the Union as to perjury and some other crimes, and this is substantially the statute as it reads now in three or four of the great States of the Union on this subject and seduction. But every lawyer knows that the testimony of the woman involved in a trial charging rape or seduction may be corroborated by circumstances. This amendment does not mean that there shall always be another living witness placed upon the stand. It is differently worded in the different statutes. I think this is substantially the New York statute. I examined it some time ago, but did not have it before me when I drew the amendment. I drafted it from my recollection of that statute.

Mr. McMILLIN. Your statute will amount to but little if framed in the form in which you propose this.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to my friend from Tennessee that the statute of the State of New York has worked very well for a great many years. We never have had any trouble in convicting guilty parties under it.

Mr. McMILLIN. You will have no trouble from convictions under this, I am inclined to think.

Mr. PAYNE. In an ordinarily intelligent community like the State of New York there is no trouble about convicting in cases where the party is guilty. Corroborating evidence, of course, may be circumstantial entirely. It is generally circumstantial, but no such result as my friend contemplates takes place in the State of New York. We have another provision in our statute which I do not see in this, and which I think ought to be here, and that is that in case of seduction under promise of marriage—

Mr. BARNEY. I should like to ask if under this amendment corroborative evidence of a circumstantial kind will be sufficient?

Mr. BRODERICK. Oh, yes; there can be no question upon that point.

Mr. PAYNE. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BARNEY. It does not involve the necessity of another witness.

Mr. BRODERICK. No; not at all.

Mr. BARNEY. Then I do not see how it changes the law to a very large extent.

Mr. PAYNE. In most of the States a person can not be convicted on the evidence of an accomplice unless that evidence is corroborated, and in all those cases the corroboration may be circumstantial. The reason for the rule is that the interested party shall not have all the say before the jury. This proceeds upon the same principle.

Mr. BARNEY. I think the history of that kind of cases in this country will show that there has been very few cases in which a conviction has been obtained without some corroborative evidence, circumstantial or otherwise.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If there is no evidence to corroborate the complaining witness, it tends to show bad character, and for that reason I think the amendment is a proper one.

Mr. RAY of New York. I should like to ask what is the effect of this bill? It reads:

That if any person shall seduce and carnally know any female of previous chaste character between the ages of 16 and 21 years, out of wedlock, in the District of Columbia, such seduction and carnal knowledge shall be deemed a misdemeanor.

I should like to ask what the effect would be, supposing a man should seduce and carnally know a woman under 16 years of age out of wedlock?

Mr. McMILLIN. That is provided for already.

Mr. RAY of New York. What is provided for?

Mr. BRODERICK. A statute which we passed three or four years ago, and which this does not modify or interfere with, provided that carnally knowing a female under 16 years of age under any circumstances shall be rape.

Mr. RAY of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman if there is any law applicable to the District of Columbia which makes it an offense to seduce and carnally know a female of previously chaste character who is upward of 21 years of age?

Mr. BRODERICK. There is not. I looked it up carefully. Fearing that I might have overlooked some statute, I referred the matter, with a copy of the bill, to the attorney of the District of Columbia, Mr. S. T. Thomas, and he says in reply:

We have no law making seduction a criminal offense. I quite agree with you that the bill should be amended so as to extend protection to females up to the age of 21 years.

This is signed by F. T. Thomas, attorney, District of Columbia.

Mr. RAY of New York. Why should it not be a criminal offense to seduce and carnally know a female of previously chaste character who is upward of 21 years of age?

Mr. BRODERICK. I think it should; but you know the trouble we had in committee to get it through in this form.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that if he amended his bill so as to make seduction under promise of marriage punishable, he might eliminate the age of consent entirely.

Mr. BRODERICK. It has been amended, and I now think we had better pass it as it is. If there are no further observations to be made upon the bill, I call for a vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent to vacate the action of the House in ordering the bill to be engrossed. Is there objection to that?

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, as I understood, the gentleman asked consent to offer this notwithstanding the previous question—letting the previous question remain.

Mr. DALZELL. No; the engrossment and third reading have been ordered.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the first thing to do is to submit the question suggested by the Speaker.

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to reserve the right to object until I can ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. BRODERICK. Let us have a vacation of the order, adopt my amendment, and then pass the bill. It is in the interests of good government and correct conduct.

The SPEAKER. The matter is not up for unanimous consent; it is before the House on its passage, the previous question not having been ordered. The House was dividing. If the gentleman from Kansas desires to offer an amendment, it is necessary to vacate the action of the House ordering the bill to be engrossed. Is there objection?

Mr. BABCOCK. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The question, then, is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was passed.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the title amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title of the bill so as to read:

"A bill for the punishment of seduction in the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the title will be amended as read. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

On motion of Mr. BRODERICK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE AND ST. PAUL RAILWAY.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed to call up the House joint resolution 262, and yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] who reported the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 262) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to refund and return to the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company $15,335.78, in accordance with the decision of the Secretary of the Interior dated March 3, 1898.

Whereas the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company, in 1880, being duly authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, entered into negotiations with the Sioux Indians for right of way for a railroad through the Sioux Reservation in Dakota Territory; and

Whereas an agreement was entered into by said railway company and certain chiefs and headmen of the Sioux Nation of Indians, and pending the ratification of said agreement the said railway company deposited or paid to the Secretary of the Interior $15,335.76 to be applied as said right of way, depot grounds, etc., in case the same were obtained for said company; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior deposited said money in the Treasury of the United States and sent said agreements to Congress for ratification, which said agreements were never ratified and none of the lands or rights of way were ever secured by said railroad company, but all of the said lands remained a part of the reservation until ceded by the said Indians subsequently to the United States; and

Whereas application was made to the Secretary of the Interior for the return of said money to said company, and on March 3, 1893, the said Secretary decided that said $15,335.76 should be returned to said company and ordered an account to be stated therefor, which requisition for repayment and return of the money was sent to the Treasury; and

Whereas it is claimed by the Auditor for the Interior Department of the Treasury that no authority exists for the repayment and return of the same: Therefore,

Resolved, etc. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund, return, and pay to the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company the amount paid or deposited by said company with the Secretary of the Interior, and by him covered into the Treasury of the United States, as shown by Executive Document No. 20, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, to wit, the sum of $15,335.76, and for which no consideration was received by said company, said repayment to be on the account stated and in accordance with the decision of the Secretary of the Interior dated March 3, 1893, ordering a refund thereof.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has passed a joint resolution identical with this, and it is now on the Speaker's table. It is Senate joint resolution 168. I ask that the House joint resolution 262 do lie on the table and that the House now take up the Senate joint resolution 168.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the House joint resolution do lie on the table and that the Senate resolution be taken up in its stead. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the House resolution will lie on the table; and the question is upon the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. UPDEGRAFF, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEALS.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 8379. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8379) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891.

Be it enacted, etc. That the sixth section of the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 1. That the circuit courts of appeals established by this act shall exercise appellate jurisdiction to review by appeal or by writ of error final decision in the district court and the existing circuit courts in all cases other than those provided for in the preceding section of this act, unless otherwise provided by law, and shall have appellate jurisdiction to hear and determine an appeal or writ of error, from interlocutory orders and decrees appointing or refusing to appoint receivers, or allowing or refusing to allow injunctions, notwithstanding an appeal in such case upon final decree would, under the statutes regulating such cases, go direct to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the judgments or decrees of the circuit courts of appeals shall be final in all cases in which the jurisdiction is dependent entirely upon the opposite parties to the suit or controversy, being aliens and citizens of the United States or citizens of different States; also, in all cases arising under the patent laws, under the revenue laws, and under the criminal laws and in admiralty cases, excepting that in every such subject within its appellate jurisdiction the circuit court of appeals at any time may certify to the Supreme Court of the United States any questions or propositions of law concerning which it desires the instruction of that court for its proper decision. And thereupon the Supreme Court may either give its instruction on the questions and propositions certified to it, which shall be binding upon the circuit courts of appeals in such case, or it may require that the whole record and cause may be sent up to it for its consideration, and thereupon shall decide the whole matter in controversy in the same manner as if it had been brought there for review by writ of error or appeal.

"And excepting also that in any such case as is hereinbefore made final in the circuit court of appeals it shall be competent for the Supreme Court to require, by certiorari or otherwise, any such case to be certified to the Supreme Court for its review and determination with the same power and authority in the case as if it had been carried by appeal or writ of error to the Supreme Court.

"In all cases not hereinbefore in this section made final there shall be of right an appeal or writ of error or review of the case by the Supreme Court of the United States where the matter in controversy shall exceed $1,000 besides costs. But no such appeal shall be taken or writ of error sued out unless within one year after the entry of the order, judgment, or decree sought to be reviewed."

Sec. 2. That section 7 of said act as amended by act of February 13, 1895, 28 Statutes at Large, pages 666 and 667, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That where, upon a hearing in equity in a district court or a circuit court, an injunction shall be granted, continued, refused, or dissolved by an interlocutory order or decree, or an application to dissolve an injunction shall be refused, or where an application for the appointment of a receiver shall be either granted or refused, in a case in which an appeal from a final decree may be taken under the provisions of this act to the circuit court of appeals, an appeal may be taken from such interlocutory order or decree granting, continuing, refusing, dissolving or refusing to dissolve an injunction, or the appointment or refusal to appoint a receiver, to the circuit court of appeals: Provided, That the appeal must be taken within thirty days from the entry of such order or decree, and it shall take precedence in the appellate court; and the proceedings in other respects in the court below shall not be stayed unless otherwise ordered by that court during the pendency of such appeal: And provided further, That the court below may in its discretion require as a condition of the appeal an additional bond."

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 3, page 1, before the word "That," insert "Sec. 1."

In line 9, page 1, after the word "Sec.," strike out "1" and insert "6."

On page 2, line 17, after the word "receivers," insert "or vacating or refusing to vacate such an order or decree."

On page 4, line 11, after the word "receiver," insert "or for the vacation of such appointment."

On page 4, line 16, after the word "receiver," insert "or for the vacation of such appointment."

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the first question is on the amendments to the bill.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to. Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, it strikes me this is a rather important bill, and I do not recollect to have gone over that matter carefully. I would like to hear the reading of the report.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, if my colleague will allow me, I will remind him that this is the bill of the National American Bar Association, drawn by that association, and on which a committee was sent here to bring it to the attention of the Committees on the Judiciary of the House and Senate.

Mr. TERRY. It seems more lengthy than I thought it was.

Mr. HENDERSON. In the act creating the circuit courts of appeals, by an oversight, as it is believed, it failed to make any provision for granting a review in cases where receivers were appointed or the appointment of receiver was refused.

Mr. TERRY. Let me ask you this: Most of the language employed in this bill just sets out the law now existing, and you put in the amendments?

Mr. HENDERSON. It is read as amended.

Mr. TERRY. The object is as you have stated?

Mr. HENDERSON. That, and that only. That is the whole purpose.

Mr. TERRY. Then I do not care for the reading of the report.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ATTORNEYS AND MARSHALS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 1726 and yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER] who has charge of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1726) concerning attorneys and marshals of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc. That the attorneys and marshals of the United States, including the District of Columbia and the Territories, shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices, unless sooner removed by the President, until their successors shall be appointed and qualify in their stead. But they shall be appointed and commissioned for the term of four years as now provided by law.

Sec. 2. That in case of a vacancy in either of said offices, the district court of the United States for the district where such vacancy exists, the supreme court of the Territory, and the supreme court of the District of Columbia may appoint persons to exercise the duties of such offices within their respective jurisdictions until such vacancy shall be filled.

Mr. HENDERSON. There are no amendments to this bill, Mr. Speaker.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF MENARD COUNTY, STATE OF TEXAS, TO NORTHERN DISTRICT.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 9955.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9955) to transfer the county of Menard, in the State of Texas, from the western district of Texas to the northern district of Texas, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc. That the county of Menard, in the State of Texas, now included in and a part of the western district of Texas, shall be hereafter in, and constitute part of, the northern district of Texas.

Sec. 2. That all offenses committed in said county of Menard prior to the time this act goes into operation, of which the district court of said western district had jurisdiction, and upon which proceedings had been taken, shall be tried and prosecuted as if this act had not been passed; and all civil suits and proceedings now pending in the circuit or district courts in said State shall not be affected by this act.

Sec. 3. That from and after the passage of this act all causes of criminal or civil nature, originating in said county of Menard and heretofore returnable to the Federal district court of the western district of Texas, at Austin, Tex., shall be returnable to the Federal district court of the northern district of Texas at San Angelo, Tex.

Sec. 4. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the Clerk read the report on this bill? It is very brief.

The report (by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9955) entitled "A bill to transfer the county of Menard in the State of Texas, from the western district of Texas to the northern district of Texas, and for other purposes," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment:

The title clearly states the object of the bill. Sections 2, 3, and 4 provide for pending cases and that cases originating in Menard County and heretofore returnable at Austin, Tex., shall hereafter be returnable in the northern district at San Angelo, Tex.

Austin is 180 miles from Menardville, the county seat of Menard County, and to go to Austin requires a stage journey of 80 miles to Llano and 100 miles by rail thence to Austin. The distance from Menardville to San Angelo is 53 miles.

A numerously signed petition from Menard County advocates the change, the signatures including those of the judge, sheriff, tax collector, clerk, county treasurer, tax assessor, county surveyor, and county commissioners, and the bill is urged by the Representative of the district in which Menard County is situated.

The Representative of the district in which Austin is situated files his consent that Menard County, which is now returnable at Austin, should be returnable to San Angelo, which is nearer to Menard.

The committee respectfully report the bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. HENDERSON. There are no amendments, Mr. Speaker, to this bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BONDS REQUIRED OF CONSULS AND VICE-CONSULS.

Mr. HENDERSON. I now call up the bill H. R. 8925 and yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OTJEN] who introduced the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8925) to amend sections 1693 and 1734 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1693 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is, amended by inserting after the word "every" the words "vice-consul-general or;" and after the word "sureties" the words "who shall be permanent residents of the United States;" so that said section, when so amended, shall read as follows:

"SEC. 1693. Every vice-consul-general or vice-consul shall, before he enters on the execution of his trust, give bonds, with such sureties, who shall be permanent residents of the United States, as shall be approved by the Secretary of State, in a sum not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000, conditioned for the true and faithful discharge of the duties of his office according to law, and for truly accounting for all moneys, goods, and effects which may come into his possession by virtue of his office. The bond shall be lodged in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury."

SEC. 2. That section 1734 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is, amended by inserting after the words "succeeding quarter" the following words: "Or who shall receive money, property, or effects belonging to a citizen of the United States and shall not, within a reasonable time after demands made upon him by the Secretary of State or by such citizen, his executor, administrator, or legal representative, account for and pay over all moneys, property, and effects, less his lawful fees, due to such citizen," and by striking out of said section, after the word "embezzlement," the words "of the public moneys;" and after the words "not more than" the word "one," and insert in lieu thereof the word "five;" so that said section, when so amended, shall read as follows:

"SEC. 1734. Every consular officer who willfully neglects to render true and just quarterly accounts and returns of the business of his office, and of moneys received by him for the use of the United States, or who neglects to pay over any balance of said moneys due to the United States at the expiration of any quarter, before the expiration of the next succeeding quarter, or who shall receive money, property, or effects belonging to a citizen of the United States and shall not within a reasonable time after demand made upon him by the Secretary of State or by such citizen, his executor, administrator, or legal representative, account for and pay over all moneys, property, and effects, less his lawful fees, due to such citizen, shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement, and shall be punishable by imprisonment for not more than five years, and by a fine of not more than $2,000, and shall be forever disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit under the United States."

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

On page 1 strike out lines 5, 6, 7, and 8, to the word "read," in line 8, and insert the word "to," before the word "read" in said line 8.

Amend section 2, on page 2, by striking out all after the word "amended," in line 3, to the word "read," in line 14, and insert the word "to" before the word "read" in said line 14, on page 2.

On page 2, line 13, after the word "Treasury," insert:

"In case of a breach of any such bond, any person thereby injured may institute in his own name and for his sole use a suit on said bond, and thereupon recover such damages as shall be legally assessed with costs of suit, for which execution may issue for him in due form; but if such party fails to recover in the suit, judgment shall be rendered and execution may issue against him for costs in favor of the defendant, and the United States shall in no case be liable for the same."

"Said bonds shall remain after any judgment rendered thereon as a security for the benefit of any person injured by a breach of the condition of the same until the whole penalty has been recovered, and the proceedings shall always be as directed in this section."

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Speaker, this is simply a bill to correct an obvious omission in the general law. Some two years ago Mr. Francis Hinton, a citizen of Wisconsin, died in Paris. He had upon his person several thousand dollars in money. This money was turned over to the vice-consul at Paris, who embezzled the money, and never a dollar has been recovered from him. This matter was called to the attention of the State Department, and that Department, after a thorough examination of the law, notified the representatives of Mr. Hinton that there was no law upon the statute books under which a consul or vice-consul could be punished for embezzling the funds of a private citizen.

This consul had also given a bond of $2,000, but those on the bonds were foreign sureties; so that the bond is worthless and there is no law by which the vice-consul can be prosecuted criminally. This act simply amends the law in two particulars. First, those who make the bond are required to be American citizens; second, to amend the law so that any consul or vice-consul can be criminally punished in case of embezzlement.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OTJEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next committee.

The Clerk called the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

When the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was called,

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized by the committee to call up the bill (H. R. 10379) to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby empowered to convene boards of inquiry and boards of survey for the enforcement of discipline and promoting the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, such boards to be composed of such convenient numbers of officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service as the exigencies of the service will permit; and the Secretary shall formulate regulations and prescribe methods of procedure for the general and specific government of all boards that may be convened by his order under the provisions of this act: Provided, That boards of survey may also be convened by officers commanding vessels of the Revenue-Cutter Service to examine and report upon public property in their charge and for other purposes, and boards of investigation to examine into and report upon offenses committed by enlisted men, when so ordered by the Secretary of the Treasury or provided in the regulations of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

SEC. 2. That if an officer subject to examination for promotion shall be absent on duty, and by reason of such absence or other cause not involving fault on his part shall not be so examined, but shall afterwards be examined and found qualified for promotion, the increased rate of pay to which his promotion will entitle him shall commence from the date of the occurrence of the vacancy to which he would have been promoted had he been present for examination and found qualified for such promotion.

SEC. 3. That all persons composing the enlisted force of the Revenue-Cutter Service shall be enlisted to serve for a term not to exceed three years, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall prepare regulations governing such enlistments and for the general government of the Revenue-Cutter Service. And any person enlisted in the Revenue-Cutter Service shall be physically sound and be examined, to ascertain his physical condition, by a medical officer of the Marine-Hospital Service or by a physician in good standing in the profession, who shall certify the condition of the candidate for enlistment to the commanding officer of the vessel of the Revenue-Cutter Service whereon the person is to be enlisted.

SEC. 4. That the monthly pay or wages of the person so enlisted shall begin upon the date of his enlistment and terminate upon his discharge for cause, or by order of the Treasury Department, or upon the expiration of his term of enlistment.

SEC. 5. That in event of the death or desertion of an enlisted person from the Revenue-Cutter Service the commanding officer of the vessel shall take charge of all moneys, clothes, and effects which he leaves on board and shall cause all or any of such clothes or effects to be sold by auction at the mast, and shall, at the conclusion of such sale, make a full and detailed report to the Secretary of the Treasury, embracing the following particulars:

First. A statement of the amount of money left by the deserter or deceased.

Second. In case of sale, the sum received for each article sold.

Third. A statement of the sum due the deceased or deserter on the pay roll of the vessel.

SEC. 6. That in cases embraced in the preceding section the following rules shall be observed:

First. Within one week from the date of the death or desertion of an enlisted person the commanding officer of the vessel upon which the deceased or deserter was serving shall, if practicable, deposit any money of which he has taken charge or received from such sale with the collector of the port whereat the vessel may for the time being be stationed, take his receipt therefor, and forward the same to the Department.

Second. Out of any money due the deceased or deserter under the provisions of the preceding section the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be paid any just debts he may have contracted, as far as the sum in hand may be adequate; the residue, if any there be, in the case of a deceased person, to be paid to his legal representatives.

SEC. 7. That any person who shall have been lawfully enlisted under the provisions of this act who shall commit any of the following offenses shall be punishable as follows:

First. For desertion, by imprisonment for not more than six months and forfeiture of all money due and all clothes and effects he may leave on board the vessel upon which he may have been in service, and be entered upon the ship's journal as a deserter from the date of desertion.

Second. For willful disobedience of any lawful command or commands of an officer, by imprisonment for not more than thirty days or by forfeiture to the Government of not more than ten days' pay, or both.

Third. For continued disobedience of lawful commands, by imprisonment for not more than sixty days or discharge from the service.

Fourth. For assaulting a commissioned or other officer, by imprisonment for not more than two years or discharge from the service, or both.

Fifth. For combining with others of the crew of any vessel of the Revenue-Cutter Service to disobey lawful commands, or to neglect duty, or impede the navigation of the vessel, by imprisonment for not more than twelve months or forfeiture to the United States of all money due as pay or wages, or discharge from the service, or all said penalties.

Sixth. For willfully damaging the vessel, its boats, or any property or appurtenances belonging thereto, by forfeiture out of his pay of a sum equal in amount to such loss or damage, and also, in the discretion of the court, by imprisonment for not more than twelve months.

SEC. 8. That in all cases of imprisonment of enlisted men, as hereinbefore provided, such enlisted person may be at once discharged from the service of the United States and the vacancy thus created shall be filled by promotion and enlistment.

SEC. 9. That for the enforcement of the provisions of this act it shall be lawful for the commanding officer of a vessel of the Revenue-Cutter Service to apprehend, or cause to be apprehended by the force under his command, a deserter from the Revenue-Cutter Service, wherever found, and shall have authority to call on all persons to assist in such arrest, and all persons so assisting are hereby invested with the power and authority of deputy United States marshals, to be dealt with according to the provisions of this act governing such cases, and may detain him in custody or at once convey him on board the vessel from which he deserted.

SEC. 10. That absence without leave, in case of an enlisted person, for a period of three days, shall be regarded as desertion.

SEC. 11. That no officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service who has been dismissed, or suffered to resign in order to escape such dismissal, shall again become an officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to purchase, from the appropriation for the maintenance of the Revenue-Cutter Service, uniform clothing for the enlisted men of said service, the same to be issued to the crews of vessels in service: Provided, That the actual cost of the clothing thus sold to the enlisted men shall be withheld from their pay and repaid to said appropriation.

SEC. 13. That section 2757 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"The revenue cutters shall, whenever the President so directs, cooperate with the Navy, during which time they shall be under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy and the laws and regulations governing the Navy, and the expenses thereof shall be defrayed by the Navy Department. Officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service serving on such vessels in cooperation with the Navy shall receive the same pay, emoluments, and privileges as officers of the Navy, with whom they hold the relative rank prescribed by law."

SEC. 14. That no officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service shall be dismissed except by the President of the United States.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred several bills to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, unanimously report the accompanying bill as a substitute therefor and recommend the passage of the same for the benefit of the Government and the improvement of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

There is nothing in existing law covering even remotely the provisions of this bill.

As an organized integral arm of the public service, similar in features and duties to the organized Navy, it is obvious to your committee that it is imperative that the safeguards of law should be thrown around it, not only for the protection and well-being of the service itself, but as well for the advancement and promotion of its efficiency in matters of discipline and good administration.

The provisions of this bill are largely extensions of existing laws governing the kindred branches of the national services, the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

That the Revenue-Cutter Service should have the safeguards of law thrown around it, as have the kindred services, must be evident from its past and present status as an arm of the national defense. The service itself is as old as the Government, having been organized in 1790, and has taken an active and meritorious part in every war in which the nation has been involved from the quasi French war to the present war with Spain. Without going into the history of the service, and recounting its deeds in past wars, it is enough to show that since the beginning of the present war its vessels have taken a conspicuous and gallant part with the blockading and fighting fleets.

The revenue cutter Hamilton was the first of them to draw the fire of the enemy, when she landed a party of Cubans on a mission to the Cuban generals in the field, and in doing so was compelled to shell the coast and drive out Spanish soldiers. When the Hamilton first approached the shore the Spaniards opened a hot fire upon her, but she silenced them and landed her party without mishap.

The cutter Morrill, on the 6th instant (May, 1898), was in a lively fight off the Santa Clara batteries, when she, in company with the gunboat Vicksburg, attempted to capture a schooner which the Spaniards had sent out as a decoy from Havana. The Morrill and Vicksburg ran dangerously close to the Cuban coast, when the guns of Santa Clara battery opened on them with 10 and 12 inch shell, to which the American vessels replied with their smaller guns.

The Manning, another cutter, was with the Dorst expedition in its attempt to land United States soldiers, arms, and ammunition for the Cuban insurgents on the coast of Cuba, and shelled the woods, thus covering the landing of the troops.

The fight at Cardenas, where Ensign Bagley and four of the crew of the naval torpedo boat Winslow lost their lives, was participated in by the cutter Hudson from the beginning to the end. After the Winslow was disabled by the enemy's fire, her commanding officer severely wounded, one of her officers and four of her crew dead on her deck, the cutter Hudson, under a shower of shot, shell, and shrapnel from the enemy's batteries, got a line to the Winslow and towed her to a place of safety, thus rescuing her wounded commander, the remainder of her crew, and saving the Winslow itself.

The revenue cutter Windom was in the fight at Cienfuegos when the boats' crews from the gunboats Nashville and Marblehead cut the telegraph cables at that place, and it was the guns of the Windom which demolished the light-house, the rallying point of the Spanish forces on shore, scattered them, and ended the fight.

Section 13 of this bill provides for the amendment of section 2757, Revised Statutes, in order that the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service may at least be entitled to receive the same compensation as naval officers while in cooperation with them under the provisions of existing law.

Your committee unanimously submit a favorable report on the bill, with the recommendation that it be enacted into law.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, the report makes a very commendable showing for the Revenue-Cutter Service in the present war, but I would like to inquire of the gentleman what is the real object and purpose of this bill?

Mr. BENNETT. The real object and purpose of it is to give a standing to enlisted men in the Revenue-Cutter Service, and place the deserters from that service under the same law that governs the men who enlist in the Navy. It does not add one cent of appropriation for the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. TERRY. How much change does it make in existing law?

Mr. BENNETT. In most all of the provisions it is a change of the law or an extension of it. It would be impossible for me to detail just what was a slight change or what was simply an extension. There is not a provision in this bill that is unfair or unjust, and it has been recommended by every Secretary of the Navy for a number of years.

Mr. TERRY. Is it the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. BENNETT. It is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. The practical effect of the bill, as I understand it, is to make the Revenue-Cutter Service honorable, and to make dishonorable and disreputable desertions from that service.

Mr. BENNETT. Exactly.

Mr. RAY of New York. Has the bill been submitted to the Attorney-General of the United States?

Mr. BENNETT. It has been reported on favorably by the Secretary of the Treasury and by the Assistant Secretary having charge of this division.

Mr. RAY of New York. Has it been submitted to the Attorney-General?

Mr. BENNETT. I can not say about that; it has been reported favorably upon by the Treasury Department.

Mr. RAY of New York. It is a very important bill.

Mr. BENNETT. I can not see any provisions in it that would require attention on the part of the gentleman.

Mr. RAY of New York. It creates new offenses and imposes heavy punishment.

Mr. TERRY. I want to call the gentleman's attention to one that seems a little extreme. On page 4 or 5, for assaulting a commissioned or other officer, a punishment is imposed of imprisonment for not more than two years or discharge from the service or both. Of course a subordinate ought never to assault an officer, but there are times when a subordinate is right in the altercation. That has been known to be the case in the Regular Army at times.

Mr. BENNETT. The penalties are no more severe than exist in other arms of the public service.

Mr. TERRY. I know; you are trying to assimilate this to the Navy, but it is well understood that it does not belong there, and you ought not to be quite so Draconian in your penalties.

Mr. RAY of New York. What is the legitimate purpose of the Revenue-Cutter Service?

Mr. BENNETT. The legitimate purpose is for the protection of the customs service, to protect vessels at sea during storms and to offer shelter to those shipwrecked, and to carry out the general orders of the Treasury Department at sea; to look out for the protection of its revenue and to guard against the violation of its customs laws.

Mr. RAY of New York. It is under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. BENNETT. Unless in case of war, as at present, the President orders so many of the vessels as he deems requisite under the command of the Secretary of the Navy, and the vessels then are, to all intents and purposes, naval vessels.

Mr. RAY of New York. By whom are they commanded?

Mr. BENNETT. By officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service, under the command of the commander of the squadron or of the fleet.

Mr. RAY of New York. Are they naval officers?

Mr. BENNETT. They are only put under charge of the Navy Department.

Mr. RAY of New York. What are they before that time?

Mr. BENNETT. They are Treasury officers. They have the right to search and the right to bring a vessel to that refuses to show her manifest.

Mr. BRODERICK. The President may at any time call them into active service, and then they are under the charge of the Navy Department.

Mr. MAHON. Yes; under an act of Congress.

Mr. BRODERICK. That has been done in every war that we have had.

Mr. TERRY. I think a measure of this importance ought to have a little more careful examination. I do not see present the principal member on the minority side of this committee—

Mr. MANN. For the information of the gentleman from Arkansas I will say, in the absence of the leading members of the minority of the committee, that this matter was considered in the committee quite fully upon several different days, and the bill as reported was perfectly satisfactory to all the members of the minority.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman permit a question which goes to the merits of the bill? The purpose of this measure, as I understand, is to raise the standard of the Revenue-Marine Service to the dignity of the naval service.

Mr. MANN. Well, the particular purpose at this time is that the sailors in the Revenue-Cutter Service shall be subject to some kind of discipline—

Mr. KING. Have they not performed faithful service under the superintendence which now controls them?

Mr. MANN. Complaint has been made by the Treasury Department that there was no method—

Mr. KING. I understood that your report was very laudatory of the conduct of the men engaged in that service; and if the report is true (as I have no reason to doubt it is), the services which those men have performed have been just as efficient under the present management as they would be if a change were made.

Mr. MANN. The Treasury Department has made some complaint. But the gentleman must remember that in time of war there is a very different status of affairs from a time of peace. The Revenue-Cutter Service is now practically under the control of the Navy Department, and most of the revenue-cutter boats are in the Navy.

Mr. DOCKERY. And they are subject to naval regulations, are they not?

Mr. TERRY. If this bill were limited to times of war, when the Revenue-Cutter Service is transferred to the control of the Navy Department, it might be very proper. But the gentleman has spoken of "discipline." We all recollect the time when humanity was outraged by the "discipline" of flogging the sailors, even in the American Navy as well as in the merchant marine, and by other cruel forms of "discipline." I do not know how much of that kind of thing we are to get under this bill.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing of that sort in the bill.

Mr. TERRY. I do not believe in "discipline" of the kind we have had in times past, except in time of war, when, of course, discipline can scarcely be too strict.

Mr. MANN. I repeat, there is nothing of that sort in the bill.

Mr. BENNETT. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DAVEY] represents the minority of the committee—

Mr. TERRY. I did not see him present at the time I made the remark.

Mr. BENNETT. If he had been here, I should not have had anything to say. This bill was under consideration by our committee for several days. The bill as first presented to us was unsatisfactory, and was amended by the committee. As thus amended it has been unanimously reported, the minority as well as the majority members joining in the report.

Mr. TERRY. I did not like the statement brought into this debate a while ago that the object of the bill is to "discipline" these men of the Revenue-Cutter Service. If you want to "discipline" them in time of war, that is all right; but I would not have such strict rules applied in time of peace.

Mr. RAY of New York. I wish to raise a point of order against this bill. I insist that it is not in order under this call, and that it must be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BENNETT. The bill does not carry any appropriation on its face—

Mr. RAY of New York. I call attention to section 12.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to say to the gentleman from New York that I think a bill of such importance as this ought not to be considered in the hasty method now proposed. There are very few members here, and I ask the gentleman to let the bill go over without prejudice so that we may have a chance to look into it.

Mr. BENNETT. If our committee can be passed without prejudice, I am perfectly willing to allow the bill to go over.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BENNETT. And also that the committee be passed without prejudice, owing to the circumstances.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. RAY of New York. I do not understand the request.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

the military record of James T. Hughes;" and

H. R. 2080. An act to correct the military record of Edward P.

Jennings.

APPEALS, UNITED STATES COURT, ALASKA.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I inadvertently omitted to call up a little bill from my committee which ought to be considered and passed at this time.

The SPEAKER. The bill which has just been withdrawn will be in order on the next call of the committee.

Mr. BENNETT. And the committee will also be in order on the call, under the peculiar circumstances, I presume, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Without objection, the gentleman from Iowa will present a bill from the Committee on the Judiciary.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. We reserve all rights in connection with the matter.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 10510) providing for the transfer from the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit to the Supreme Court of certain appeals from the district court for Alaska.

I overlooked this bill when responding to the call of committees, and yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE].

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That all cases, civil and criminal, filed on appeal from the district court of the United States for the District of Alaska in the United States circuit court of appeals for the ninth judicial circuit, and pending on appeal therein on and prior to the 30th day of December, 1897, of which the Supreme Court of the United States would have had jurisdiction under the then existing law, if a proper appeal had been taken thereto at the time said cases were filed on appeal in said circuit court of appeals, be, and the same are, deemed and treated as regularly filed on appeal in the Supreme Court of the United States as of the date when filed in said circuit court of appeals. The clerk of said circuit court of appeals is directed to transmit to the Supreme Court of the United States, as soon as practicable, the records of such cases, and the clerk of said Supreme Court is directed to receive and file the same for hearing and determination in the Supreme Court of the United States when regularly reached on the docket, subject to any rules made or to be made by said court which may be applicable.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HENDERSON. I have yielded the floor to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE].

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. At any other time, when convenient, I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a few moments. It is immaterial whether it be before or after the gentleman from Oregon has been heard.

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a substitute for one introduced by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Lewis] and one introduced by myself, covering substantially the same point.

Prior to December, 1897, the court of appeals located at San Francisco, Cal., had assumed to entertain jurisdiction of appeals from the Alaskan court in common-law cases. About that time the Supreme Court of the United States decided on a case appealed to it that such cases could not properly be appealed to the appellate court at San Francisco, but should have been appealed directly to the Supreme Court of the United States.

This bill is to authorize the transfer of the appeals then pending to the Supreme Court of the United States as if the appeal had been made at that time.

The substitute as drawn, and which is now before the House for consideration, was drawn after a consultation with the Attorney-General of the United States and has the approval of that official. I trust there will be no objection to its passage.

I yield now such portion of my time as the gentleman may desire to my friend from Washington.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire only to supplement the explanation of the gentleman from Oregon by saying to the House, if I may be permitted to make a personal allusion, that I participated in the case out of which the decision grew which makes necessary the passage of this legislation.

The circuit court of appeals act of 1891 repealed all legislation on the subject of appeals from the Territorial courts. Previously the appeals from the Territorial court was to the Supreme Court of the United States. But in an appeal in the Coquitlam case and in Noyes case the Supreme Court held that because of the act of 1891, repealing all prior legislation on the subject and omitting the Territory of Alaska, there was a casus omissus, and therefore there was no provision for an appeal from the district court of Alaska.

The provision of the pending bill remedies this defect, and the bill simply names Alaska and locates appeals from the district court of Alaska to the circuit court of appeals; and the legislation proposed is necessary because of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States to the effect that the effort to appeal to the circuit court of appeals was void by reason of the legislative omission, to which I have referred, and that the appeals should be taken directly to the Supreme Court. All appeals heretofore taken are to remain in the Supreme Court of the United States. All other cases are to go to the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit, held at San Francisco. I assure the House that no rights attach to any litigant that without it would not have followed. I trust no objection may be urged.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAHON. Would it be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider bills on the Union Calendar? The call of committees has proceeded for over an hour.

The SPEAKER. An hour has elapsed, and it is in order for the House to do it upon motion.

Mr. MAHON. I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business upon the Union Calendar.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. TERRY) there were—ayes 23, noes 17.

Mr. TERRY. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused, 21 members, not a sufficient number, rising in support of the demand.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of business on the Union Calendar, with Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill.

CLAIMS OF CERTAIN CITIZENS OF PENNSYLVANIA.

The first business on the Union Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20) to provide for the adjudication and payment of damages sustained by citizens of the United States in the border counties of York, Adams, Cumberland, Franklin, Fulton, Bedford, Somerset, and Perry, in the State of Pennsylvania, from Union and Confederate troops during the late war of the rebellion.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, in order to save the time of the House, I should like to make a brief statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has not yet been read.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have the bill read.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will have to be read, unless the reading is dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. MAHON. I want to substitute another bill and have it read in place of this one, and I feel confident that the House will do it after I make a short statement. It is a bill of the same nature, relating to the same claim.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion would not be debatable unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. MAHON. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, House bill 20 was drawn up and offered to the House, but some of the best lawyers of the House thought that bill did not sufficiently protect the Government in the investigation of these claims which we will come to after a while. Another bill was drawn up, which is No. 10371. I will say frankly that this bill was drawn under the supervision of my colleague [Mr. DALZELL]. This bill fully protects the interests of the Government and is a much better bill than the first one. In order to save the time of the House, I ask to substitute the bill H. R. 10371 in place of the bill H. R. 20.

Mr. DOCKERY. How much does the last bill carry?

Mr. MAHON. It does not carry a dollar. The object of the bill is that the cases shall go to the Court of Claims, and finally to the United States Supreme Court, to settle a long-standing question as to the legality of these claims.

Mr. DOCKERY. With power to enter judgment.

Mr. MAHON. Well, yes; the Supreme Court of the United States may—

Mr. TERRY. As I read that bill, while professing to submit this matter to the discretion and judgment of the court, it virtually, by direction of the bill, is a command that, upon certain evidence, the finding shall be so and so.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a statement to the gentleman. I think he has reference to another bill, the one which we have just taken up from the Calendar.

Mr. TERRY. I have sent for the bill.

Mr. DALZELL. I want to make a statement to the gentleman. Every old member of the House knows that these claims have been presented to every Congress for the last eight or ten Congresses, always in the shape of a bill providing for the payment of the claims. Now, in this present Congress my colleague [Mr. MAHON] introduced a bill authorizing the reference of these claims to the Court of Claims. That is the bill to which the gentleman refers. Now, in examining that bill it occurred to me that it did provide just as the gentleman from Arkansas has stated—

Mr. TERRY. That is my reading of it.

Mr. DALZELL. That rather than a submission to the Court of Claims for a finding it was an order to the Court of Claims to find. Therefore, with the permission of my colleague, I took his bill and drew a new bill, which is the one that he wants to substitute now, which submits the whole matter to the Court of Claims under such safeguards that it seems to me the Treasury is fully protected. The question of law is submitted to the court, and even as to the matter of testimony I cut out of the bill the provision that made competent certain testimony heretofore taken.

Mr. TERRY. I want to say to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have no objection whatever to the payment of any legal claims of the citizens of Pennsylvania against the United States that are just and proper.

Mr. MAHON. That is all we want.

Mr. TERRY. There is a great big question in this, and that is this: Suppose that a party of Spaniards were to land on our coast or bombard our coast, would the Government of the United States be responsible for the damage inflicted by the Spaniards?

Mr. MAHON. No, sir; that is a different case.

Mr. TERRY. Well, now, in the very report—

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TERRY. Certainly.

Mr. MAHON. Let us substitute this bill, and then we will go on with the discussion.

Mr. TERRY. I want the House to understand what is the real merit or demerit of this bill and why I am raising the question. It is not that I am in opposition to the gentleman from Pennsylvania in the assertion of any just and legal claim against the Government of the United States.

Mr. DALZELL. Will my friend allow me? It seems to me that the question here now to be determined is not the merits of the claims. That is a matter to be referred to the Court of Claims. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the last section of this bill that is proposed to be substituted, to which is added, after all the other safeguards had been provided, section 13:

That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as an admission upon the part of the United States of the validity of the said alleged claims or of the liability of the United States for the payment thereof, it being the true intent of this act merely to secure to said claimants an opportunity to have their legal rights determined in the courts.

Now, it does not seem to me—

Mr. TERRY. When was this substitute put in?

Mr. DALZELL. It was reported on the 24th of May.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is the substitute reported?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. TERRY. I will continue my statement for a moment, for I feel that it is proper for me to explain to the House why I have made any objection whatever to this Pennsylvania claim. As I was going on to say, and as the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the committee, has admitted, the Government of the United States could not be held liable for any damage that might be inflicted by bombardment or the landing of Spaniards; now, while the war between the States was not between foreign foes, the Supreme Court, in the opinion that you quote from in your own report, has based and assimilated its decisions and holdings in regard to what took place during the war and put them upon precisely the same basis as if the Confederate States had been a foreign enemy; and the same regular consequences would follow, it occurs to me. I just say that now, in order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, for whom I have the kindest regard, may understand the point of my objection.

Mr. MAHONY. I would like to have the substitute read. If there is no objection to the bill being substituted, we will then have it read.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would like to know the amount of these claims.

Mr. MAHON. If the Supreme Court of the United States declares that under the Constitution, on account of the peculiar circumstances in this case—and there are no others like it in this country—if they decide under the Constitution the United States is legally bound to pay these claims, we will come back and ask for an appropriation of $3,000,000. Now, if the Supreme Court says there is no legal liability on the part of the Government, you will never hear of this case again.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does this provide for them finding a judgment?

Mr. MAHON. Of course if you go to the Supreme Court and we are given a judgment, then the claims come back here for the money.

Mr. TERRY. Now, as to the analogy to a case of landing or bombardment by the Spaniards, it has been held, and I quote now from the language of the report:

It has been held by this court—

That is, the United States Supreme Court, in the case of Pacific Railroad against The United States (120 United States Reports)—

It has been held by this court in repeated instances that, though the late war was not between independent nations, yet, as it was between the people of different sections of the country, and the insurgents were so thoroughly organized and formidable as to necessitate their recognition as belligerents, the usual incidents of a war between independent nations ensued. The rules of war as recognized by the public law of civilized nations became applicable to the contending forces.

Now, apply that to the other question and you will see that, though it was not a foreign war, the same principles would govern as if it were a case of bombardment or raid by Spain. And I tell you that unless this bill submits this case squarely to the judgment of the Supreme Court in a proper way and on purely a question of law, it is a very dangerous matter to enter into.

Mr. MAHON. It does submit it to the Supreme Court.

Mr. TERRY. I have not had time to examine the new bill so as to see whether it submits it on purely a question of law. Confessedly the first bill you introduced on this subject would have tied the hands of the courts.

Mr. MAHON. I surrendered that bill. I would like to get the bill up, and then we can proceed with the consideration of it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. MAHON. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to know, if it is legitimate to consider this claim, why every time we bring up a claim of Missouri or other border States where property was destroyed during the war, or where Union men's property was taken for the use of the United States Government, some of you gentlemen over there treat them as if the claimants were enemies of the country?

Mr. MAHON. I am not one of those who have done so.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not say that you are one of them, but your colleague, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], stood up here and voted against a $10,000 claim that was as just a claim as was ever presented to this House, and I think the gentleman who is presiding over the House now helped him with it.

Mr. DALZELL. It was defeated?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It was defeated.

Mr. DALZELL. Then the House defeated it.

Mr. MAHON. This bill affects the people of my Congressional district, and no other county in the State.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand that.

Mr. MAHON. I have always favored the payment of a claim that was adjudicated by the courts of the United States, and where the courts have passed upon the fact that this Government has been liable legally for the payment I have always stood for the payment, and I intend to do so.

There is no question about the fact. This bill provides that the Court of Claims shall ascertain all the facts surrounding the case and the appeal shall go to the Supreme Court, and one question alone is to be decided and that is under the fourth section of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The situation is this: Pennsylvania was invaded once, and there was a good deal of property destroyed. Missouri was invaded constantly, and property of thousands of Union men taken as liberally as if they were the rations out of the storehouses of the Government, and every time we come in to get a Union man reimbursed some gentleman over on that side fights it, and I am tired of the whole business.

Mr. DALZELL. We passed a bill allowing millions of these claims recently, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know we did pass some.

Mr. DALZELL. If any claims are defeated here, the House is responsible.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am holding the House responsible.

Mr. NORTHWAY. The State of Pennsylvania has paid none of these losses.

Mr. MAHON. Eight hundred thousand dollars of them.

Mr. NORTHWAY. But none of these in this bill. Is the bill broad enough so Ohio can come in under it?

Mr. MAHON. I am not representing Ohio; I am representing my own people. My predecessor in this House for seven years had a unanimous report of the Committee on War Claims making appropriation of $3,000,000. I declined to offer any such bill, and I have been here six years and never have. I represent the people under peculiar circumstances, and we think at least that we ought to have the right to go to the Court of Claims and then to the Supreme Court, and if the Supreme Court says that we have no legal standing, that ends it. We are not here begging money, but only to ask what is just and right.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a suggestion to the gentleman. I say the bill should be properly guarded, but it is very hard to determine points of this kind in a casual reading of the bill. Now, why would it not be well to let the bill be referred to the Judiciary Committee on one question alone, whether or not it is so properly guarded that it will submit to the Supreme Court solely the question of law?

Mr. MAHON. With all due respect to the Judiciary Committee, under the rules of this House it can not go there except by unanimous consent. With all due respect to that committee and the lawyers on it, this bill has been carefully drawn by lawyers, and I am satisfied they are amply able to do it. The Committee on War Claims has jurisdiction here of this bill alone.

Mr. TERRY. Were the lawyers who drew it members of the committee or outside lawyers?

Mr. MAHON. Both.

Mr. TERRY. Was it not drawn by the lawyers outside?

Mr. MAHON. I put a provision in the bill that no attorney should get one penny of the amount appropriated.

Mr. TERRY. We have a committee appointed and organized for the purpose of considering matters pertaining to the jurisdiction and reference of questions of that sort to the Supreme Court of the United States. Now, a matter involving millions of dollars, involving a great principle, which is especially important at this time when we have a foreign war on our hands, it seems to me we should guard very carefully the passage of such a bill.

Mr. MAHON. Let the gentleman have the substitute read and then we can discuss it.

Mr. MOODY. Is there any precedent for the appropriation of money for a claim arising out of the destruction of property in the actual operations of war?

Mr. MAHON. Yes; I have hundreds of them. The British in 1812 pushed up as far as Hagerstown and burnt all the property, and it was paid for by Congress. But my claim does not stand on that footing.

Mr. TERRY. You admitted that the claim was not binding—

Mr. MAHON. I claim that Pennsylvania has furnished all of her troops—

Mr. TERRY. You admitted that if Spain were to bombard the coast of the United States, the United States would not be responsible.

Mr. MAHON. If the gentleman will let the bill be read, I will state my position.

Mr. KING. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he has 200 or 300 precedents, or any precedent, to the effect that the Government is responsible for property destroyed by fighting in time of war?

Mr. MAHON. I say that Congress has appropriated in 300 cases for property destroyed by the British. I do not say that it is in accordance with the Constitution or the law, but Congress has paid it. But my claim does not rest on that foundation. We want to go to the Supreme Court of the United States under the fourth clause of the Constitution, and if the people are not entitled to remuneration under that clause of the Constitution, we do not want it. Now, if gentlemen will not let us substitute the bill, why, we will go on with the original bill.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. MAHON. The regular order is reading the old bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The House in Committee of the Whole granted the gentleman from Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, the privilege of making a statement, and he has been making it.

Mr. MAHON. But the call for the regular order brings up the first bill.

Mr. TERRY. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill which is before the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20) to provide for the adjudication and payment of damages sustained by citizens of the United States in the border counties of York, Adams, Cumberland, Franklin, Fulton, Bedford, Somerset, and Perry, in the State of Pennsylvania, from Union and Confederate troops during the late war of the rebellion.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in addition to the jurisdiction which now is, or may hereafter be, conferred upon the Court of Claims, said court shall have and possess jurisdiction and authority to inquire into and finally adjudicate, in the manner provided in this act, all damages and claims of the following classes, namely:

First. All damages and claims for property of citizens of the United States taken or destroyed by the Confederate troops in their several invasions into the border counties of York, Adams, Cumberland, Franklin, Fulton, Bedford, Somerset, and Perry, in the State of Pennsylvania, during the late war, in the years 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865.

Second. Such jurisdiction shall also extend to all claims of citizens of the United States for property taken or destroyed in said counties by Union troops during the late war in the years 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865.

Third. All just offsets and counterclaims to any claim of either of the preceding classes which may be before such court for determination, and no claim shall be allowed or judgment entered in favor of claimant if the original holder of claim was disloyal.

SEC. 2. That all questions of limitations as to time and manner of presenting claims are hereby waived, and no claim shall be excluded from the jurisdiction of the court because not heretofore presented to the Quartermaster-General or other officer or Department of the Government; that all claims existing at the time of the taking effect of this act shall be presented to the court by petition, as hereinafter provided, within five years after this act becomes a law, or shall be thereafter forever barred.

SEC. 3. That all claims shall be presented to the court by petition, setting forth in ordinary and concise language, without unnecessary repetition, the facts upon which such claims are based, by whom the property was taken or destroyed, and the actual value thereof at the time same was taken or destroyed, and any other facts connected with the transactions and material to the proper adjudication of the case involved. The petition shall be verified by the affidavit of the claimant, his agent, administrator, or attorney, and shall be filed with the clerk of the court. It shall set forth the full name and residence of the claimant, the damages sought to be recovered, and an itemized schedule setting forth property taken or destroyed. And the value of each item of property taken or destroyed shall be attached to said petition and made a part of the same, praying the court for a judgment upon the facts and the law.

SEC. 4. That the service of the petition shall be made upon the Attorney-General of the United States in such manner as may be provided by the rules or orders of said court. It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to appear and defend the interests of the Government in the suit, and within sixty days after the service of the petition upon him, unless the time shall be extended by order of the court made in the case, to file a plea, answer, or demurrer on the part of the Government, and to file a notice of any counterclaim, set-off, claim of damages, demand, or defense whatsoever of the Government: Provided, That should the Attorney-General neglect or refuse to file the plea, answer, demurrer, or defense as required, the claimant may proceed with the case under such rules as the court may adopt in the premises; but the claimant shall not have judgment for his claim, or for any part thereof, unless he shall establish the same by proof satisfactory to the court.

SEC. 5. That in considering the merits of claims presented to the court under this act, any testimony, affidavits, schedules, and papers on file in the State departments of the State of Pennsylvania, taken and received by the officers and commissioners appointed by the State to adjudicate said claims under the following acts passed by the legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, to wit: Act of 16th of April, 1862, act of 22d of April, 1863, act of 9th of April, 1868, and the act of 22d of May, 1871, as well as all reports and findings of all officers and commissions created by said acts of assembly, shall be considered by the court as legal and competent evidence of such weight given thereto as in its judgment is right and proper.

SEC. 6. That the said court shall make rules and regulations for taking testimony in the causes herein provided for, by deposition or otherwise, and such testimony shall be taken in the county where the witness resides, when the same can be conveniently done, and no person shall be excluded as a witness because he is a party to or interested in said suit, and any claimant or party in interest may be examined as a witness on the part of the Government; that the court shall determine in each case the value of the property taken or destroyed at the time and place of the loss or destruction, and by whom taken or destroyed, and shall render judgment in favor of the claimant or claimants and against the United States.

SEC. 7. That all judgments of said court shall be a final determination of the causes decided and of the rights and obligations of the parties thereto, and shall not thereafter be questioned unless a new trial or rehearing shall be granted by said court, or the judgment reversed or modified upon appeal as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 8. That immediately after the beginning of each session of Congress the Attorney-General of the United States shall transmit to the Congress of the United States a list of all final judgments rendered in pursuance of this act in favor of claimants and against the United States, and not paid as hereinafter provided, which shall thereupon be appropriated for in the proper appropriation bill.

SEC. 9. That all sales, transfers, or assignments of any such claims heretofore or hereafter made, except such as have occurred in the due administration of decedents' estates, and all contracts heretofore made for fees and allowances to claimants' attorneys, are hereby declared void, and all warrants issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, in payment of such judgments, shall be made payable and delivered only to the claimant or his lawful heirs, executors, or administrators, or transferees under administrative proceedings, except so much thereof as shall be allowed the claimants' attorneys by the court for prosecuting said claim, which may be paid direct to such attorneys, and the allowances to the claimants' attorneys shall be regulated and fixed by the court at the time of rendering judgment in each case and entered of record as part of the findings thereof; but in no case shall the allowance exceed 15 per cent of the judgment recovered, except in case of claims of less amount than $500, or where unusual services have been rendered or expenses incurred by the claimant's attorney, in which case not to exceed 20 per cent of such judgment shall be allowed by the court.

SEC. 10. That the claimant, or the United States or other party thereto interested in any proceeding brought under the provisions of this act, shall have the same rights of appeal as are or may be reserved in the statutes of the United States in other cases, and upon the conditions and limitations therein contained. The mode of procedure in claiming and perfecting an appeal shall conform in all respects, as near as may be, to the statutes and rules of court governing appeals in other cases.

SEC. 11. That all papers, reports, affidavits, evidence, records, and proceedings relating to said claims now on file in the departments of the State of Pennsylvania shall be deposited and filed with the Quartermaster-General of the United States before the claim or claims are taken up by the court, and the same shall in every case be furnished to the court upon its order at the request of the claimant or his or her attorney, or of the Attorney-General or the Assistant Attorney-General of the United States.

SEC. 12. That to facilitate the speedy disposition of the cases herein provided for in said Court of Claims, there shall be appointed, in the manner prescribed by law for the appointment of Assistant Attorney-Generals, one additional Assistant Attorney-General of the United States, who shall receive a salary of $2,500 per annum.

Mr. MAHON. I offer the following substitute—

Mr. DOCKERY. I thought the gentleman from Arkansas called for the regular order.

Mr. MAHON. This is the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order, if demanded, would be the consideration and disposition of the first bill.

Mr. MAHON. Let us have the substitute read.

Mr. TERRY. That can not be done until general debate is closed.

Mr. DOCKERY. There is no objection to its being read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. It can be read in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to have it read?

Mr. MAHON. Yes; because it is the bill I am going to offer as a substitute.

Mr. TERRY. It is read for information?

The CHAIRMAN. For information, of course.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10371) conferring on the Court of Claims jurisdiction with respect to certain claims.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in addition to the jurisdiction which now is or may hereafter be conferred upon the Court of Claims said court shall have and possess jurisdiction and authority to inquire into certain alleged claims for property of citizens of the United States alleged to have been taken or destroyed by the Confederate troops in their several invasions into the border counties of York, Adams, Cumberland, Franklin, Fulton, Bedford, Somerset, and Perry, in the State of Pennsylvania, during the civil war, in the years 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865; and also certain alleged claims of citizens of the United States for property alleged to have been taken or destroyed in said counties by Union troops during the civil war, in the years 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865: Provided, That suit is brought as herein provided within five years after the approval of this act.

SEC. 2. That all questions of limitations as to time and manner of presenting claims are hereby waived, and no claim shall be excluded from the jurisdiction of the court because not heretofore presented to the Quartermaster-General or other officer or department of the Government.

SEC. 3. That all claims shall be presented to the court by petition, setting forth in ordinary and concise language, without unnecessary repetition, the facts upon which such claims are based, by whom the property was taken or destroyed, and the actual value thereof at the time same was taken or destroyed, and any other facts connected with the transactions and material to the proper adjudication of the case involved. The petition shall be verified by the affidavit of the claimant, his agent, administrator, or attorney, and shall be filed with the clerk of the court. It shall set forth the full name and residence of the claimant, the damages sought to be recovered, and an itemized schedule setting forth property taken or destroyed; and the value of each item of property taken or destroyed shall be attached to said petition and made a part of the same.

SEC. 4. That the service of the petition shall be made upon the Attorney-General of the United States in such manner as may be provided by the rules or orders of said court. It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to appear and defend the interests of the Government in the suit, and within sixty days after the service of the petition upon him, unless the time shall be extended by order of the court made in the case, to file a plea, answer, or demurrer on the part of the Government, and to file a notice of any counterclaim, set-off, claim of damages, demand, or defense whatsoever of the Government: Provided, That should the Attorney-General neglect or refuse to file the plea, answer, demurrer, or defense as required the claimant may proceed with the case under such rules as the court may adopt in the premises.

SEC. 5. That in considering the merits of claims presented to the court under this act any testimony and papers on file in the State departments of the State of Pennsylvania taken and received by the officers and commissioners appointed by the State to adjudicate said claims under the following acts passed by the legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, to wit, act of 16th of April, 1862, act of 22d of April, 1863, act of 9th of April, 1863, and the act of 23d of May, 1871, shall be considered by the court as legal and competent evidence; but only such weight shall be given thereto as in the judgment of the court is right and proper.

SEC. 6. That the said court shall make rules and regulations for taking testimony in the causes herein provided for, by deposition or otherwise, and such testimony shall be taken in the county where the witness resides, when the same can be conveniently done; and no person shall be excluded as a witness because he is a party to or interested in said suit, and any claimant or party in interest may be examined as a witness on the part of the Government.

SEC. 7. That in case the court, upon hearing, shall find the claimant to have been a loyal citizen and his claim duly proven, and shall also find that the United States is liable for the payment thereof, in every such case, but in no other, judgment shall be entered for the claimant for the amount of his said claim so proven.

SEC. 8. That all judgments of said court shall be a final determination of the causes decided, and of the rights and obligations of the parties thereto, and shall not thereafter be questioned unless a new trial or rehearing shall be granted by said court, or the judgment reversed or modified upon appeal as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 9. That immediately after the beginning of each session of Congress the Attorney-General of the United States shall transmit to the Congress of the United States a list of all final judgments rendered in pursuance of this act in favor of claimants and against the United States and not paid.

SEC. 10. That all sales, transfers, or assignments of any such claims heretofore or hereafter made, except such as have occurred in the due administration of decedents' estates, and all contracts heretofore made for fees and allowances to claimants' attorneys, are hereby declared void, and all warrants issued by the Secretary of the Treasury in payment of such judgments shall be made payable and delivered only to the claimant or his lawful heirs, executors, or administrators, or transferee under administrative proceedings.

SEC. 11. That the claimant or the United States, or other party thereto interested in any proceeding brought under the provisions of this act, shall have the same rights of appeal or writ of error as are or may be reserved in the statutes of the United States in other cases, and upon the conditions and limitations therein contained. The mode of procedure in claiming and perfecting an appeal or writ of error shall conform in all respects, as near as may be, to the statutes and rules of court governing writs of error or appeals in other cases.

SEC. 12. That all papers, reports, affidavits, evidence records, and proceedings relating to said claims now on file in the departments of the State of Pennsylvania shall be deposited and filed with the Quartermaster-General of the United States before the claim or claims are taken up by the court, and the same shall in every case be furnished to the court upon its order at the request of the claimant, or his or her attorney, or of the Attorney-General or the Assistant Attorney-General of the United States.

SEC. 13. That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as an admission upon the part of the United States of the validity of the said alleged claims or of the liability of the United States for the payment thereof, it being the true intent of this act merely to secure to said claimants an opportunity to have their legal rights determined in the courts.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, the bill just read fully protects, as we believe, the interests of the Government. It has been drawn by one of the best lawyers of my State, a member of this House. I do not think a bill could be drawn which would more fully protect the Government; but if any gentleman on this floor thinks the Government is not fully protected under the provisions of this bill, I shall have no objection to any reasonable amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to enter into any legal argument of this case. Such an argument, which would be long and very interesting, must and will be addressed to the Supreme Court of the United States by gentlemen fully able to handle the questions involved. Under our present Constitution, as all gentlemen who are familiar with it are aware, the States surrendered to the General Government the right to control their military power. When this question was before the constitutional convention—and I want to say that this case is not governed by any laws or decisions of other nations—the question which naturally came up was, What will the Government do in return for this concession of the States?

The States were about to surrender their military power; they were about to place in the hands of the President of the United States the power to denude every State of all her military power—to make her, in one sense of the word, helpless. If you will read the debates in that convention you will find that this power would not have been conceded except in return for some very substantial advantage which was to be enjoyed by the States. In order to secure to the States a recompense for this concession to the General Government (which was granted by a very close vote), section 4 of Article IV of the Constitution was drawn up, reading as follows:

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the legislature, or of the executive when the legislature can not be convened, against domestic violence.

We do not put this claim on the ground of "domestic violence," but on the ground of invasion. Here is a solemn compact made between the Government of the United States and the States that the Government, if in its power, would protect them against invasion.

Mr. TERRY. Does the gentleman claim that the Government of the United States was derelict in the discharge of its duty to protect the State of Pennsylvania?

Mr. MAHON. Yes. I am coming to that in a moment.

Mr. TERRY. I thought the Government protected that State pretty effectually.

Mr. MAHON. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the people of this Union did not intend to see that the section of the Constitution I have just read should be enforced, whether the State concerned was Pennsylvania, Missouri, Arkansas, or any other State, it would have been far better that that provision had never been written.

When the war of the rebellion broke out, Pennsylvania, like the rest of the States remaining in the Union, was called upon to fill its quota of troops for the defense of the Government. Pennsylvania furnished some 371,000 men—one-third of the million men who went into the field at that time in defense of the Union.

The five counties skirting the borders of the State of Pennsylvania, and constituting my Congressional district, are what is called the throat of the North into the South, running up the Cumberland Valley, with great mountains on both sides, and opening through the Shenandoah Valley down into Virginia and the South. That was an inviting field for Confederate raiders. After we had filled our quota, Governor Curtin put 7,000 men and two batteries at that point, only 10 miles wide—a sufficient force to protect the people of that State from the Confederate raiders. But although the quota of our State was full, yet when the Confederate raiders were on the confines of the District of Columbia—when this city with its Capitol and other public buildings and its Government archives was in danger of capture—the United States Government, against the protest of the governors of Pennsylvania and Maryland, exercised its power under the Constitution, and those 7,000 men with those two batteries were ordered here to protect this city.

That resulted in General Stuart's sweeping down through the valley and inflicting a loss on that people amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars. Afterwards the governor organized another force of 18,000 men, known as the Pennsylvania Reserves. That, originally, was organized, armed, equipped, and put on the border for the purpose of protecting the people living on the border line of the State. Another time this capital was threatened by the Confederate raiders, and that magnificent body of men, organized especially to protect these people on the line, was by the command of the President of the United States brought not only to the District of Columbia, but with the other 7,000 was swept into the fields of the Southland and remained there until the close of the war.

Mr. LOUD. But they became a part of the regular quota of the State.

Mr. MAHON. Afterwards. But just wait a moment.

We again organized a force of 23,000 men for the protection of the border. Now, sir, although the Government was able, and she was bound under this clause of the Constitution, to protect the people from invasion, because there is no sane man in this country who will say that it was not an invasion—an invasion by armed forces—yet, notwithstanding that fact, the third time, on the 28th day of July, 1864, after this force had been organized for protection, the President took that home-defense force and brought it to the defense of the Capitol at Washington; and two days afterwards, that is to say, on the 30th day of July, the moment these troops had been removed, McCausland, commanding several thousand of the Confederate cavalry, entered the valley and destroyed my city of Chambersburg, wiping it from the face of the earth; and not a solitary Union soldier was left there for its protection.

Mr. TERRY. Now, right there, on that particular part of the gentleman's argument, I would like to ask a question. Can it not be well conceived, and does not the gentleman himself believe honestly, that if the National Government had not taken charge of that situation and concentrated the Pennsylvania troops, along with the troops from all the other States which were loyal to the Federal Government, that the march of Lee's army might have caused far greater damage to the people of Pennsylvania than that which they actually suffered? Would they not have suffered, in fact, a much greater damage had it not been for the force and efforts of the National Government collecting its troops at Gettysburg to meet the Confederates?

Mr. MAHON. I am glad the gentleman has asked me that question. It has not only been settled by all of the civil courts of the country but by the military law as well, and I defy any gentleman to state a case in contradiction to what I shall now suggest, that when a people have given to the General Government, in common with all the rest of the country, its forces raised for its own defense, and contributed men and money, whenever they were called upon and under any circumstances, to sustain the cause of the General Government, it is the duty of the General Government to protect them in their rights and in their property; and when such sacrifices are made not alone by the common people but by all, there is no nation on earth that has ever deserved the name of a government that has refused to pay such losses.

Mr. TERRY. But that is in case of damages provided for in the fundamental law; that is to say, for property which is taken for public uses—because the Constitution provides that no private property shall be taken for public uses without just compensation. But that does not apply to the case the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. MAHON. But the constitutions of other governments do not fit a republican form of government. Here is a solemn provision of the Constitution to which I have called your attention. Here is the condition of affairs in the State of Pennsylvania, where you have denuded that State of the military power which could protect itself in time of invasion—denuded it of every man capable of bearing arms—and in return for that you pledged yourselves to protect our people not only from violence at home but from invasion by armed forces.

Mr. TERRY. But does that not apply to Ohio, which was raided by Morgan? Would it not apply to Kentucky?—for there hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property were destroyed by the Confederate army.

Mr. DOCKERY. Would it not apply to Missouri?

Mr. TERRY. And to Missouri and Maryland?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. And to Kansas?

Mr. TERRY (continuing). And to all other States that suffered similar losses?

Mr. MAHON. But no other State was situated as was Pennsylvania. No State provided State troops to take care of itself. We did not ask the Government for anything in the way of aid in the hour of our peril, but we undertook to defend ourselves under that section of the Constitution. But by the interference of the President of the United States, taking the troops which did not belong to the General Government, although they afterwards became part of the quota of the State, that interference, instead of protecting the people of the State against invasion, absolutely gave free way and invited it.

Now, the gentleman talks of Maryland and of Missouri. I have before me the data showing that Missouri has already received—and I call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] to the fact—over $3,000,000 in payment of State losses. Tennessee has received over $4,000,000, and all of the border States have received more or less of compensation.

Mr. TERRY. Losses inflicted by the Confederate forces?

Mr. MAHON. Partly; but where property was used by the United States forces.

Mr. DINGLEY. Has there been any case where the Government has paid any damages inflicted by the Confederate forces?

Mr. MAHON. In some cases, I will say to the gentleman from Maine, where the Government took possession of property and was using it for military purposes and it was destroyed by the Confederates, the courts have held that the United States Government is liable.

Mr. TERRY. That is a different question. There the property had once passed into the charge and custody of the Government of the United States.

Mr. MAHON. I now place myself squarely upon the question under the Constitution. That question has never been raised in the Supreme Court of the United States, and the time has come in the history of this Government when the question should be decided whether this Government proposes to keep its compact. If it has failed to keep it with the State of Missouri or with any other State, I care not how great the amount, this Government owes it to its people to accord the protection which it promised.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say there is no other case growing out of the war like that of these five border counties of Pennsylvania. For four long years those people were intensely loyal to the Government. They furnished as many troops as any other section of similar population, if not more, because the feeling upon the border between the South and the North was more bitter, perhaps, than in other parts of the country.

For four long years the United States Government allowed 280,000 men to sweep over those five magnificent counties of southern Pennsylvania, with never a gun lifted in their defense and never an offer made to defend them, but, on the contrary, withdrawing all the power they had to defend themselves.

The culmination of this trouble happened on the 30th of July, 1864, when the most of these losses, amounting to over two and one-half millions of dollars, were inflicted. Against the protest of the governor of Maryland, against the protest of the governor of Pennsylvania, that the withdrawal of that force would mean disaster to the people of that valley for the fifth time, on the 20th of June the President arbitrarily withdrew the troops, and on the morning of the 30th of July, at daybreak, Confederate troopers, with torch in hand, wiped out the Queen City of the Cumberland Valley.

On that very day 30 men from that little city of 10,000 lay dead upon the battlefield in front of Petersburg, killed by the explosion of the mine. Men from those counties were in every hospital and buried on every battlefield. Those citizens paid all their taxes.

Now, pray tell me why these unfortunate people should bear the burden of war beyond the common burdens which were borne by the other people of this great country? The people a few miles to the north were prospering, were harvesting their crops and receiving enormous prices for them, but that country for four years was paralyzed. No crops were harvested, and I can point you to instances in that city and in that country of men who had lost two or three of their sons, who were buried in graves on Southern battlefields, and when the war ended in 1865, when this destruction was complete, those men were found in the poorhouses of that country and died in them.

Now, our contention is that these extraordinary losses, over and above the common losses, losses not borne by the people of the country, should, under the laws and decisions of the courts of all civilized governments, be paid for by the General Government.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that the old doctrines of Grotius and Vattel, written three hundred years ago, have been urged in this House, and will be urged again, against the responsibility of the Government. The conditions that existed in those days were different. When Grotius wrote, the Seventeen Years' War had been on. Fifty-nine cities had been destroyed. If gentlemen will read those writers, they will see that they only give their opinion that the governments in which those losses occurred had been hopelessly bankrupt and were unable to pay.

But we have come to another day. Three hundred years have rolled away and justice and equity toward all have taken the place of harshness. After the Franco-Prussian war, that deadly struggle in which France was almost destroyed as a nation, when her military power had been almost annihilated, when her treasury was bankrupt, nevertheless that magnificent people, realizing that her subjects were entitled to be defended by her Government, appropriated over $120,000,000 to pay the people along the battle line, not for property taken or destroyed by French troops, but for property destroyed by the German army during that great war.

France not only paid a great war indemnity demanded by Germany, but her Government, wiping away as if they were chaff the doctrines of Grotius and Vattel and all the war writers of the early days, said to her people, "You have stood in the breach. You have been loyal to your Government, and although you cannot legally compel this Government to pay your claims, yet notwithstanding we have paid over $200,000,000 war indemnity to the German people, we will pay you your claims." I have here the record before me, and have a letter from the secretary of the legislative body which appropriated $120,000,000 to pay for losses inflicted by the German army upon the citizens of France.

The great English Government, which is now growing in sympathy toward this Government, so that it looks as though we are to become the two great English-speaking peoples that will control the destinies of the world—that magnificent Government, with her magnificent people, after the war of the Revolution, made an appropriation to pay the men who remained loyal to the Crown during the Revolutionary war for property destroyed by the Revolutionary army of the Americans. And you go all along, and you will find that as to these old, rigid, unjust laws, that have come down from the days of barbarians, all civilized nations are wiping them out.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask but one thing. I stand here for the people who on the morning of the 30th of July—and I know men who were in the Confederate army and I know that citizens who sustained the Confederate cause will join with me in giving commendation to that people. The intensely loyal people of my city on the 30th day of July requested the mayor to call sixty of the most prominent citizens of the town in his office. He did so. The Confederate general informed them that if they would pay into the Confederate treasury $500,000 in gold as a ransom, that city should be spared. After a consultation of five minutes the verdict was made, and it was a unanimous statement to General McCausland:

Our people are a loyal people. They have their boys in the battlefield. They have contributed to the support of the Government. We are loyal to our Government, and much as we love our city, and as much as we love our homes, and inasmuch as we know what will follow, we will not pay a dollar into the Confederate treasury.

Ten minutes after that decision was given the torch was applied, and by 9 o'clock the last vestige of the city had disappeared.

Now, tell me, Mr. Chairman, people that have been so loyal, and who believed that this Government interfered and took from them directly what they had a right to expect to protect them, and allowed that city to be invaded, invaded intentionally, to withdraw the Confederate army from the capital of the nation—I pray you, will you not grant to them, after thirty-five years, a simple request to go to the Supreme Court of the United States and ask that court for a decision under that section of the Constitution of the country?

Now, if the court says the contention of the gentleman from Arkansas is right, and that these claimants ought not to be paid, well and good. This war has been over for thirty-five years, and these men, who were loyal, have been walking in poverty and will continue to walk in poverty if the court, in the highest tribunal of this Government, says that under the Constitution and laws of this country they have no legal claim against the United States. The moment that verdict is given by that court our people will say "Amen!" I have always favored the payment of legal claims against the Government, and I have never allowed State lines, North or South, to interfere with my espousal of a claim.

I am one of those who believe that if this Government owes a claimant under the Constitution and the laws, it was in equity due that the Government should pay him. It has never been a question of amount with me. This Government to-day is a great deal richer than it was in 1865, as I have said before, notwithstanding the struggle of four years between two great armies of the bravest and best men that God Almighty ever breathed the breath of life into—men that I believe no other race or nation can ever conquer when united. I say, after all this, Will you not allow us to go into the court and have this matter decided? Now, I ask nothing that is unfair.

Mr. TERRY. I desire to say to the gentleman, as he seems to make an appeal to me in the matter, that I have nothing to say against the fairness that he has always manifested upon this floor in matters of claims, no matter what State they come from. I have nothing to say against the great Keystone State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MAHON. I know that.

Mr. TERRY. She is a great old State. I have nothing to say against the record and conduct of her people in the war between the States; but it strikes me that a matter of this kind, involving millions upon millions of dollars—

Mr. MAHON. Three millions.

Mr. TERRY (continuing). That if the door is opened here it will be opened in Maryland, Kentucky, Missouri, and all those other States and places, for numberless claims based upon the same proposition for which the gentleman himself now is contending, namely, that the Government of the United States, in case it fails to repel foreign invasion, thereby becomes liable to its citizens for the property destroyed. I say this because if a bill of this kind is to be framed, it can not be properly done unless it is carefully guarded by the Judiciary Committee. Now, if they want to do what is the square thing in this matter, let this bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. You have a great majority on your side in control of that committee.

Mr. MAHON. That probably would be the end of it.

Mr. TERRY. Then you would have your own people to thank for it. All I ask is that a purely legal question like this ought to be carefully guarded, and that it ought to be submitted to the law committee of this House.

Mr. DALZELL. Are you not willing to trust the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. TERRY. I am, if the bill is properly guarded. Now, having said this much, I want simply to say that, having their attention called to the magnitude of this question, if this House wishes to permit a bill of this character, on a purely legal question that ought to go to the law committee of this House—if they are willing to permit it to go through, I have nothing more to say. I shall interpose, so far as I am concerned, no factious opposition.

Mr. BURKE. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question? Mr. TERRY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] has the floor.

Mr. BURKE. I want to ask you just one question. I understand that this bill simply provides for the reference of this claim to the Court of Claims. Now, with that distinctly understood, I ask my friend from Arkansas if he does not believe that the law governing this class of claims will receive all the consideration in that court that it would in the House?

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman from Texas must recollect that preceding this bill was one so adroitly drawn that, while it professed to leave the matter to the Supreme Court, it did not do so, and confessedly, by the admission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], did not. That being true, had we not better have the law committee of the House first pass upon this question?

Mr. DALZELL. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the last paragraph of this bill:

SEC. 12. That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as an admission upon the part of the United States of the validity of the said alleged claims or of the liability of the United States for the payment thereof, it being the true intent of this act merely to secure to said claimants an opportunity to have their legal rights determined in the courts.

In other words, all we ask here to-day is that we be allowed to go to the Supreme Court of the United States and find out what are our legal rights.

Mr. BURKE. I think that is a reasonable request, and so far as I am concerned I wish to distinctly state that I have never yet seen the time, and God forbid that I shall ever see the time, when I am afraid to trust the courts of my country. [Applause.]

Mr. MOODY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] a question. Do you personally have any doubt whatever about the legal rule governing the relations of the claimants and the Government in this class of cases?

Mr. DALZELL. I have not.

Mr. MOODY. Have you any idea that the court will declare that the Government is liable for this class of damages?

Mr. DALZELL. I doubt it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Still, doubting it, it seems almost unjust to deny these people the right to have the question decided when some of them think they are in the right and have just claims.

Mr. DALZELL. I suggest to my friend from Massachusetts if it is not better to have this question relegated to the tribunal where it will be properly decided than to have it coming up here year after year and year after year to be dealt with, and taking up the time that could better be devoted to other business?

Mr. KNOX. It seems to me the question is this, whether it is just to allow these claims to be determined before the bill is properly guarded. A bill was introduced in the House and reported by the Committee on Claims which did confer power on the court to adjudicate these claims independent of the question whether there was any legal liability upon the part of the Government.

Mr. DALZELL. That is not the bill we are now considering or asking for.

Mr. KNOX. That is the bill that is here.

Mr. MAHON. I deny the charge that there was any duplicity about this business. I stated that the Committee on War Claims made a unanimous report, and reported a bill backed up by a strong report. When I came to represent these people, I told them that they should go to the court, and I prepared that first bill, and I would stand by it and defend it now, because it is a broader bill, but in the end it means the same thing. If you read it, you will see that it says that an appeal shall be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and if they say we have no claim, that is the end of it. The only difference is in the verbiage of the two bills. Both amount to the same thing, although they were drawn by different persons.

When it was suggested to me by two gentlemen that perhaps the bill was not clear in two or three particulars—and the gentleman from Pennsylvania will bear me out in this—I said I did not wish to take any advantage, and they might prepare a bill; and a modified bill was prepared, and I accepted it. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I was stating, after the great struggle of four years was over, this Government, unlike other governments, did not come out of the war impoverished, but in a few years was richer and greater than she ever was, notwithstanding the four years of war. Now, after thirty-five long years these claims come up here. In 1865, under a legislative enactment of the State of Pennsylvania, under commissioners appointed by the governor of the State, counsel employed by the State and the General Government, when everything was fresh in the memory of the people, these claims were adjudicated by a careful court of adjudication, gone over the third time, and then filed in the Quartermaster's Department of the United States, and they are in that Department to-day.

Now, this bill does not only cover losses suffered at the hands of Confederates. There were hundreds and thousands of dollars' worth of property destroyed by the Union troops. As my colleague has said, the proceeding here proposed will settle the question involved for all time. A large number of claims of this kind are pending here from various States. The State of Maryland has her bill in committee; the State of Arkansas and other border States have their bills pending. Now let us settle once for all the question whether under the section of the Constitution I have read there is any liability on the part of the Government. I make a final appeal to this House. This is a carefully prepared bill, which distinctly says that its passage shall fix no liability or responsibility upon the Government.

If members of this Congress are afraid to let my people under a bill of this kind go to the highest court created by our Constitution—a court that should be open to every man in the country, rich or poor—and secure from that great tribunal a settlement of this important legal question, which has never yet been settled under this Government, then let this bill be defeated. If, on the other hand, you are fair-minded men, willing to accord to my people the justice to which they are entitled and which they demand, then pass this bill, which simply opens the Supreme Court of the United States to the hearing of a great constitutional question; permit that question to be settled by that tribunal once for all, and let these claims be either paid or put to sleep forever.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] to yield me five minutes.

Mr. MAHON. I do so cheerfully.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, this bill, as I understand, without adjudicating any question whatever by legislative decree refers the whole matter here involved to the Court of Claims that there may be a full and fair investigation as to whether the Government of the United States is liable for this loss of property. This question will first go to the Court of Claims, with a right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. I have not examined the bill carefully, but will say what I have to say on the presumption that proper care has been taken to protect the United States.

Mr. BRUCKER. If the gentleman will examine section 7, I think he will make his construction of the bill a little broader than his last statement would imply.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What is the gentleman's point?

Mr. BRUCKER. The bill not only provides for a determination of the question of legal right, but section 7 declares—

That in case the court upon hearing shall find the claimant to have been a loyal citizen and his claim duly proven, and shall also find that the United States is liable for the payment thereof, in every such case, but in no other, judgment shall be entered for the claimant for the amount of his said claim so proven.

Now, I will ask my friend this question: If the Supreme Court of the United States, upon an appeal from the Court of Claims, finds that the claimant was loyal and that his claim is a proper and just claim against the United States, shall we not have to pay it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly; and that is exactly what we should do. The bill simply provides, in the first place, for a trial in the Court of Claims; it provides further that either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States; and if the Supreme Court says that the Government is indebted to the claimant and that he is loyal, I for one am willing to pay him.

Mr. BRUCKER. Then, under this bill, all that would be left for Congress to do would be to appropriate the money?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; and that is all we ought to want to do. All that any honest man ought to want to do, when it has been ascertained by a proper court that he owes a certain amount of money, is to pay it, if he has the money. In the present case we provide that the court shall ascertain whether the money is due, and from the first decision, that of the Court of Claims, there is allowed to either party an appeal; and if the court of last resort says that the Government owes the money, why should the question come back here to Congress as an open one as to whether we will pay the money or not?

Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say a word on this question. But having taken the position that in cases like this where the Court of Claims has decided Southern war claims in favor of the claimants, they should be paid, I have felt it my duty to say this much in favor of these Northern claims. I do not think any distinction ought to be made between claims from the North and claims from the South.

While on the floor I wish to bear testimony to the fact that we are largely indebted to the fairness of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, for the honest, generous, and just treatment which this House has awarded to Southern war claims. There is but one other member on the floor, so far as I know, who is entitled to as much credit.

I refer to his colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER], who has done, as I think, his whole duty in his effort to advance these Southern war claims. Without the able service rendered by Mr. COOPER the claim of the Book Agents of the Methodist Church would never have passed, nor would the bill to pay the Bowman Act claims have been so far advanced toward its passage. These two gentlemen have undertaken to do their full duty toward claimants, whether from the North or the South. I hope the time will come, Mr. Chairman—I hope the time has come—when no American citizen will be denied the right to invoke from the Supreme Court of the United States a fair and honest judgment upon his claim, especially after the Court of Claims (composed now of four Republican judges and one Democratic judge) has passed upon the claim and found that the party is loyal and the claim just. If in such a case, upon an appeal taken to the Supreme Court, the highest tribunal in the land, that court finds no irregularity or error in the trial below and affirms the judgment, it seems to me that ought to be an end of the litigation and the money be paid to the claimant.

And for one, Mr. Chairman, I am frank to say that I can not give—I never have given, and never expect to give—as much care and time to the investigation of these cases as the court can give them. I can not give one-third of the time that the court can give, or that any honest man would necessarily have to give to the investigation of them before he can say he understands them better than the court. It would be utterly impossible for me to do this in connection with other public duties. I am, therefore, not willing to put my judgment, after the cursory and casual investigation I am able to give to these claims, against that of the court and say that the judges who have investigated and passed on the claims and found in favor of them were erroneous or careless in their investigation or judgment. Nor would I undertake to override or overrule, by reason of the force or power that I may possess as a member of Congress, their decisions and refuse appropriations. I am not going to do it.

I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin for a question.

Mr. JENKINS. I want to ask the gentleman if the Supreme Court should hold that the United States is liable, on the facts stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, would there not be just as much ground for fault-finding as the gentleman now finds with reference to the decision of the court in the income-tax cases—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not want to do any injustice to the Supreme Court in any respect—

Mr. JENKINS (continuing). And therefore if the gentleman does not think that the Attorney-General of the United States would be justified in asking Congress for fifty additional attorneys to help him with the duties of the office if this proposition shall become a law?

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the Attorney-General of the United States has not sufficient force to assist him to investigate honest claims, it is time that the Government should come to his aid and give him that support, even if it required fifty assistants, but it will not. We are now, and have been for years, giving him what seemed to be an ample force for the investigation of all claims arising of this character.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. There will be only one test case, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. MAHON. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. For many years we have been appropriating in the legislative appropriation bill from $25,000 to $50,000 to be used by the Attorney-General in such investigations. He has ample assistance for that purpose, and if he has not we owe it to the claimants to give them the right to be heard in the courts, and we owe it to ourselves, and to all parties involved, to keep up the necessary force for the purpose.

That is all I have to say.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOODY. Are we proceeding now under the rule of general debate in Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. MOODY. So that each member is recognized in his own time?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. The general debate has not been closed, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would ask to be recognized after the gentleman has concluded, or after my friend from Massachusetts has had the floor, if he desires to be heard now.

Mr. MOODY. I should like to be heard for a short time.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want an hour.

Mr. MAHON. Well, the gentleman can have two, if he wants them.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to retain the floor?

Mr. MAHON. Yes, sir. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRUCKER].

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Chairman, by the questions which I propounded to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] I do not wish it to be understood that I oppose this bill generally. But I wanted to bring out clearly the facts and the general scope and effect of the bill. As I understood the reading of section 7, to which I asked the gentleman's attention, that section would seem to indicate that when these claims were referred to the Court of Claims, and that court had passed on their validity, not only the question of legal liability of the Government to pay, but the question as to the amount due was taken from the Congress of the United States, and this would be determined by the court which had power to pass upon the validity of the claim, and the only service left then for Congress to perform would be to appropriate money to pay the award or judgment.

There are some provisions of the bill which, in my judgment, could be improved by amendment. The first provision to which I desire to call your attention is section 4. The bill itself gives to the claimants four years after the passage of the act in which to file their claims; or, rather, that is my recollection of the provision.

Mr. MAHON. Five years.

Mr. BRUCKER. Five years, then. The time is limited, after the service of the petition on the Attorney-General of the United States, to sixty days within which it shall be his duty to appear and defend the interests of the Government in the suit—

Mr. MAHON. Well, that is time enough.

Mr. BRUCKER (continuing). But he may get an order of extension by consent of the court in order to file a plea, answer, or demurrer on the part of the Government, or give notice of any counterclaim.

Mr. BURKE. Why not make that ninety days?

Mr. MAHON. I have no objection.

Mr. BRUCKER. Section 4 provides as follows:

SEC. 4. That the service of the petition shall be made upon the Attorney-General of the United States in such manner as may be provided by the rules or orders of said court. It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to appear and defend the interests of the Government in the suit, and within sixty days after the service of the petition upon him, unless the time shall be extended by order of the court made in the case, to file a plea, answer, or demurrer on the part of the Government, and to file a notice of any counterclaim, set-off, claim of damages, demand, or defense whatsoever of the Government: Provided, That should the Attorney-General neglect or refuse to file the plea, answer, demurrer, or defense as required the claimant may proceed with the case under such rules as the court may adopt in the premises.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that proviso ought to be amended, giving more time.

Mr. MAHON. But suppose the Attorney-General declines to file his defense? You must give the court the right to bring him in. If you do not, the claims will never get to trial.

Mr. BRUCKER. I think, especially where the claims as presented will aggregate millions of dollars, that it ought to be the duty of the Attorney-General to appear, and there ought not to be any "proviso" whatever about his appearing; he should appear and represent the Government.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman is a lawyer by profession, is he not?

Mr. BRUCKER. Well, somewhat; yes.

Mr. MAHON. Now, it is the place of the court to fix rules of practice and not the place of the men who appear before it.

Mr. BRUCKER. Yes; but it ought to be the duty of the Attorney-General, and this bill ought to make it imperative upon him to appear in all these cases, which aggregate millions of dollars.

Mr. MAHON. You can do that; you can make it imperative, if you want to.

Mr. BRUCKER. Now, section 5 contains a remarkable provision with reference to the rule of evidence which shall govern in these cases. It provides that all of the depositions, all of the affidavits, and all of the proofs that have been heretofore submitted to the State of Pennsylvania in years gone by shall be filed in support of these claims in the Court of Claims.

Mr. MAHON. Read that section.

Mr. BRUCKER. I will read it:

That in considering the merits of claims presented to the court under this act any testimony and papers on file in the State departments of the State of Pennsylvania, taken and received by the officers and commissioners appointed by the State to adjudicate said claims under the following acts passed by the legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, to wit, act of 10th of April, 1862, act of 22d of April, 1863, act of 9th of April, 1868, and the act of 22d of May, 1871, shall be considered by the court—

That is, by the Court of Claims—

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. BRUCKER (reading)— as legal and competent evidence; but only such weight shall be given thereto as in the judgment of the court is right and proper.

Mr. MAHON. That is the rule in all courts where witnesses are dead.

Mr. BRUCKER. I do not think any affidavit, deposition, or proof heretofore taken where the United States was not a party—

Mr. MAHON. They were a party.

Mr. BRUCKER (continuing). Should be considered as competent evidence in support of a claim against the Government before the Court of Claims.

Mr. MAHON. They were represented by counsel in all these cases.

Mr. BRUCKER. Who were represented?

Mr. MAHON. The United States.

Mr. BRUCKER. The State of Pennsylvania was represented and the claimants were represented, but the United States Government was not a party to any of these proceedings wherein these depositions were taken, and none of these affidavits and depositions ought to be received or filed in the Court of Claims, because the United States Government, through the Attorney-General, ought to have an opportunity to examine all of these witnesses and cross-examine them, and the only competent proof in support of these claims should be taken under the authority and jurisdiction which this act confers.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, briefly replying to the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRUCKER], I wish to say that the State of Pennsylvania paid the best lawyers in the country, not to represent the claimants or the State, but to represent the General Government, and the depositions were taken under all the rules and regulations of law. Now, many of these witnesses are dead and in eternity, and in every court in this land where depositions have been taken under the rules of law and witnesses are dead, those depositions can be read.

Mr. BRUCKER. Do you say the United States Government was represented?

Mr. MAHON. Yes; represented by able counsel.

Mr. BRUCKER. In what way?

Mr. MAHON. In these hearings.

Mr. BRUCKER. Were these claims being pressed against the United States Government?

Mr. MAHON. Yes; from the very beginning. They have been in the Quartermaster's Department since 1864.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. Suppose you sue me and depositions are taken in that case, and afterwards you sue Governor Stone about the same subject-matter. Do you think these same depositions would be admitted in evidence in any court that was ever created in the United States, even if the case was about the same subject-matter exactly?

Mr. MAHON. In another case?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. MAHON. No; but it is the same case; begun in 1864 and still being pressed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But do you not change the parties to the case?

Mr. MAHON. Not at all; they are the same parties.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That was the case of these claimants against the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MAHON. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How did they come to take depositions in the case of these claimants against the United States Government when there was no such case?

Mr. MAHON. These people did have a case, and have got one to-day. It has been in the Quartermaster's Department ever since 1864.

Mr. LOUD. And they hired men to represent the Government!

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask my friend as to a question of fact. The bill reads:

That in considering the merits of claims presented to the court under this act any testimony and papers on file in the State departments of the State of Pennsylvania, taken and received by the officers and commissioners appointed by the State to adjudicate said claims under the following acts passed by the legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, to wit, act of 10th of April, 1862, act of 22d of April, 1863, act of 9th of April, 1868, and the act of 22d of May, 1871, shall be considered by the court as legal and competent evidence.

Now, then, commencing in 1862, down as late as 1870 there seems to have been a Pennsylvania State commission, and they seem to have had hearings under the Pennsylvania State law, and you now intend by the proposition of this bill to make whatever of evidence, ex parte or otherwise, was taken under the Pennsylvania law evidence in the United States court as against the United States in this proposed litigation. Is that correct?

Mr. MAHON. That is correct. I want to say to the gentleman that in the great Oregon case we appropriated $3,000,000 for Indian wars, and in all troubles of this kind this question came up in seven or eight bills that have passed Congress. Now, there is no doubt in this case as to the facts. The court can examine this evidence and see how it is taken, and how the Government was represented and how the people were represented, and they can give just such weight to it as the court sees proper.

The gentleman from Illinois will find that from the beginning the State made demand in 1864 on the General Government for payment, and from that day to this we have pressed the matter before the Quartermaster's Department. Now, this commission was selected by act of the legislature. The claimants appeared before the commissioners, and to protect the Government the State employed men like Mr. McDowell and some of the best lawyers of the State, so as to see that the evidence should be properly taken, under a cross-examination, and as the money is to be paid by the Government, they represented the United States Government; so that the evidence was prepared in such a manner that it could be submitted to the court, so that it should have all the marks that it was taken with care and under the rules employed by a court of inquiry.

Now the gentleman can understand it. Thirty-five years have gone by, and many of these citizens have become quite old or are dead. Now, suppose that evidence satisfies the court that a certain man lost $1,000. The matter submitted to the court in this bill is the legal question. If a man did lose $1,000 under certain circumstances, the question is, Is the Government responsible? The Supreme Court will settle that question. Now, we have settled this question, and this evidence has been taken two or three times; but the Court of Claims can go over it again and take it the fourth time.

Mr. CANNON. If I read this bill aright, it gives these people a status in the Court of Claims. It waives the statute of limitation.

Mr. MAHON. I do not think the statute bars them.

Mr. CANNON. It waives the statute of limitation, and then, in addition to that, it absolutely, in the event that the legal question should be found in favor of the claimant or the plaintiff, makes this legal evidence that was taken by a commission under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania. Now, then, I never would vote for that proposition.

Mr. MAHON. Let me put the proposition.

Mr. CANNON. Let me finish my proposition. I never would consent to that proposition if I were to consent to the bill otherwise; but let me say to my friend, and ask him why in all these years, if this constitutes a claim against the Government of the United States, has not suit been brought? The courts have been open.

Mr. MAHON. No, sir; you can not have a suit without the law. We filed a claim in 1864 in the Quartermaster's Department under the act of July 4, 1864. I was the commissioner of the State of Pennsylvania for my people on this claim, and after long and careful adjudication there the Quartermaster-General stated under the law they had no law to consider them. We have been in the Quartermaster-General's Department, and that cuts out any question of the statute of limitation. And more than that, from 1864 the State of Pennsylvania, representing these people, has been thundering at the doors of the Department to get recognition of their citizens, and finally had to come to Congress.

Mr. CANNON. Has there ever been any suit brought in the Court of Claims?

Mr. MAHON. No; we could not bring a suit without a law for it.

Mr. CANNON. The general law allows any citizen of our Government, and has from 1862 and prior thereto, to present legal claims against the Government. The courts have always been open, and the law has always permitted it.

Mr. MAHON. Then what harm will this bill do?

Mr. CANNON. The trouble is, there is no legal claim in this matter.

Mr. MAHON. Then you can not be harmed.

Mr. CANNON. There is no equitable claim in it.

Mr. MAHON. Then you can not be harmed.

Mr. CANNON. There is no just claim in it.

Mr. MAHON. I differ with the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman seeks, not so direct in this bill as he did in the former bill, under the terms of which these parties would have gone to the court, and the court would have been directed to find a judgment—he seeks now by the terms of his bill to send these parties under certain conditions to the courts to establish a claim which in the history of the world never has been established under any government.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, yes; I beg to differ with the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. And ought never to be established.

Mr. MAHON. No; I beg to differ with the gentleman. Now, I simply wish to say this. I have before me a carefully prepared argument, which it would take two hours to read, that demonstrates that under this section of the Constitution this Government is responsible, and it is backed up by such great jurists as Jeremiah Black and other great constitutional lawyers. I say again that other governments, true to their people, have paid them an enormous amount of money. Great heaven! can not this great and rich Government give these people the right to have the Supreme Court say whether they have any legal rights or not?

Mr. KING. Can I ask the gentleman just one question?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. KING. If there is a liability on the part of the Government, that presupposes the justice of these claims. That being conceded, why did not the gentleman make the bill broad enough so that all persons in all States who have suffered by reason of the depredations during the war would have the same opportunity for the presentation of their claims for adjudication and not confine it to a few inhabitants in his own State?

Mr. MAHON. If any gentleman on the floor takes the same interest in his constituents that I do in mine, let him bring in such a bill. I never have opposed one and I never will oppose it. Bring on your claims if you have them. If your State or any other State has a claim standing on the same foundation, then let us pass this bill and have the law settled one way or the other.

Mr. KING. My State is not situated the same as the gentleman's, but it seems to me, if the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him again, that if this committee is acting in the interest of the people and carrying out what he believes to be a proper duty of obligation to all the people, it is their duty, it is the duty of the committee, not to discriminate against any section of the country, but to bring in a bill broad enough to afford ample opportunity for the same redress to every man who has been damaged in his property in this way.

Mr. MAHON. There is not another case in the United States like this one.

Mr. CANNON. Why not? Take the State of Kentucky, never out of the Union, yet the armies fought back and forth over the territory of that State a score of times. The flame and the sword absolutely destroyed property of every State and of loyal men, and of States occupying exactly the same legal position as to its people that the State of Pennsylvania occupied. The same was the case in many parts of Missouri and the same in the District of Columbia. Now, does my friend claim for a moment that a principle should be established, or even admitted so far as to be sent to the court, that the Treasury of the United States is responsible for the ravages of war? The moment you do, then necessarily your principle must apply everywhere.

Mr. MAHON. I want to give the gentleman a great principle of law that controls the courts of this nation as well as all civilized governments, and I defy the gentleman to find me a decision contrary to the principle I am about to state. That is, that when the Government compels a people to bear extraordinary losses for the common good, over and above their proper share, it is the duty of the Government to reimburse the people who have lost that amount for the common good. That has been held to be a correct principle by the courts in Germany, in England, and in France and by the courts in this country. It has been so held by every writer on military law or on the regulation of military affairs.

Here is a people situated not like any other people in the United States. There is not a similar case to it. A little strip of land running into the South 10 miles wide. After she had filled her quota and put there 7,000 men, and afterwards 12,000 men, and afterwards 22,000 men—not United States troops; we had filled our quota—we did not ask the General Government to protect us; we had furnished our quota, and still as a great State we were mighty. When the Confederate raider rode his horse into the District of Columbia, and this great building and this magnificent property here was threatened, with its great archives, the President of the United States arbitrarily took what we had put there for our common defense. Then we prepared and organized the great Pennsylvania Reserves.

They were originally militiamen, to defend the five counties. When the Confederate raider again threatened this city, these magnificent troops were taken into the field, and afterwards credited to the State in the general Army, and made a magnificent record during the war. Again, on the 28th of June, 1864 we had mustered 22,000 militiamen; placed them in that narrow strip of land with two batteries—not to defeat the Confederate army, but to keep the Confederate raider away. On the 28th of June your President, under the authority lodged in him, brought them into this District, and two days afterwards the Confederate raider McCausland entered my city, applied the torch, and swept it out of existence.

Now, I do not believe that there is another case parallel to this. Over 150,000 Confederate troops swept over the five counties, and you can imagine what the result was. I defy you to point out in this great broad land any other spot that was situated and devastated like the five southern counties of my State.

Mr. CANNON. Now, from the gentleman's line of argument, if this bill is to pass, there ought to be an amendment, and he ought to offer it himself.

Mr. MAHON. What amendment?

Mr. CANNON. That as this claim is grounded upon the fact that the General Government took the citizens of Pennsylvania and used them in the Army for the purpose of defending other places, the United States ought to be allowed to plead in set-off the fact that troops from Illinois, New York, and other States defended the State of Pennsylvania. Oh, what nonsense that sort of talk is!

Mr. MAHON. In reply to that, let me say that during the four years of war the gentleman's home was on the broad prairies of Illinois; and a soldier wearing the gray uniform never got within 600 miles of it. His people were filling profitable contracts with the Government; they were raising great crops, for which they realized war prices; and when the war was ended his constituency came out of it rich. [Laughter.] The gentleman's State was not situated during the war as was the great State of Pennsylvania. Now, I put alongside of the 150,000 brave troops that Illinois supplied—and no braver men ever wielded a sword or pointed a musket—I put alongside of them the 371,000 Pennsylvanians, the full quota of that State, outside of these troops which the President took from us—

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is this bill subject to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Not now. It is still open to general debate.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. It will be read by sections for amendment after the general debate closes?

The CHAIRMAN. It must be under the rule.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I should not have supposed that a bill of this nature would have been seriously urged on this floor unless I had heard the earnest and eloquent argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], who has supported the bill with a sincerity which commands our respect and challenges our attention.

But I think before we pass this bill we should at least see exactly what it does and where it leads us. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has very well pointed out, this bill means something. If there is an existing obligation on the part of the United States, under the section of the Constitution which has been cited, to pay claims of this description, I understand that the courts have for many years been open for the enforcement of that obligation.

Mr. EVANS. Under what statute?

Mr. MOODY. I refer the gentleman to the gentleman from Illinois who made that statement.

Mr. MAHON. We in Pennsylvania could never find any such statute.

Mr. MOODY. I am not familiar with the practice in the Court of Claims. I do not make the statement upon my own authority, but accept it as true upon the authority of the gentleman from Illinois.

The danger in this bill is that the courts will seek and find in some of its provisions the creation of a liability which did not exist before.

Now let us consider exactly what is the subject-matter concerning which we are debating. The Confederate forces made three raids into the loyal State of Pennsylvania. In the course of those invasions and in the course of the battles which ensued a great deal of property belonging to loyal citizens was destroyed. This is not a case where either the Union Army or the invading army took supplies for their armies; but it is a case where the claims arise out of a destruction incidental to the operations of war. These claims, according to the report of the committee, amount to $3,450,565. We all know that when they come to be presented to the courts the claims will probably exceed the amount named.

Mr. MAHON. No; they can not exceed it, because the amount is fixed by certificates of the State.

Mr. MOODY. Well, the gentleman corrects me upon that point—

Mr. MAHON. The amount can not be increased; it may be decreased.

Mr. MOODY. When we consider the amount involved in this bill we can not doubt that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is right in saying this is an important question both in respect to the amount involved and the principle concerned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us consider upon what ground these claims are based. They rest upon section 4 of Article IV of the Constitution. In that section the United States enters into three guarantees. It in terms guarantees to every State in the Union a republican form of government. It enters into the obligation to protect each of them from invasion and, upon the application of the legislature or the executive, against domestic violence. If there is an obligation on the part of the United States arising out of a failure to perform one of those guarantees, there is an obligation arising out of the failure to perform either of the other two. And in case the United States at any future time should fail to guarantee to every State of the Union a republican form of government, then under the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania a case of damages would arise.

Mr. MAHON. That section has never been construed by any court in this land. Will the gentleman please give us his construction? What does it mean? The United States undertakes to protect the States against invasion. No sane man in this country will deny, in view of all the facts, that our State was invaded.

Mr. MOODY. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. MAHON. Then what does that provision mean?

Mr. MOODY. I will endeavor to make myself perfectly clear.

Mr. MAHON. I hope the gentleman will do so.

Mr. MOODY. I am not quite ready to give my judgment on a constitutional question which I have never heard raised before to-day. I do not think, excepting perhaps the gentlemen from Pennsylvania, that anybody has ever conceived that there was a pecuniary obligation resting upon the United States Government under this section of the Constitution. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that if there is an obligation to pay damages for a failure to protect the State of Pennsylvania against invasion, there is an equal obligation to pay damages for a failure to give to the State of Pennsylvania a republican form of government or to protect her against domestic violence when she has lawfully invoked the protection of the United States.

Why, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe outside of the State of Pennsylvania that any such obligation on the part of the General Government was ever dreamed of.

Now, that is all there is of the case. It has been pointed out again and again. If that section of the Constitution gives rise to a claim for damages to the State of Pennsylvania, it must give rise to an equal claim for damages to every State which was invaded. If the Government is bound, at its pecuniary peril, to protect the citizens of one State from the citizens of another State engaged in an armed insurrection, then the Government is equally bound to protect these same citizens against invasions from a foreign enemy. And, as pointed out by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY], if the Spanish fleet should assume to assault any part of our coast, and the Government fails to protect it, the people whose property was injured or destroyed would have a valid claim against the Government under the argument advanced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

It can not be, Mr. Chairman, that anybody in the House can seriously argue that Congress ought to pass such a bill as this.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. MOODY. Certainly. I regret that I have quite a cold and can not continue the argument as I desired.

Mr. MAHON. If the gentleman from Massachusetts is satisfied that there is nothing in the case, and no validity—and I am not objecting to the gentleman for differing with me; he has a perfect right to do so. But in view of the fact that the ablest jurists in this country, like Judge Black, of my own State, who was on the supreme bench of our State for many years, hold to the contrary, I desire to ask him this question, admitting, as I have already admitted, that there is some controversy about the liability of the Government: Here is a section of the Constitution which has never been construed by any of the courts of our land. Now, if your contention is right, and you are absolutely assured that there is no claim, practically, against the Government, why not allow us to go to the Supreme Court for their decision and settle the matter at once? The gentleman claims to be entirely satisfied with that view of the case. All we ask is the privilege of going before the court and taking its decision as final and binding.

But the gentleman says that the court may find some liability. Mr. Chairman, that is their duty. That is what they are there for, to protect the citizens and the Government alike.

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has misunderstood one expression I used. My statement was that the court, in construing the statute conferring jurisdiction, might find in that statute something creating a liability that did not exist before. That is all.

Now, the gentleman asks why we are not willing to pass the bill and let the matter go before the court? Well, I will take the amended bill; I will take that bill and give one or two reasons which occur to me, after a hasty reading of it, why it ought not to pass; in any event, in its present form. It ought to go, as the gentleman from Arkansas has well suggested, to the Committee on the Judiciary for consideration. We ought to have their report and advice on this great subject.

But now take section 7 of the amended bill. If this bill were to pass it ought to be amended somewhat in this particular section. Section 7 provides:

That in case the court upon hearing shall find the claimant to have been a loyal citizen, and his claim is duly proven, and shall also find that the United States is liable, etc.

Now, just there this section should be amended by inserting, if it is to be passed at all—

That the United States is liable by virtue of the obligation imposed on the General Government by section 4 of Article IV of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. MAHON. But if we have no case under that section we have nothing whatever.

Mr. MOODY. That is the only ground on which the claim can stand.

Mr. MAHON. We admit that.

Mr. MOODY. And it should be clear in the bill itself that no other question is to be submitted except the direct question of the obligation of the Government under this clause of the Constitution to pay the damages to the persons injured by the failure of the General Government to meet the obligation arising out of this section.

Mr. MAHON. That is the fact, and that is all there is in the bill.

Mr. MOODY. You could take this bill and go all through it and find opportunity for criticism which would require an answer. The fact is that the bill has been drawn by the friends of this claim and of the claimants. There is no criticism due on that account. That is perfectly proper. It would not be likely to be drawn by anybody else. It has been sent to the committee over which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] presides with so much ability and distinction, and the claims are largely within his own Congressional district. Before we go further with it, I say to him, as a fair man, that the bill ought to go to a committee which is entirely disinterested—a committee whose duty is to consider questions relating to the law and the Constitution.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MOODY. Certainly.

Mr. MAHON. I did not ask the Speaker of this House where he would refer this bill.

Mr. MOODY. I hope the gentleman does not understand me as making any reflection upon him at all.

Mr. MAHON. I do not so understand the gentleman.

Mr. MOODY. I want to say to the gentleman that the ability, earnestness, and sincerity of his speech impressed me very strongly.

Mr. MAHON. The bill was referred under the rule which provides that claims arising in any war in which the United States has been engaged shall be referred to the Committee on War Claims. Now, why should this bill be made an exception? The Committee on War Claims have absolute jurisdiction over it under the rules of the House. Why should any other committee come in here and ask that it be sent to them? There are lawyers on that committee, and, excluding myself from this remark, as good lawyers as any on the floor of this House. As good lawyers as any on the floor of this House helped frame this bill, and I am so well satisfied that this bill protects the Government that the Committee on the Judiciary might hatch over it for three months without making it any better in that respect, and I have no disrespect for the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. MOODY. I hope the gentleman did not understand me as making any reflection upon him because the bill went to his committee?

Mr. MAHON. Oh, no; I did not so understand the gentleman. Mr. MOODY. The bill properly went there under our rules, but the gentleman himself admits that this bill is utterly unprecedented, and before I act upon it I should like not only the opportunity of considering it more thoroughly myself, but I should like the advice of that great committee upon the law and Constitution which has been appointed by order of this House.

Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me a minute before he yields to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MOODY. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to modify a statement that I made a few minutes ago, and made without much consideration, in a colloquy with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON]. I do so because the matter was referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY]. I said that these parties could have brought their action in the Court of Claims. That was my general recollection. Of course, everybody understands that you can not sue the sovereign unless the sovereign permits himself to be sued; but on examining the act conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims I find that while it provides that the Government may be sued in all claims founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress, and so forth, an exception is made:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as giving to either of the courts herein mentioned jurisdiction to hear and determine claims growing out of the late civil war.

Now, it may be that this matter would be barred under that exception. And perhaps, recollecting in a general way the act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims, I might have made my statement too broad. In justice to myself, and in justice to the gentleman from Pennsylvania—

Mr. MOODY. And in justice to me, because I was misled.

Mr. CANNON. It is apt that I should make this statement. The gentleman from Massachusetts is, however, too good a lawyer to be misled by me. I am not much of a lawyer; but I do not aim to purposely misstate a matter or to state a matter as a fact unless I think it is that way.

Mr. MAHON. I did not give the gentleman a broad denial, because while the Quartermaster's Department informed us that they had no jurisdiction and we came to the conclusion long ago that we could not bring suit under the law, still I thought perhaps the gentleman from Illinois was right.

Mr. MOODY. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman, I am not greatly interested in the constitutional question which is sought to be raised in the passage of this bill. I may say, however, that I do not believe any court in the United States will ever hold to the principle that claims of this kind—claims for property destroyed by an enemy in war—are legitimate demands against the Government. The thing about this bill that attracts my attention is that it proposes that certain claims held by the people of certain counties in the State of Pennsylvania shall be preferred over all other similar claims, and that those claims shall be put, if possible, in process of adjudication and payment.

Mr. MAHON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. This bill does not preclude any other claim against the Government. Because I offer a bill here to pay the people of my district, how does that preclude you from offering a bill for your people? If you bring in a claim here which is a good claim, I will vote for it.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to state the reason why I can not possibly vote for this bill as I understand it. Like the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY], I have been impressed with the earnestness of the author of this bill, and I respect him for that earnestness and for the energy with which he expresses his views.

But Pennsylvania was not the only State that was invaded by the forces of the Confederacy. Ohio was invaded by John Morgan and his troops. I have now in my desk, Mr. Chairman, claims coming from loyal citizens of southern Ohio for property that was taken not only by the raiders—the Confederate raiders—but by the Union forces that were thwarting those raiders. Now, I would like for my friend from Pennsylvania, or some other eloquent gentleman who addresses the House in behalf of this bill, to state on what ground it is proposed that certain claims held by certain people in certain counties in Pennsylvania shall be preferred over similar claims held by citizens of southern Ohio, which was invaded by the Confederates in the war of the rebellion in 1861.

Why, Mr. Speaker, I can not understand on what ground these gentlemen talk of fairness and justice between the States, or between the citizens of those States, when they invite me as a Representative of a Congressional district in southern Ohio to give a preference to their claims, as they do by a bill of this nature. If the gentleman desired to do the fair thing between Ohio and Pennsylvania, between Pennsylvania and Missouri, and between Pennsylvania and Kentucky, why does he not introduce a bill general in its character, so that the claims of all loyal men, whether they reside in the State of Pennsylvania or in the State of Ohio, may have an equal show? I say to my friend from Pennsylvania, not doubting his motives for a moment, that he is here inviting the Representatives of Ohio to vote for a measure which, as I understand it, is absolutely and grossly unfair.

Mr. MAHON. I would like to ask the gentleman how it is unfair?

Mr. BROWN. Unfair in this, that he invokes the action of the Congress of the United States in behalf of claimants living in five or six counties in Pennsylvania which he has especially named.

Mr. MAHON. Is it unfair for me to represent my own people and my own district?

Mr. BROWN. The gentleman knows, as a matter of history, that we have claims of that kind just the same as Pennsylvania has.

Mr. MAHON. Have you pressed those claims for consideration?

Mr. BROWN. He knows that southern Ohio suffered from Confederate invasion, and he knows that loyal men in a dozen States suffered the loss of their property. If the gentleman wishes to do the fair thing, let him amend this bill and bring in one for the adjudication of the claims of all loyal men in the State of Ohio as well as of the State of Pennsylvania, and then, it seems to me, he can come to us with a good face and ask us to support his bill.

Mr. MOODY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if it has ever been believed by anybody in Ohio who lost property as the result of military operations there that he had any claim against the Government?

Mr. BROWN. I never heard such a notion broached, that a man had a valid claim for property destroyed by the enemy, much less did I ever hear of any prominent lawyer who claimed that such a demand was a legal claim against the Government of the United States.

Mr. MAHON. Had the State of Ohio put over 50,000 troops in the field to protect that State, State militia, specially enlisted and put in the field by the State? Did you ever do that and have them withdrawn by the General Government? You have no such state of things in Ohio, and no such state of things occurred in any State in the Union.

Mr. BROWN. The gentleman talks about Pennsylvania troops that were withdrawn by order of the President.

Mr. MAHON. Militia.

Mr. BROWN. Militia; and which troops, according to his view, if they had not been so withdrawn, could have protected Pennsylvania from this loss.

Mr. MAHON. Or this capital would have been destroyed.

Mr. BROWN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to remember that the soldiers of Ohio helped to drive back that Confederate invasion of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MAHON. They did not when these raiders were there.

Mr. BROWN. And it seems to me the gentleman comes here with a very poor argument to this House, to the effect that because the Pennsylvania militia was withdrawn from some particular point that thereby the General Government has incurred a liability to these counties that he especially names in this bill.

Mr. MAHON. I will ask the gentleman from Ohio the question which I asked the gentleman from Massachusetts about this constitutional section and the meaning of the section. What does this word "invasion" mean? Was that an invasion or not an invasion?

Mr. BROWN. I will say that it is the first time I have ever heard that, as a constitutional principle, claims of this nature are entitled to payment—claims for property destroyed by an enemy in war.

Mr. MAHON. It ought to be settled by the courts.

Mr. BROWN. I never heard of it before. But that does not meet the objection I was urging. What do gentlemen say, and what will other eloquent gentlemen say, when I call their attention to the fact that I represent a part of the country that suffered from Confederate invasion? The horses of our Ohio farmers were taken, and the products of their farms were taken to feed both armies—both the Confederates and the Union. And I repeat my question, On what theory is it that these Pennsylvania gentlemen come here and say that a little district, defined by the names of certain counties, in the State of Pennsylvania, shall be preferred in this matter, when other parts of the country suffered, though not in perhaps the same degree, from the same kind of invasion, in the same war?

I simply say, Mr. Chairman, that the bill is narrow. It is framed in worse than a sectional spirit. It is unfair and unjust. I want to add that I do not believe the Supreme Court, or any other competent court, will ever hold that these claims, or any claims like these, become a legitimate demand against a Government like ours. But whether that be so or not, I do stand upon the ground, and I do assert, and I do put it squarely to our Pennsylvania friends, that they are asking something here of us that they ought not to ask of us. They are asking that the Congress of the United States shall go out of its way; that it shall forget other sections of the country—Kentucky, Missouri, Ohio, Indiana—that it shall forget other loyal men everywhere, and give certain privileges to these particular men in the State of Pennsylvania. It is wrong, and, as I understand it, I can not vote for it.

Mr. MOODY. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to state at this moment.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] that he make a motion that the committee rise, as it is very evident that we can not complete the bill to-night.

Mr. MOODY. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20) conferring on the Court of Claims jurisdiction with respect to certain claims, and had come to no resolution thereon.

OWNERS OF THE SHIP ACHILLES.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, this morning I asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4629) for the relief of the owners of the ship Achilles, and objection was made. I understand the objection then made will not be persisted in, and I now ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay the owners of the British ship Achilles $1,543, for expenses incurred in rescuing, provisioning, and landing at Montevideo the crew of the wrecked American ship Arabia, in June, 1895.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that this is a case that can not be reimbursed under the general law because of the peculiar conditions under which it arose, and it seems to those who are familiar with the facts that there ought to be action on the part of Congress with reference to it. The British ship Achilles was on her way from the Pacific to Hamburg and fell in near Cape Horn with the wrecked American ship Arabia, waterlogged, with twenty-eight seamen on board, whom she rescued, going out of her way to take them from the wreck; and instead of keeping on her course to Hamburg and landing the seamen at that place, which would have been at great expense to the Government and delay to the rescued men, this British vessel changed its course and went out of her course to Montevideo for the purpose of landing these seamen and putting them in the way of reaching this country at the earliest possible moment. Indeed, I understand that she had not sufficient provisions for both her own and the rescued crew.

In doing this she added to her expenses a considerable amount which can not be reimbursed to her under the general law, which contemplates the transportation of wrecked seamen by the regular route of a vessel; and it seemed to the Committee on Claims and to the officials that not only justice and the interest of humanity but comity toward another nation which is now doing this country special service required that we should pay the actual expenses of this vessel (about $1,500) in going out of its way to rescue, feed, and transport these shipwrecked American seamen to a South American port.

Mr. LOUD. If these sailors had been carried to Hamburg, where this vessel was bound, the Government would have been liable for their transportation to this country?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly; and in that case the expenses would have largely exceeded the sum appropriated in this bill.

Mr. LOUD. Exactly; that is what I was about to say.

Mr. DINGLEY. It seems to me that in justice to the owners of this British vessel and in the interest of humanity this Government ought to pay the actual extra expenses of this vessel in going out of its way to rescue, feed, and transport these twenty-eight American wrecked seamen, it appearing by the papers transmitted to Congress by the Treasury officials that these extra expenses were a little over $1,500, which this bill proposes to pay.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROBB. I object.

Mr. DINGLEY. Well, I have done all I could in the matter. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Pending the announcement, leave of absence was granted to Mr. LANHAM, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3209. An act making Sabine Pass, in the State of Texas, a subport of entry and delivery;

S. 135. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Palmer;

S. 156. An act granting an increase of pension to John H. Mullen;

S. 166. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel A. Smith;

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 23, 1898.

Prayer by Rev. JOSEPH C. HARTZELL, D. D., LL. D., of Africa, bishop Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. BURROWS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

OFFICIAL RECORDS OF UNION AND CONFEDERATE ARMIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the concurrent resolution of the House providing for the distribution of the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies, and asking for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. LODGE, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. WELLINGTON presented the credentials of Louis E. McComas, chosen by the legislature of the State of Maryland a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1899; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the several Departments of the Government to complete the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, amounting to $143,275.59, and for the postal service, payable from postal revenues, amounting to $7,355.55; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 17th instant, a list of all judgments rendered against the United States by the circuit and district courts of the United States under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the findings filed by the court in the cause of Henry R. Walton, administrator of John Walton, deceased, vs. The United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 17th instant, a list of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in Indian depredation cases since December 6, 1897; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 17th instant, a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims not heretofore reported to Congress, amounting to $323,446.04; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, submitting an item of appropriation for inclusion in the general deficiency appropriation bill under "Pay of the Navy," fiscal year 1895, $37.10; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, submitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation, "Contingent and miscellaneous expenses, District of Columbia, 1898," $600; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Attorney-General, submitting additional estimates of deficiencies in appropriations for expenses of United States courts, $37,290.22; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War, submitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for "Medical and Hospital Department" for the fiscal year 1898, to remain available until January 1, 1899, $150,000; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, as supplemental to the list of judgments forwarded in response to a resolution of the 17th instant, the judgment of Ella M. Hendricks; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 175) providing for the printing of additional copies of certain volumes of Decisions of the Department of the Interior Relating to Public Lands for sale and distribution.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1136) for the punishment of seduction in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 4918) for the relief of J. Henry Rives;

A bill (H. R. 8279) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891;

A bill (H. R. 8925) to amend sections 1698 and 1734 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 9955) to transfer the county of Menard, in the State of Texas, from the western district of Texas to the northern district of Texas, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 10510) providing for the transfer from the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit to the Supreme Court of certain appeals from the district court for Alaska;

A bill (H. R. 10585) designating Titusville, Crawford County, Pa., a port of delivery in the customs collection district of Erie, Pa.; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 221) for improvement of San Joaquin River and Stockton and Mormon channels, California.

INSPECTION OF SAILING VESSELS.

Mr. PERKINS. I present a telegram in the nature of a petition signed by the mayor and board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the enactment of suitable laws whereby the proper United States officers will have full control and supervision of all sailing vessels. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Telegram.]

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 21, 1898.

Hon. GEORGE C. PERKINS,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Your attention is called to the following resolution unanimously adopted by the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco at a meeting held on June 20, 1898. This is a subject which is of great importance and necessitates as prompt action as is possible to be taken, in the protection of the lives of our citizens:

Resolution No. 1285 (fourth series).

Whereas a special committee was appointed by his honor, the mayor, under the provisions of resolution No. 1251 (fourth series), consisting of Supervisors Clinton, Lackmann, and Morton, for the purpose of conferring with the officers of the Chamber of Commerce and the collector of the port in order that steps might be taken to memorialize Congress to pass suitable laws for imposing proper and reasonable conditions to be observed and complied with on the part of owners or charterers or persons in charge of sailing vessels upon which passengers are proposed to be transported; and

Whereas there is no law or laws for the examination of the imposition of conditions on sailing vessels proposing to carry passengers to insure their safety; and

Whereas the said special committee held a conference with the trustees of the Chamber of Commerce and the collector of the port at a meeting of the association held on June 14, 1898, at which conference the matter of requesting Congress to enact suitable laws whereby the proper United States off-

cers would have full control and supervision of all sailing vessels carrying passengers sailing out of our ports was discussed, and subsequently a resolution earnestly urging the California delegation at Washington to take immediate steps to accomplish this end was adopted and a copy of said resolution transmitted to Senator PERKINS: Therefore,

Resolved, That this board have viewed with solicitude this pernicious freedom which has been chargeable with the loss of many lives, and, in furtherance of the object to be attained, desire to impress upon Congress and our Senators and Representatives the necessity of some legislation that will have the effect of imposing suitable conditions and a proper inspection of all sailing vessels which may propose to afford accommodation to and solicit passenger traffic.

Resolved, That his honor the mayor and the chairman of this committee be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to telegraph to Senator PERKINS and Congressman MAQUIRE the necessity for Congressional action on this vital matter during the present session of Congress, and the clerk is hereby directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the Senators and Congressmen representing this State at Washington.

JAMES D. PHELAN,
Mayor.

C. A. CLINTON,
Supervisor and Chairman of Committee.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 6093) granting a pension to Ellen E. Nash;

A bill (H. R. 6525) granting a pension to Mary Ann Sullivan;

A bill (H. R. 377) granting a pension to Susan I. Barrows; and

A bill (H. R. 3565) to grant a pension to Theresa Bonnavau.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 4916) granting a pension to Virginia C. Fleanor;

A bill (H. R. 737) granting a pension to Olive H. South;

A bill (H. R. 4484) granting a pension to Miriam V. Kenny; and

A bill (H. R. 8950) increasing the pension of Mrs. Sarah Fry.

Mr. GALLINGER (for Mr. TURNER), from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8724) granting a pension to Addie L. Ballou, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PRITCHARD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3232) granting a pension to Edward Madden, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. LINDSAY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6064) granting a pension to Mary A. Watts, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was recommended the bill (S. 3901) for the relief of John L. Smithmeyer and Paul J. Pelz, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment relative to an appropriation for the maintenance of a target range at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., submitted by himself on the 20th instant, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3471) for the relief of George H. White, late captain Company H, Nineteenth Michigan Infantry Volunteers, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3486) for the relief of George H. White, formerly captain of Company H, Nineteenth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

Mr. LODGE. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives to provide for printing copies of Commercial Relations, 1896 and 1897, and copies of the Review of the World's Commerce, etc., to report it with amendments. I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The amendments of the Committee on Printing were, in line 5, after the word "Relations," to insert "and 500 copies for the use of the Senate and 1,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives;" and to insert, in line 8, after the word "forth," "500 copies for the use of the Senate and 1,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives;" so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That the Public Printer be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to print, for distribution by the Department of State, 5,000 copies of Commercial Relations, and 500 copies for the use of the Senate and 1,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 1896 and 1897; and (in separate form) 10,000 copies of the Review of the World's Commerce, etc., and 500 for the use of the Senate and 1,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, being part of said Commercial Relations.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator reporting the resolution whether the calendar or fiscal year is meant. 15 says "1896 and 1897." Does that mean the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, beginning July 1, 1896, or does it mean the two calendar years 1896 and 1897?

Mr. LODGE. I could not answer that without looking at the letter of the Secretary of State, which is at the desk. I will state to the Senator that a resolution was passed by the Senate in just this form, but the House sent us a resolution without any allowance of copies for distribution by the Senate and the House. The committee amended it so as to give for distribution to the two Houses what we had put in our original resolution. I do not remember whether it is for the fiscal or calendar year. I can not tell without looking at the letter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

MILITARY JUBILEE IN NEW YORK.

Mr. THURSTON. I am directed by the Select Committee on International Expositions, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 170) authorizing the President of the United States to invite, through the proper channels, the Governments of England, France, Germany, Austria, Russia, Belgium, Switzerland, Mexico, and Venezuela to send details of troops to this country to participate in a jubilee to be given in New York by the trustees of the Red Cross Society of New York City, to report it back favorably, without amendment.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that the trustees of the Red Cross Society of New York purpose to give a military jubilee, by Miss Clara Barton and the Red Cross Society, in Madison Square Garden the two weeks beginning December 26, 1898, and ending January 7, 1899, and are desirous of having the Governments of England, France, Germany, Austria, Russia, Belgium, Switzerland, Mexico, and Venezuela send details of troops to this country, at their own expense, to participate in such jubilee.

The joint resolution authorizes the President to invite, through the proper channels, the above Governments to send such details of infantry, cavalry, and artillery as they may see fit to send to participate in such jubilee.

Mr. MILLS. Has the joint resolution been reported from a committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was reported from the committee this morning.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 4800) granting a pension to Georgia E. Chase; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FORAKER introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 4801) granting a pension to George W. Davis (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 4802) granting a pension to Mrs. Mollie L. Troup; and

A bill (S. 4803) granting a pension to Alexander L. Little (with accompanying papers).

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 4804) granting right of way through the Pikes Peak Timber Land Reserve and the public lands to the Cripple Creek Short Line Railway Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

ANNEXATION OF THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Mr. GEAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. Res. 259) to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted an amendment providing for an appropriation to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to fully complete the approaches and grounds around the court-house and post-office building at Charleston, S. C., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MARTIN submitted an amendment providing for an appropriation to enable the Secretary of War to cause the channel of the Elizabeth River from Hampton Roads to the United States navy-yard near Norfolk, Va., to be improved, widened, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

tion bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to William A. Cowles the sum of $1,000 for services as an employee of the United States Geographical Survey from March 1 to November 1, 1878, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment providing for an appropriation of $15,000 to pay George C. Hazleton, jr., and Howard F. Kennedy for all rights under the copyright of The National Capitol, Its Architecture, Art, and History, and for the plant thereof, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANTLE submitted an amendment relative to the payment of $385 to H. R. Cunningham for additional services rendered in the office of the Secretary of the Senate as acting assistant minute and journal clerk from March 13 to May 15, 1898, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORMAN submitted an amendment providing for an appropriation of $5,273.30 to pay L. Robert Coates & Co., of Baltimore, Md., for steel plates furnished in the construction of the U. S. light-house steamer Zizania, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted an amendment relative to an appropriation of $2,000 for expenses connected with collecting statistics relating to the use of alcohol in the manufactures and arts free of tax, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LIEUTENANT HOBSON.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to inform the Senate whether Lieutenant Hobson and those who were captured with him have been or are confined by the Spanish authorities within the line of fire or under the fire of the United States fleet; and if so, at what place or places they are or have been so confined; also to inform the Senate what efforts have been made to effect the exchange of such prisoners and with what results; also to transmit to the Senate copies of the correspondence or reports upon the subjects of this inquiry.

ALLEGED MUTILATION OF THE DEAD.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to inform the Senate whether the bodies of the United States marines or sailors who were recently killed in battle at or near Santiago de Cuba were mutilated after death by the Spanish soldiery, and to transmit to the Senate copies of the official correspondence and reports upon the subject of this inquiry.

VIRGINIA I. MULLAN.

Mr. COCKRELL. When the Calendar was being called on the 15th instant there was on the Calendar Order of Business 669, the bill (S. 2773) for the relief of Virginia I. Mullan, of Annapolis, Md., and just ahead of that was Order of Business 659, Senate bill 3698, for the restoration of annuities to the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians. When the Calendar was being called I presumed Senate bill 3698 was read by its title from the desk.

I was looking at the Calendar and supposed it was 659 instead of 669, and I remarked, "Let the bill be passed over." I find that in the RECORD. I certainly never intended to ask that Senate bill 2773 should be passed over. I am familiar with it and know it to be exactly right. I evidently misunderstood the bill that I asked be passed over. As that bill would have been passed, having been reported favorably from the Committee on Claims, and as it is a short bill, I ask that it may now be considered by unanimous consent. It will take only a moment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2773) for the relief of Virginia I. Mullan, of Annapolis, Md. It proposes to pay to Virginia I. Mullan, of Annapolis, Md., $420.98, that being the amount of money due by the United States to her, as owner and holder of coupons Nos. 3, 4, and 5, for interest from January 1, 1854, to September 1, 1856, on California Indian war bonds Nos. 84, 183, and 194, for $500 each, and No. 220, for $1,000, act of May 3, 1852, which coupons were heretofore filed by the First National Bank of Washington, D. C., in the Treasury Department for payment, but not paid for want of sufficient appropriation with which to pay the same, as recited in Senate Document No. 137, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, and recommended by the Treasury Department for payment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIMBER SEIZURES IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I present a resolution which I ask to have read. I will move to have it referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. However, before the reference is made, I wish to make a statement as to the reason why I should like to have the resolution considered. The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, by full committee or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it hereby is, authorized and directed to investigate the conduct of Special Agent C. A. M. Schlierholz in the seizure of timber in Arkansas; that said committee or subcommittee shall, at its discretion, visit the State of Arkansas or other locality necessary for a thorough investigation of the subject, and is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and employ a stenographer, and the necessary expenses incurred shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, Senators will remember that a few days ago I introduced a resolution, which the Senate adopted, asking the Secretary of the Interior to inform the Senate under what instructions this timber agent was acting, and especially to inform the Senate whether he was directed to seize all timber. The Secretary of the Interior sent a response to the Senate inclosing a letter from the Commissioner of Public Lands, making a number of statements in connection with this matter. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read the entire report, although it is short, comprising only a page or two, but I wish to call attention to some points that were stated in the letter of Mr. Hermann, Commissioner of Public Lands.

It seems to me that the Commissioner has been as careful as a man could be in the instructions given to this special agent and that in the high-handed outrages the special agent has been guilty of in that section of the country he has acted without authority, without the approval of the Commissioner of Public Lands, and, as it seems to me, has persistently deceived the office as to what the facts were. The Commissioner, Mr. Hermann, says, amongst other things:

I have the honor to report that no definite or specific instructions have been given to Special Agent Schlierholz by this office to seize any timber whatever in the State of Arkansas, and all seizures made by him, it appears, have been made under advice or instructions from the United States attorney for the eastern district of Arkansas and by virtue of the general authority vested in him as a special agent of this office appointed to protect the public interests.

Further along in the same report, after stating that there had been charges of depredations committed upon timber in that part of the country and that he had directed this agent to ascertain the facts, he says:

From his first reports to this office it appears that certain dealers in black walnut and other valuable timber, located in several States, had agents in the State of Arkansas buying up such timber and shipping it to their respective employers; that said agents did not confine their operations to the purchase of timber from private or deeded lands, but bought timber wherever and from whomsoever they could get it, and in many instances induced and encouraged parties to cut from unperfected homestead entries and from vacant public lands, in some cases advancing money to the parties to file fraudulent homestead applications on the lands, under cover of which to cut and dispose of the walnut and other timber thereon.

In the course of his investigations—

Says Mr. Hermann:

He discovered that timber unlawfully cut and removed from public lands was being rafted down the White River to Batesville, Ark., and he has, under the general authority vested in him as a special agent of this office, from time to time taken possession of or seized certain rafts containing such timber. United States Attorney Jacob Trieber and Special United States Attorney H. F. Auten have filed libels in rem in the United States court at Batesville, Ark., for the timber so seized, and the same is now in the custody of the United States marshal. This is, in brief, the present status of the matter in regard to the seizures of timber at and in the vicinity of Batesville, Ark. The entire matter is now within the jurisdiction of the United States court, where all parties interested will be protected in their rights and the questions at issue will be judicially and finally disposed of.

Mr. President, one of the remarkable features connected with this matter is that here is a charge of widespread and deliberate fraud, of depredations upon timber, and yet there is no statement made of a single arrest ever having been caused by this special agent. He seems to have confined his attention to seizing timber on the charge that it was taken from Government land. If there have been violations of the law, if people have been robbing the Government land, I should like to know why, when he has got what he says is positive proof of the guilt of these parties, nobody has been arrested? In this report of Mr. Commissioner Hermann there does not appear any statement that any arrests have been made. There is a statement in one of the papers giving an account of the proceedings in the court last week of the trial of one man and of his acquittal.

Mr. WILSON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. Have the special agents authority to arrest? They have authority to seize, but does not the power to arrest come after the matter has been presented to the United States grand jury?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am less familiar with the public-land laws than is my friend the Senator from Washington. I presume that no Government officer would have a right to arrest an American citizen except upon reasonable proof of guilt.

Mr. WILSON. And by due process of law.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. And by due process of law. But when he has positive evidence and proof of the guilt of these people it would seem that he had a right to cause their arrest. He certainly, I should think, had no right to seize timber without some proof that the timber was taken from Government land.

The Commissioner, as I said in the beginning, has been as reasonable in this matter as a man could be expected to be. I quote his instructions to this special agent:

You will also duly impress upon him the necessity for securing conclusive evidence in every instance before recommending legal action therein of any nature, and that only in emergent cases in which conclusive evidence has been secured should seizure be resorted to.

Mr. President, I desire Senators to pay attention to the language. This is an instruction more positive, it seems to me, than any friend of the holders of this timber could ask. He goes on to say:

Again, under date of April 8, 1898, Special Agent Schlierholz was advised that the matters in hand at Batesville, Ark., "require discretion and caution in order to avoid any false step that might unduly prejudice the cause of the Government or its efforts to protect the public domain from the vandalism of unlawful depredators."

These letters of precaution undoubtedly were duly observed by Special Agent Schlierholz, but, as a further precaution, and to fully satisfy myself in the matter, I, on May 31, 1898, telegraphed as follows: "Seize or sell no logs until you have positive evidence of ownership by Government."

Mr. President, this is what the Commissioner of Public Lands says he has positively instructed this agent of his Department to do.

Now I will read a statement published in one of the Little Rock papers, which gives the facts in connection with a recent trial, as I understand. This was published at Little Rock, where the marshal lives, where the district attorney lives, and where the assistant district attorney, who is prosecuting in these cases, lives. These matters were brought into the Federal court only last week, and I confess I am utterly amazed at the statements made in this paper.

I can but hope that something may develop to prove that they are unfounded, because the Federal judge, whose rulings in this case seem to me to be absolutely monstrous, is a man for whom I have had the highest personal respect and of whose absolute fairness I have never had any doubt. But I wish to call the attention of the Senate to this article. It is headed "The timber cases." It is taken from the Arkansas Democrat of June 18, 1898:

THE TIMBER CASES.

In the timber cases pending in the United States court at Batesville for condemnation of timber seized by the special agent of the Government the parties who were in possession, claiming ownership of the timber at the time it was so seized, filed motions to be made parties defendant in the suits, and to be heard, by way of denial, upon the issues made by the petitions filed in behalf of the United States in said cases. It was contended for these parties that the timber having been taken by the agent of the Government without process of any kind, and without a prior opportunity of being heard on the question as to whether the timber did belong to the Government, was in conflict with the plain provisions of the constitutions of the United States and the State of Arkansas, and that no right in the Government could flow from such a seizure, but that it was a trespass upon the rights of these parties. It was contended that therefore when the matter was brought into court by the Government, upon issues made by its petition, the parties from whom the timber had been so taken had a right to defend, and should be made defendants to the cause upon their motion. But the court ruled that these parties could not be allowed to defend, and denied the motion.

The court also ruled that if these parties wished to set up any right to the timber so seized they would have to file petitions setting up their rights in the cause wherein the timber was being proceeded against, and would have to assume the burden of proof in the trial of the question.

From this ruling it is intended to take an appeal, if a case can be made, presenting it for determination to an appellate tribunal.

Upon its face this ruling is startling, and involves strange and dangerous doctrines. It in substance sanctions the right of the Government, through its law department, to send out special agents and seize timber wherever found, and in the possession of individuals, without the authority of any process of a court of the land and without an opportunity being first given to the holder of the property to be heard in defense of his possession and rights. And it converts such an arbitrary seizure, without process of law, into a valid prima facie title, which must be rebutted, in the first instance, by the party from whom the timber was taken. In this way a trespass under the protection of the Government is converted, without a hearing, into a prima facie title, and the wronged individual is required, whether he has means to do so or not, to prove his rights.

The law has always been understood to be that individuals, no matter how just their rights to property may be, can acquire no legal possession of the same by forcibly taking it from the possession of another without process of law. And it is a tyrannical exercise of power on the part of the United States to disregard this law.

These parties, thus forced to assume the burden of proof of their rights by the illegal seizure of the Government, whether they have the means to do so or not, or to lose the timber, which in many cases represents the major part of their belongings, have been blandly told by the officer of the United States that these proceedings for condemnation are not necessary—that they are matters of grace afforded by the Government from its goodness of heart to give claimants an opportunity to be heard. And the threat is made that hereafter no further condemnations will be attempted in court, but that parties claiming timber seized will be remitted to the Department at Washington for their relief.

There is just enough in all this to indicate that all law and all traditions of organic right are being disregarded and set aside by the Government in these timber cases. And the excuse for it is that a large quantity of timber has been taken in the section of country tributary to Batesville from Government land. But this fact does not justify the arbitrary setting aside of the fundamental principles of liberty and possession by the Government and the imposition of a burden upon the innocent that they are not able and ought not of right to bear.

Now I will read to the Senate an extract from a private letter giving some facts that I confess excite a feeling of indignation in me that I have no words to express. It is from Batesville, Ark., written by Mr. J. S. Handford, a man from whom I read a letter a few days ago. I stated at the time that he was a banker and a reputable citizen, a man who had moved to Batesville some years ago from the Northwest, who has been engaged in business, and who was a partner with his brother in this timber business.

One of them was a soldier in the Federal Army and was shot through the body during the war. He is an upright man, fearless, honest, straightforward in all his dealings. Mr. Handford writes as follows:

BATESVILLE, ARK., June 13, 1893.

DEAR SIR: We are all very thankful to you for the great help and kindness shown in our timber troubles.

That is, for the former resolution I offered.

We were ready for trial—

There were from twenty to forty of these rafts seized and held by this timber agent. The cases were brought for trial in rem by the district attorney; and when they came up for trial, the claimants were there with their witnesses ready to prove that the timber was theirs, that it had come from their own land, that it was not taken from the Government land in any way whatever; and yet they were denied a trial. The case was continued without a showing on the part of the Government that a single subpoena had ever been issued for a witness.

The special agent writes to Mr. Hermann, as I read in the hearing of the Senate, stating that he has seized only timber where he had positive proof that the timber came from Government land, and yet, with all these rafts, in the Federal court not one witness was produced to substantiate his charge. If he had these witnesses why were they not there? Without an affidavit on his part or without showing any diligence, these cases were continued by the court, although the claimants for this property were there at great expense to themselves and offering to prove that the timber was theirs, taking the burden of proof upon themselves; and they were not allowed to prove it.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the judge's name?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. John A. Williams. The letter that I had just begun to read proceeds as follows:

We were ready for trial, but the Government had no evidence and put our cases off until the next term of court.

The judge (Williams) ruled that the burden of proof rested upon the defendants—

It is unaccountable to me that such a ruling could be had, but it is so stated in the paper and it comes from this private letter also:

The judge (Williams) ruled that the burden of proof rested upon the defendants, from which our attorneys have taken an appeal. The Government agent, Schlierholz, settled with most of the parties from whom he had taken timber. One man's timber brought $305. After deducting $40 fees or charges of Schlierholz and paying his witnesses and expenses, he had about $40 left, and his timber was proven to be off of deeded land.

A poor fellow's winter's work was embodied in this raft, which sold for $305. It was seized by this satrap, and bringing $205, $40 out of the $205 was taken by Schlierholz for fees and charges, and after the poor fellow had paid the expenses of the witnesses who had come from 40 and perhaps 50 miles to Batesville to defend, he had the miserable pittance of $40 left. There is another thing to which I will call the attention of the Senate just now while we are on this point.

This man Schlierholz, as I read from the statement of Mr. Hermann a few minutes ago, has reported to him that he had positive evidence of what he was doing there and that he was acting under the direction and authority of the district attorney. I asked Mr. Hermann if this "positive evidence" that Schlierholz claimed to have had been reported to him. He answered that it had not, but that Schlierholz was acting under the direction of the district attorney. This, I suppose, satisfied Mr. Hermann that the thing was regular and straight.

But I will read a letter to the Senate in a moment which shows that in open court the district attorney stated that he had given no advice about it; that he had given no instructions whatever to Schlierholz. So I have no doubt he reports to the district attorney that he is directed by Mr. Hermann to proceed and is acting in conformity with his orders, and that he reports to Mr. Hermann that the district attorney is telling him what to do, and that he is proceeding regularly with it all; and the truth is he is reporting to nobody and has no proof such as he claims to have. But to finish this letter:

When a homesteader has his final receipt from the Government Land Office and has fully proven up, and his land is on the tax books of the county, we have considered that the land belongs to the homesteader—

And he is not wrong in that—

The Government is two or three years behind in making out their deeds, and it is not the fault of the homesteader if he hasn't his deed. But this agent claims that all such land is Government land until the homesteader gets his patent. One party proved up ten years ago, got his final receipt, and has been paying taxes ever since; still this is claimed to be Government land by this agent.

Truly, yours,

J. S. HANDFORD.

This is the sort of positive proof, I presume, that he has that these men have been stealing timber.

Now, Mr. President, I have only one more paper to submit in this connection. This is a letter from Gen. Robert Neill, formerly a member of Congress, a good lawyer, a perfectly just and fair man—a man who would not be guilty of undertaking to protect anybody in depredations on Government timber, a man who would not make a statement that is not the literal and exact truth. It is jointly signed by two other attorneys, Judge J. W. Butler, who was for many years the judge of that circuit, and Hon. J. C. Yancey, a prominent lawyer and leading citizen of that locality:

BATESVILLE, ARK., June 13, 1893.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of the 15th instant to hand by this morning's mail. Have just wired you as follows: "Letter received. Have Public Lands Committee investigate. Letter by mail." I think the matter of Mr. Schlierholz's action in regard to seizures of timber at this place should be investigated by Congress.

Three days ago, in the United States court then in session at this place, the United States district attorney in open court emphatically disclaimed having advised Schlierholz to pursue the summary methods practiced by him in the seizure of timber—

I call attention to the fact, and Mr. Hermann reports that Mr. Schlierholz says he has been taking these steps under the direction and by the suggestion of the district attorney. This district attorney distinctly disclaims any such thing, and, as I said a while ago, I have no idea he reported what were the real facts either to Mr. Trieber or to Mr. Hermann—stating that Schlierholz was acting under the instructions of the General Land Office, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. The district attorney did, however, justify Schlierholz's proceedings, and claimed they were in strict pursuance of law.

There were upon the docket of the district court here at the beginning of the term ten cases, each being an information filed by the district attorney, and each information embracing from two to twelve different rafts of timber.

Ex-judge J. W. Butler, J. C. Yancey, esq., and myself represent most of the parties claimant of all this timber, which had all been seized by Schlierholz. The seizures were made before the institution of any proceeding whatever in court. In behalf of our clients we appeared and filed petitions to be made parties defendant, setting forth claims of ownership to the different parcels of timber, and that it was taken from our possession without any process of law. The court refused the prayer of these petitions and to make us parties defendant, but stated that we might intervene and file our claims, which would be investigated, and that the burden of proof would be upon the claimants to prove their ownership to the timber and that it came off lands other than those owned by the Government. Driven into this position by the ruling of the court, we then filed the claims of our clients as intervenors, and assumed the burden of proof, having our witnesses present, subpoenaed and brought here at great expense to the owners of the timber. Whereupon the district attorney, Mr. Trieber, and his special assistant, Mr. Auten, of Little Rock, announced positively that the Government was not ready for trial in any of its cases, being unprepared with its witnesses, the claimants of the timber pressing and demanding trial. The court peremptorily continued the cases at the instance of the Government.

The first of these cases was instituted as far back as the 25th of March, and the most of them were instituted in March, April, and May. The court began here the 13th day of June. The timber seized had been gotten from lands between Independence County and the Missouri line, in different counties on White River. Our clients, after having their timber seized at this place and Jacksonport, were able at their own expense to secure process of subpoena and have in attendance witnesses to prove their ownership to the property. The Government claimed to be unprepared with its testimony, although it was not stated that a single witness had been subpoenaed in behalf of the Government.

It would therefore appear that Schlierholz did not "have conclusive evidence that the timber was really Government property" when he made the seizures, neither was he prepared with any evidence at the time of the calling of these cases for trial on the 14th instant. I hope that the Public Lands Committee of the Senate of the United States will thoroughly investigate this matter, as it surely deserves to be. If the procedures of this fellow Schlierholz are legal, and if the district judge's rulings are good law (which we do not believe), then Congressional legislation is needed.

Yours, truly,

ROBERT NEILL.

We concur fully in all the statements of the foregoing letter.

J. C. YANCEY.

J. W. BUTLER.

Hon. JAS. K. JONES, U. S. S.,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. President, before asking that this matter be referred to the committee—I will not read the other newspaper clippings that I have here—I wanted to make this statement, so that the committee and the Senate might understand the facts as to what seems to me to be a most outrageous and unpardonable performance.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not hear all of the Senator's statement, and I wish to ask him what is the real complaint of which he thinks the Senate ought to take cognizance?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think the Senate ought to investigate the charges which are made and ascertain whether this employee of the Federal Government has, without authority of law, been seizing timber which is the property of private individuals, reporting to the Commissioner of the General Land Office here that he had positive proof that the timber came from Government lands, and that he had taken the steps which he had taken under the direction of the district attorney, and reporting to the district attorney that he had taken the steps under the direction of the Commissioner of Public Lands. So it seems that in executing and carrying out his orders he is deceiving, as I believe, both of those Federal officials at the same time.

Mr. SPOONER. Has the Senator brought the facts which he has recited to the attention of the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I personally talked with the Commissioner of the General Land Office before I took any steps whatever in reference to this matter. After I presented the resolution, and a response came, I went to the Department and had a further talk with him. He sent for the chief of division having such matters in charge, and asked him in my presence what evidence Schlierholz had of the fact that the timber he seized was taken from public lands, and he said he reported that he had positive proof. He said then, "On what authority do you make this statement?" and he said, "The statement was that he seized the timber under the authority and by the direction of the district attorney; and I presume he has furnished him the facts on which it is proposed to take action." Then, to my astonishment, after this conversation, I find by this letter from General Neill that the district attorney in open court said that he had nothing whatever to do with it. So it seems that this man Schlierholz is deceiving both his superiors.

Mr. SPOONER. But the point of my question was whether the Senator had brought to the attention of the Commissioner of the General Land Office the facts which seem to justify the charge that the agent has been guilty of deception, and to ask for his removal.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. When I asked for this examination I made the statement in the open Senate that the man ought to be removed. I believe, as I said in the beginning, that Mr. Hermann's instructions to this agent were all that any reasonable man could ask, and his orders were made positively not to proceed against people where there was any doubt. I believe the Commissioner thought, up to the time these facts had come to his knowledge, that the agent had done so. I think Commissioner Hermann is entirely honest, but may not be convinced of this man's bad conduct, as a committee would be if they had an investigation of the facts and had both sides appear before them and in the presence of each other.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I desire to say, as the Senator from Arkansas is aware, that the Commissioner of the General Land Office is a very fair-minded man, and I believe the Senator will agree with me in the statement that if this matter is properly laid before the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior there will be a proper and thorough investigation. I understand the Senator to say that the matter is now in the United States court. I do not believe it is proper for a committee of this body to be required to take a case out of court and investigate it. I do not think the Senator would insist upon a proposition of that kind.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from North Dakota certainly does not suppose that I have the slightest idea that we can take this case out of court. We can not take any case out of court, but we can find the facts for the information of the Senate and the general public about a matter, whether it is pending in court or not.

Mr. WILSON. I fully sympathize with the Senator from Arkansas, but I do not think at this point, as stated by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], it is time for the Committee on Public Lands to make this investigation.

Replying to what the Senator from Arkansas has said, that this special agent has made no arrests, I will say that he has no authority under the law to make any arrests. He can only seize, under instructions and the law, timber as to which he has proper evidence that it has been cut from the public domain in violation of law; but there is no authority for him to arrest any American citizen. That must be done by due process of law.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, of course I know the agent can not make arrests except under regular process of law. The point I made was—probably I did not use a fortunate expression—that if he had positive evidence that this timber was stolen, somebody was guilty of the crime, and it was the duty of the agent to have presented that matter to a grand jury of the United States, and to have had all these parties indicted; but he makes no statement of having taken any such step.

Mr. WILSON. That is the proper course, as stated by the Senator from Arkansas. This matter has been, since the Senator offered his first resolution, undergoing some investigation by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I am satisfied, from my long acquaintance with him, that he is as anxious to do the people of that section justice as is the Senator who represents them here so ably. While the Senator was speaking, I called up the General Land Office, and they informed me that they were still continuing the investigation and that they were looking into the matter.

Now, we are almost on the eve of an adjournment, I hope, and it seems to me, Mr. President, that it would be next to impossible to secure such an investigation by the Committee on Public Lands as the Senator desires as quickly and as accurately as it could be done by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

I was going to suggest that the resolution might go over until to-morrow; and I will, with the Senator's permission, being a member of the Committee on Public Lands, investigate the matter and see if it can not be determined with exact justice to all those people down there, through the avenues of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me one word?

Mr. WILSON. Certainly; I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, there has been great necessity for an investigation of this kind for many years. I have often called attention to these matters. There are too many land agents; and they are not, as a rule, men of sufficiently high standing and knowledge to discharge their duties properly. Occasionally we have very good ones, who behave very well; but when you get an unruly agent, and he is turned loose, he will absolutely destroy a community. This is but one of many examples. I have known several communities which were absolutely destroyed for years and their industries all broken up by these wild chaps running around.

There ought to be some way to prevent this abuse. It is worse than letting so many wild animals loose, and here is one of them who is undoubtedly disturbing a whole community. There should be a less number of these agents; they should be guarded by law, and the limits of their power should be fixed. That is one of the things which the Committee on Public Lands should study carefully and prepare a law which will prevent future occurrences of this kind. They will never stop until there is some regulation of law regarding the matter.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In response to the suggestion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON], I have to say that I am perfectly willing that the matter shall take the course he suggests. I agree with him in the hope that we are approaching an adjournment, but I do not want the Senate to adjourn without putting it into the power of the Committee on Public Lands to investigate this matter, if it should become necessary to do so.

I have the greatest confidence in Mr. Hermann's integrity and his uprightness and ability. I believe he has done what he thinks was fair all the way through. But my complaint in that connection is that he has been imposed upon by what I believe to be an unscrupulous fellow. I have the same confidence in the Secretary of the Interior. I have no doubt, after the facts are made known, they will make an investigation; and if the Committee on Public Lands find, by reason of an investigation by the General Land Office and the Interior Department that there will be no occasion for further action on the part of the committee, they can easily let the matter go; but the Committee on Public Lands, after we adjourn, I think ought to have the power reserved to it to make an investigation if the facts presented to them are such as to justify it.

I am willing to let the matter go for the present.

Mr. WILSON. I was only anxious to facilitate the investigation of this matter in such a way as to bring about a correction of the evil. Of course, as stated by the Senator from Nevada, occasionally a wild man gets into one of these positions as special agent, but at the same time there are a great many wild men running around and seizing and stealing timber upon the public domain.

Mr. STEWART. But that is no reason why honest men should be destroyed.

Mr. WILSON. It will not hurt to have an investigation into this matter. Of course where an agent seizes timber he is subject to all sorts of criticism, because he treads upon, so to speak, somebody's toes. We have had a great deal of experience of that kind in the Western country, and I thoroughly sympathize with the Senator from Arkansas; but I think he will get the matter remedied, and I think he will get it remedied more quickly, if he will go through the channels of the Interior Department and not by long and continuous and extended investigation by the Committee on Public Lands, most of whose members desire to return to their homes immediately after adjournment and who do not wish to go to Arkansas, however pleasant that journey might be at this season of the year. Therefore, in order to carry out what the Senator himself so much desires, I shall ask that the resolution go over until to-morrow to see if I can not get some information in regard to the matter which will be satisfactory to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Very well. That is satisfactory to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1895) for the relief of the heirs of Thomas J. Chace and Thomas J. Chace, jr., late of Monticello, Fla.;

A bill (S. 2785) for the relief of Blanche T. Hunton;

A bill (S. 2916) relating to the Washington, Woodside and Forest Glen Railway and Power Company, of Montgomery County, Md.; and

A bill (S. 3871) to authorize the Montgomery-Elmore Bridge and Improvement Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River near the city of Montgomery, Ala.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 251) to limit section 3 of "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes."

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to authorize the numbering consecutively of the sections of the bill (H. R. 6148) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes.

ANNEXATION OF THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 259) to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. WHITE resumed the speech begun by him yesterday. After having spoken for one hour,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Arkansas in the chair). The Senator from California will suspend. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3098) for the restoration of annuities to the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the pending joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so ordered, in the absence of objection. It is so ordered. The Senator from California will proceed.

Mr. WHITE resumed his speech. After having spoken for twenty minutes,

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This is a very interesting phase of this subject, and I think it is a pity that there are not more Senators here than are now present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut in the chair). The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon,	Frye,	McEnery,	Platt, N. Y.
Baker,	Gear,	McLaurin,	Pritchard,
Bate,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Burrows,	Hanna,	Mallory,	Shoup,
Carter,	Hansbrough,	Mantle,	Spooner,
Clark,	Harris,	Martin,	Stewart,
Clay,	Hawley,	Mills,	Sullivan,
Cullom,	Helfield,	Morgan,	Tillman,
Davis,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Turley,
Deboe,	Jones, Ark.	Nelson,	Wellington,
Elkins,	Jones, Nev.	Penrose,	Wetmore,
Fairbanks,	Kyle,	Perkins,	White,
Faulkner,	Lodge,	Pettus,	Wilson.
Foraker,	McBride,	Platt, Conn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present; and the Senator from California will proceed.

Mr. WHITE resumed his speech. After having spoken about forty-five minutes, he said:

At this time, as I have had the floor for a good while to-day and am quite weary, I will yield to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], who will continue the discussion. I will conclude my remarks later on.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it has been suggested to me by several gentlemen who were previously opposed to the bankruptcy bill, and especially the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], that if I would propose to take up the conference report they would make no objection, if the question could be submitted without debate, and I am willing, if that is their desire, to submit it without debate. I ask leave to call it up. I suggest that the Senator from Nevada be sent for.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is impossible to hear the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I made a suggestion which is the result of a conversation with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART]. I ask the Senator from South Dakota to yield to me to call up the conference report on the bankruptcy bill, which the Senator from Nevada on some inquiry thought might be taken up and disposed of without debate. Of course if any gentleman wishes to debate it I shall not make the request now.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not now know who wants to debate it. There are a number of Senators interested in the bill who are not present, and for one I should not be willing to have a unanimous-consent agreement that the report should be taken up and disposed of without debate. It is a very important matter.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to call up the report; but if any gentleman desires to debate it, I will not press it. I do not want, of course, to take advantage of any human being. If any Senator wishes to debate it, I shall not at this time make the request.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to remark that I was very much opposed, as the Senator knows, to the bill as it came here first, but it has been very materially modified. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has worked on it and deserves great credit. As among all the bills which have passed containing an involuntary provision, this is the best guarded and the mildest. I think perhaps the bill may work well. I am so much opposed to any involuntary clause that I shall vote against the conference report, but I do not desire to debate it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am not willing, with the Senate as thin as it is now, to allow the report to be taken up with the understanding that it is to be agreed to without debate. If the Senate were full, it would be different. I do not know that I want to say anything about it. My feeling about the bill is very much like that of the Senator from Nevada. I thought I never would agree to a bankruptcy bill which had any involuntary feature in it. This conference report as it has been made, I confess, is very much less objectionable than anything of the kind I have seen reported, and after fair consideration and debate of its provisions and an understanding of them I am not sure I would not be willing to vote for it. But I am not fully satisfied about it, or at least I am not so well satisfied as to be willing to vote without debate.

Mr. HOAR. We have taken great pains to have the bill printed in two forms, and I hope Senators will give their attention to it. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think, perhaps, that would be a wise step under the circumstances, so as to allow Senators to come in.

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to take advantage of anybody.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Faulkner,	McMillan,	Roach,
Bacon,	Foraker,	Mallory,	Sewell,
Bate,	Frye,	Mantle,	Shoup,
Berry,	Gallinger,	Martin,	Spooner,
Burrows,	Gear,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Butler,	Hale,	Money,	Sullivan,
Carter,	Hanna,	Morrill,	Teller,
Clark,	Harris,	Nelson,	Thurston,
Clay,	Hawley,	Pasco,	Tillman,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Turley,
Cullom,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	Wellington,
Davis,	Jones, Nev.	Pettus,	Wetmore,
Deboe,	Lodge,	Platt, Conn.	White.
Elkins,	McBride,	Platt, N. Y.
Fairbanks,	McEnery,	Pritchard,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HOAR. Before I made the suggestion of the lack of a quorum I stated that it was my purpose, in compliance with the suggestion of the Senator from Nevada, to ask the Senate to take up the conference report on the bankruptcy bill if it could be voted upon without debate, which I suppose is the general desire on the part of the Senate. But if any Senator desires to discuss the bill, or if there be anyone who thinks he has not had, since the report was presented, time enough to read and consider the bill, so that he would not like to have it disposed of now, I will not press the request.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have endeavored to get time to read the report. I am a member of the committee which reported the original bill and have taken some interest in it, but with other duties which have pressed upon me I have not been able to read it, and I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to let the report go over for the time being. I have no disposition unduly to delay it, or anything of the kind, but I should like to see it, because I will be expected to vote for or against it, and I should like to look it over before I vote on it.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; then I will not make the request to-day, but seek an early time, after conference with Senators, to make the request.

Mr. SPOONER. This is a matter of very great consequence, and I think one which is demanded very generally by the different sections of the country. It is quite a difficult undertaking and requires a great deal of study for a Senator to take the original bill and study out the differences. I think it ought to be considered that a fair statement either by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] or by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who has taken great interest in this subject, as to the substantial difference between the Torrey bill and this bill as it is reported will not be precluded.

Mr. HOAR. If I may be pardoned—

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who was the author of the amendment which passed the Senate last winter, was on the conference committee. I suppose it is no breach of propriety to state that he was appointed by the Senate members of the conference committee a subcommittee and met a member of the House, and this measure is substantially what those two gentlemen agreed upon. Of course they consulted their associates and in some matters of detail adopted the suggestions of their associates, but it is practically the result of a very laborious winter's work of the Senator from Minnesota and one member of the House.

The Senator from Minnesota has prepared and had printed a careful statement. There is the conference report first in pamphlet form, and then a careful statement pointing out all the changes, which is also in print, which may save Senators a good deal of time. But the measure is a matter of so much importance and interest that it is not the purpose of the conferees on the part of the Senate to ask the Senate to take it up at a time when any one Senator has not had time enough to satisfy himself, and therefore I shall not press the request to-day after the statement of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. I think I may add, however, that I presume the Senator from Minnesota will testify that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] and myself stood loyally by him in conference and loyally by the majority of the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no question of that, and no one else would ever have any. The whole point of my suggestion was that a brief statement made to the Senate by one of the conferees as to the differences between the two bills would be much more interesting and instructive. I do not want any delay, and I do not want to debate the bill; but when the report is taken up, I do not think a statement of that sort, made to the Senate upon a matter of this consequence, ought to be considered debate and therefore precluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not think anybody will object to it.

PORT OF TITUSVILLE, PA.

Mr. FRYE. I am called out of the Chamber, and I should like to have the Chair lay before the Senate House bill 10535.

The bill (H. R. 10535) designating Titusville, Crawford County, Pa., a port of delivery in the customs collection district of Erie, Pa., was read twice by its title.

Mr. FRYE. The Committee on Commerce has reported a bill (S. 4712) designating Titusville, Pa., a port of delivery in the customs district of Erie, Pa., with amendments, which is Order of Business 1299 on the Calendar. I move that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed and that the House bill be given the place of the Senate bill on the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. If the conference report upon the bankruptcy bill has been laid aside, I ask unanimous consent that I may now submit a conference report upon the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent to submit a conference report. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6896) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 13, 18, 23, 24, 48, 50, 52, 63, 71, and 72.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 25, 26, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 39, 40, 41, 43, 45, 47, 49, 51, 54, 55, 60, 61, 62, 65, 66, 67, 68, and 69, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of said amendment strike out the word "only;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "and one of whom may be located by the Secretary of the Interior in the Indian Territory, and under his direction and authority may perform any duties required by law of said Secretary relating to affairs in said Territory;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in line 4 of said amendment, the words "agent for said Indians;" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of the Interior;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "Interior," in line 4 of said amendment, and insert in lieu of the matter stricken out the following: "$5,000, to be immediately available;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "Interior," in line 4 of said amendment, and insert in lieu of the matter stricken out the following: "$5,000, to be immediately available;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For the erection at the Puyallup Indian Agency School, Washington, of a new boys' dormitory and a building for dining room, kitchen, and laundry, $10,000; and for water system, sewerage, and minor changes and improvements, $10,000; in all, $20,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby directed to examine into and report to Congress, at its next session, upon the practicability and desirability and cost of establishing an Indian industrial school on the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, in the State of Montana."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Appeals shall be allowed from the United States courts in the Indian Territory direct to the Supreme Court of the United States to either party, in all citizenship cases, and in all cases between either of the Five Civilized Tribes and the United States involving the constitutionality or validity of any legislation affecting citizenship, or the allotment of lands, in the Indian Territory, under the rules and regulations governing appeals to said court in other cases: Provided, That appeals in cases decided prior to this act must be perfected in one hundred and twenty days from its passage; and in cases decided subsequent thereto, within sixty days from final judgment; but in no such case shall the work of the commission to the Five Civilized Tribes be enjoined or suspended by any proceeding in, or order of, any court, or of any judge, until after final judgment in the Supreme Court of the United States. In case of appeals, as aforesaid, it shall be the duty of the Supreme Court to advance such cases on the docket and dispose of the same as early as possible;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That hereafter, whenever it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that by reason of age or disability any allottee of Indian lands under this or former acts of Congress can not personally and with benefit to himself occupy or improve his allotment or any part thereof, the same may be leased, in the discretion of the Secretary, for the benefit of such allottee, upon such terms, regulations, and conditions as shall be prescribed by him, for a term not exceeding five years: Provided further, That hereafter no Indian or tribe of Indians shall lease for mining purposes lands, except by the authority of the Secretary of the Interior first had and obtained, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him as to quantity of land in each case, and limit of price, and time of lease, which in no case shall exceed seven years, and shall only be made by the authority of the council of the tribe making such lease, and with the approval also of the Secretary of the Interior after said lease has been agreed upon, except in cases where the lands have been patented to any tribe or allotted to individual Indians;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from said amendment, in lines 3 and 4, the words "Monday in December, 1896," and insert in lieu of the words so stricken out the following: "day of April, 1899;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add after the word "necessary," at the end of said amendment, the following: "any agreement made hereunder to be submitted to Congress for its approval;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$3,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The right is hereby granted to cut timber for mining and domestic purposes, at such prices and subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, from that portion of the Colville Indian Reservation in the State of Washington which was vacated and restored to the public domain by the act of July 1, 1893, entitled 'An act to provide for the opening of a part of the Colville Reservation, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes,' and the net proceeds arising from the disposition of said timber shall be set apart and disposed of according to the provisions of section 2 of said act of July 1, 1893, but primarily the expense incident to disposing of said timber, including compensation of such special agent as the Secretary of the Interior shall appoint, shall be paid out of any existing appropriation for the survey and allotment of said lands and shall be reimbursed and replaced from the proceeds arising from the disposition of the timber."

The Indian allotments in severalty provided for in said act shall be selected and completed at the earliest practicable time, and not later than six months after the proclamation of the President opening the vacated portion of said reservation to settlement and entry, which proclamation may be issued without awaiting the survey of the unsurveyed lands therein. Said allotments shall be made from lands which shall at the time of the selection thereof be surveyed, excepting that any Indian entitled to allotment under said act who has improvements upon unsurveyed land may select the same for his allotment, whereupon the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the same to be surveyed and allotted to him. At the expiration of six months from the date of the proclamation by the President, and not before, the non-mineral lands within the vacated portion of said reservation which shall not have been allotted to Indians as aforesaid shall be subject to settlement, entry, and disposition under the act of July 1, 1895: Provided, That the land used and occupied for school purposes at what is known as Tonasket School, on Bonaparte Creek, and the site of the sawmill, gristmill, and other mill property on said reservation are hereby reserved from the operation of this act, unless other lands are selected in lieu thereof, as provided in section 6 of the aforesaid act of July 1, 1895."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in line 2 of said amendment, the word "availability" and insert in lieu thereof the word "practicability;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 2 of said amendment strike out the words "and required," and in line 30 strike out the sum named and insert in lieu thereof "$40,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"For ascertaining the depth of the bed rock at a place on the Gila River in Gila County, Ariz., known as The Buttes, and particularly described in Senate Document No. 27, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, and for ascertaining the feasibility, and estimating in detail the cost, of the construction of a dam across the river at that point for purpose of irrigating the Sacaton Reservation, and for ascertaining the average daily flow of water in the river at that point, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be expended by the Director of the United States Geological Survey, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as in any way committing the United States to the construction of said dam. And said Director shall also ascertain and report upon the feasibility and cost of the Queen Creek project mentioned in said Senate document."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the settlers who purchased with the condition annexed of actual settlement on all ceded Indian reservations be, and they are hereby, granted an extension to July 1, 1900, in which to make payments as now provided by law."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 64: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add, after the word "provision," at the end of the section, the following: " Provided, That so much of the appropriations herein made as may be required to pay for goods and supplies, for expenses incident to their purchase, and for transportation of the same, for the year ending June 30, 1899, shall be immediately available; but no such goods or supplies shall be distributed or delivered to any of said Indians prior to July 1, 1899;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 70: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert before the matter inserted by said amendment the following: "Sec. 10:" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 11. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to pay, out of the appropriation of the act of Congress of June 7, 1897, such of the Creek warrants as are proven to be held by innocent holders who acquired them in good faith for value and without knowledge, actual or constructive, of irregularity or fraud in the issuance thereof, and such warrants shall upon payment be canceled by the Secretary of the Interior; and all the warrants so issued by said Creek Nation shall be presented to the Secretary of the Interior within ninety days from the passage of this act, and all warrants not so presented are hereby declared null and void, and such warrants so presented which are not proven to have been issued or acquired in good faith for value and without knowledge, actual or constructive, of irregularity or fraud in the issuance thereof, shall be held by the Secretary and marked upon their face 'fraudulent and void.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference recommend to their respective Houses the following verbal amendments in the text of the bill, namely:

On page 16, in line 20, strike out the word "sixteenth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventeenth;" on page 17, line 1, strike out the word "twenty-ninth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "last;" on same page, line 17, strike out the word "ninth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "tenth;" on page 19, line 2, strike out the word "second," where it first occurs, and insert in lieu thereof the word "third;" on page 20, line 23, strike out the word "twenty-ninth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "last;" on page 23, line 10, strike out the word "twenty-eighth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-ninth," and on same page, line 24, strike out the word "twenty-eighth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-ninth."

W. B. ALLISON,
GEO. C. PERKINS,
F. M. COCKRELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. S. SHERMAN,
CHAS. CURTIS,
JOHN S. LITTLE,

Managers of the part of the House.

During the reading of the report.

Mr. BATE. I see that we are taking action upon the Indian appropriation bill. It is a very long and a very important report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report is being read.

Mr. BATE. All right. I do not want to object to the reading of it, but to the consideration of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report has to be read at some time.

The reading of the conference report was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. Let the report be printed and its consideration go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks that the report be printed and that the consideration of it be deferred.

Mr. BATE. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that course will be taken. The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course I have no objection to the report going over. I should like to give notice that at some convenient hour to-morrow, having reference to the regular order, I shall desire to call up the report and have it disposed of. I do not think it will take a great deal of time, and of course it ought to be disposed of in a short time.

Mr. BATE. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that the report ought to be printed. It is a very long report.

Mr. DAVIS. That was my motion.

Mr. BATE. I think it had better go over until the next day, and not set its consideration for to-morrow. We shall hardly have an opportunity to study the report after it is printed if it is taken up to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to suit the convenience of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] having in charge the joint resolution now under consideration. I would not have put in this report at present, but I saw that there was an interruption in the consideration of the report on the bankruptcy bill, and I desire, of course, to make as much progress as I can with the appropriation bills.

Mr. BATE. I do not think it will be an inconvenience to me to set any day you choose.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not care to set a day. I will suit the convenience of Senators having in charge the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order to print the conference report has already been made.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question in regard to the conference report. What disposition was made of the provision for free homesteads?

Mr. ALLISON. The provision for free homesteads as amended by the Senate was stricken out, and in lieu of the House provision there is an extension until the 1st of July, 1900.

Mr. PETTIGREW. What provision was made in regard to leasing mineral lands on Indian reservations?

Mr. ALLISON. The provision relating to the leasing of mineral lands was very much modified, but authority is given to lease mineral lands under certain conditions and circumstances.

Mr. PETTIGREW. For the Indians to lease them?

Mr. ALLISON. Indians to lease them, with regulations to be first provided for leasing by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The committee recognizes the title, then, to the minerals in the Indians?

Mr. ALLISON. Well, the committee did the best they could with that particular matter. The question of title, of course, had to be considered among other things. I wish to say that the House was very insistent upon the provision relating to the leasing of mineral lands, and we finally compromised the matter by surrounding the leasing with such safeguards as we could. The mineral lands are leased now, as I understand it, under existing law. The House conferees were quite willing to strike out the whole provision, but we were not willing to do so.

Mr. PETTIGREW. We never have acknowledged the right of the Indians on any ordinary reservation to lease mineral lands.

Mr. ALLISON. They have been leased notwithstanding, and that question, so far as I know, has never been raised.

Mr. PETTIGREW. A provision of that sort involves hundreds of millions of dollars to the Government of the United States, and, in my opinion, will cost the Government more than the war we are now engaged in.

Mr. ALLISON. That may be.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It seems to me that the conference report ought to be pretty severely contested if such a provision is contained in it.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the provision. This was the first time in a bill of this character that any provision has been made respecting the prohibition of mineral-land leases. The statutes, as I understand, recognize mineral-land leases. The Senate inserted a provision prohibiting the leasing of mineral lands. The House insisted that in the interest of the Indians, particularly respecting two or three reservations, that power should not be taken away, especially as to the Uintah Indians. The House conferees stated that that power should in some form be allowed, and we have hedged the proposition about, as Senators will see, with provisions which will secure the interests of the Indians as well as the interests of the Government of the United States, unless we shall have a Secretary of the Interior who intentionally or ignorantly neglects his duty.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that the Indians who occupy the Uintah Reservation have no title whatever to the lands. Those are public lands of the United States. The Indians have a possessory title, such as Indians get under Executive order.

Their title is purely possessory, and can be withdrawn from them at any time by the President of the United States revoking the order. They have no ownership of the lands whatever, and ought not to be recognized as having any. In dealing with those Indians we ought to deal with them as having no treaty rights whatever to that land.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not quite sure that the Senator is accurate in his statement that the President of the United States could withdraw the lands at any time by an Executive order.

Mr. TELLER. Unless by some such unwise legislation as this we have recognized some right that we ought not to recognize, my statement is correct.

Mr. ALLISON. On the 4th day of June of the present year the President approved an act passed by both Houses dealing with the entire question of the Uintah Reservation. So I think it would hardly be in good faith, after having passed a law so recently as the 4th of June, for the President of the United States absolutely to abolish the reservation. I do not believe that could be done.

Mr. TELLER. I did not say the reservation could be abolished; but if there has been such an act passed on the 4th of June, perhaps I will modify my remarks. If such an act passed, I did not know of it. I know that these Indians went on the Uintah Reservation by virtue of an Executive order, and they ought to have remained there under that Executive order. It is all right enough for them to stay there until they are sent somewhere else.

I wish to ask the Senator why the free-home provision was stricken out by the conferees?

Mr. ALLISON. It was stricken out for the reason that it seemed to be necessary to secure an agreement upon the bill. We passed the bill in the Senate. The first contention on the part of the House was that such a bill was pending there, that very important amendments were likely to be placed upon it, and that it had no business upon an appropriation bill, it being a matter of pure legislation and having no relation to any of the appropriations contained in the bill.

Thereupon we yielded to the extent of allowing the settlers to continue to occupy the lands, giving them until the 1st day of July, 1900, to further consider this question, leaving the present House of Representatives until the 4th of March of next year to deal with the bill now pending in that body as they may choose to deal with it. In other words, that the House of Representatives shall have an opportunity until the expiration of this Congress to deal with the subject, and we also give an opportunity to the next Congress to deal with it until 1900. So that there will be two opportunities to deal with the whole matter, without prejudice to any settler or any person except the United States—first, the present House of Representatives, and secondly, the next Congress, with the new House of Representatives and the new Senate. That was the best adjustment and arrangement we could make. It was a Senate amendment, and we were obliged to yield to that extent.

Mr. TELLER. A bill containing the homestead provision passed the Senate of the United States in the last Congress, and it was pending in the House of Representatives when the St. Louis convention was held. That bill was specifically approved by the St. Louis convention, and it was declared that it ought to become a law. The bill failed in the House of Representatives because of the opposition there of the very party which had declared for it at St. Louis. We passed the same provision again by putting it into an appropriation bill. I want to impress the Senate that it has failed again because of the same opposition from the same source.

Mr. President, in my judgment, that bill was an equitable and just bill, one which the best interests of the people of the country required should become a law. I myself have great faith in the conservative influence of a home for every man. I believe the Government of the United States can not exercise its power and use its wealth to any greater advantage than in providing such homes. It is a notorious fact that the people on those lands can not pay for the land under present conditions at the price which they have agreed to pay, and in the future we will be either compelled by force of arms to drive them from their homes or we will be compelled to pass a law which shall give them an opportunity to pay for their homes in some way. They can not pay for them under the contract they have made with the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. In this provision we have extended the time until the 1st of July, 1900; and those people will not be disturbed during that period.

Mr. TELLER. In the interest of those people I am glad the Senate conferees insisted upon so much. I wish the Senate conferees had insisted upon the acceptance of the proposition upon the part of the House conferees. Of course I do not mean to reflect upon the conferees on the part of the Senate, for I have no doubt they did the best they could.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the consideration of the conference report has passed from the consideration of the Senate, and that the question before the Senate is now on the House joint resolution in relation to the annexation of Hawaii, upon which the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] has the floor.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to make an inquiry of the Senator from Iowa as to the provisions of this bill. There was one provision in which I felt considerable interest and one in which I know a great many other Senators felt a good deal of interest. I listened to the reading of the report, but I did not understand exactly the recommendation of the committee on amendment No. 73, in the last paragraph of the bill, the provision for the payment of certain Creek warrants alleged to have been issued by the regularly constituted authorities of the nation and to be in the hands of innocent holders.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not have the text of the amendment before me, but the amendment was modified very much.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to have the Senator state the substance of it.

Mr. ALLISON. I can state the substance of it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is all I ask.

Mr. ALLISON. The substance of it is that the question is to be carefully investigated by the Secretary of the Interior, and such warrants as have been issued in good faith, actually or constructively, shall be paid.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Issued in good faith?

Mr. ALLISON. They shall be paid; and those not so issued shall not be paid. Then there is a provision which requires the warrants to be filed with the Secretary of the Interior within ninety days.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Does the Senator mean warrants issued in good faith or purchased in good faith?

Mr. ALLISON. All the warrants issued under this provision relating to this particular transaction.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The charge is that there was a certain amount of the warrants which were ordered to be printed in the regular way and issued in the regular way, which the regularly constituted Creek authorities issued themselves; and there was also issued a large amount besides.

It was claimed that those warrants could not have been issued in good faith, but were a deliberate fraud. The holders of these warrants claim that they held them in good faith; that they were issued by the officers who had the authority to issue them; that they were on the market, and that they had no notice of any fraud, either actual or implied. The point I was anxious to get at was the Senator's statement that the provision was made for warrants issued in good faith. That is very different from warrants purchased in good faith.

Mr. ALLISON. If I said "issued in good faith," I meant purchased in good faith by innocent purchasers. The provision was drawn very carefully by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who is quite familiar with the facts, and I think it is as well guarded as it can be.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I wish to allude to one other matter in connection with this conference report; and as to that I shall be very brief.

Several years ago we passed an act of Congress by which we set apart Annette Island in Alaska for a lot of British Indians. It has an area of 184 square miles. Upon that island there were discovered some of the richest mines in Alaska. It is calculated that one of those gold mines is worth to-day many millions of dollars—forty or fifty million dollars. The proposition now is to allow those 800 Indians, who were brought over from British America and placed upon that island so that they might have a home, to lease that mine, and then hereafter, if the United States wish to extinguish the title, we shall have to buy them out. Such a monstrous proposition as that is accorded to in conference and insisted on by a Republican House of Representatives. That is but one of many instances well known to everybody.

When miners went in there and undertook to take that claim last year Mr. Duncan, who has charge of those Indians and who was a British subject until he brought his band over to the United States, came down here and remained during the winter, protesting against anything which would open up that country to mining entry. This is an additional move. They could not get it upon a mining entry, so that citizens of the United States could not go there and take it, but they get up a scheme by which the mine can be leased, and they and a few other men lease it and share the profits with the Indians. That mine is as well known there as are the gilsonite beds in Utah. I am surprised that the committee should bring in such a proposition. It does not seem to me that this conference report can be adopted without being pretty thoroughly discussed. This land was set apart as a reserve by act of Congress, and all that we ever give in such instances is the right to use the surface and the things on the surface. We never have recognized the right to the minerals.

I do not know but the free-homestead provision was defeated as a matter of economy. I suppose that was the reason. But,

Mr. President, while we are willing to force the money out of those people who have taken homesteads upon the public domain, and have thereby repealed the homestead law, we are remitting duties to Asiatic labor in the Hawaiian Islands to the extent of $10,000,000 a year. We have remitted $72,000,000 already, and we have collected that money out of the people of the United States in the way of taxes to support our Government while we have not collected duty upon Hawaiian sugar and Hawaiian products—not in the interest of American citizens, but in the interest of Asiatic labor—and yet we want to economize by compelling the homesteader upon the public domain to pay for his land, thereby repealing the homestead laws; and this in the interest of economy! Senators want to do this, although the Republican party, as every other party in this country, has declared in its platform at the last convention that those homes should be free; and that makes another contest, it seems to me, on the conference report on the Indian bill.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. 8379) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891;

A bill (H. R. 9955) to transfer the county of Menard, in the State of Texas, from the western district of Texas to the northern district of Texas, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10310) providing for the transfer from the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit to the Supreme Court of certain appeals from the district court for Alaska.

The bill (H. R. 1136) for the punishment of seduction in the District of Columbia was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (H. R. 4918) for the relief of J. Henry Rives was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 8925) to amend sections 1698 and 1734 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

IMPROVEMENT OF SAN JOAQUIN RIVER, CALIFORNIA.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 221) for improvement of San Joaquin River and Stockton and Mormon channels, California, was read twice by its title.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that that joint resolution may be considered at this time. There is no objection to it, and it is very important that it should pass.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNEXATION OF THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 259) to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I had hoped that the controversy with regard to the acquisition of new territory, that the contest over changing the policy of this country as it has existed for a century, that the question whether we ought to adopt an imperial policy and acquire distant colonies to be ruled by us against their consent, would, in view of existing circumstances, have been delayed until this war was over, until the whole question could be considered, until the American people could have thought upon the subject, until we could have decided upon a policy as to whether we would revolutionize the purposes of this Government, and that next winter we would take up this question, when we would have time to deliberately act upon the proposition to formulate a colonial policy.

No one for one moment pretends that we intend to admit the Asiatic people of Hawaii or of the Philippines into full citizenship under the Government of this country; but, instead of that, propelled by an interest which has gathered around this Capitol for the past several months or years, an interest in the production of sugar by Hawaiian labor, certain gentlemen, having less of patriotism than I hoped they might possess, bring this question here now and undertake to force it through Congress as a war measure.

I contend that the area of this country is great enough, if we would maintain free institutions under a republican form of government. For in a republic, founded upon the principles of equality and universal suffrage, it is essential that the individual voter shall have a knowledge of, and be familiar with, the methods of government; and if the country is so vast and the problems of government are so complicated that it is impossible for the voter to have or acquire this familiar knowledge, how is it possible for him to act intelligently? How is it possible for him to know that by his vote he is sustaining free institutions?

In the past republics have been of small area—a single city perhaps—with a comparatively small population. The founders of this Government, recognizing the difficulty of maintaining as a unit a republic of extensive proportions, inaugurated the Federal system, a union of sovereign States, hoping thereby to extend self-government over vast areas and to maintain therein the purity of republican principles, each State being in itself a republic, each State of necessity containing a population indigenous to its climate and possessing a soil that would bountifully respond to the energizing touch of men capable of governing themselves. Therefore the founders of our Government made it an unwritten law that no area should be brought within the bounds of the Republic which did not and could not sustain a race equipped in all essentials for the maintenance of free civilization and capable of upholding within its boundaries a republican form of government.

For the purpose of unifying a vast area within the bounds of the Republic it was enacted that the central Government, the Government of the United States, should be a government of limited powers, a government possessing only such powers as were conferred upon it by the Constitution, all other sovereign rights, all other powers common to a sovereign, being retained by the States themselves, retained by the people themselves as inhabitants of the States. Therefore, if we adopt a policy of acquiring tropical countries, where republics can not live, and where free, self-governing people have never lived since the world had a history, we overturn the theory upon which this Government is established and we do violence to our Constitution.

The whole theory of our Government precludes centralization of power; the whole theory of our Government sustains the idea that the United States as a government shall do only those things delegated to it in the Constitution.

But, Mr. President, our Federal system has not accomplished the purpose for which it was created; it has not fulfilled the expectation of its authors. Before we acquire more territory, before we start upon a policy of imperialism and of conquest, it is our duty to inquire whether our area and population are not already too great. Centralization has gone on so rapidly since the war of the rebellion that already our people are looking to the Government of the United States as the source of all power through which all relief must come.

Mr. President, the concentration of power in the hands of the Federal Government has been followed by encroachments by the Federal courts upon the sovereignty of the States and upon the legislative and executive branches of the Government itself, and it has made the courts almost supreme in our affairs.

Within the past thirty years the wealth of the United States, which was once fairly distributed, has been accumulated in the hands of a few; so that, according to the last census, 250,000 men own $44,000,000,000, or over three-fourths of the wealth of this country, while 52 per cent of our population practically have no property at all and do not own their homes. It would naturally be supposed that the 48 per cent of the people who still have an interest in the property of the nation would be the governing classes. Recent events, however, point unmistakably to the fact that the 250,000 people who own nearly all the wealth have combined with the 52 per cent of our population who have no property, and by gaining control of a great patriotic political organization have usurped the functions of government and established a plutocracy.

Among all plutocracies of the past, as well as among all monarchies of the past, whenever all power and all property have been gathered into the hands of the few and discontent appears among the masses, it has been the policy to acquire foreign possessions, to enlarge the army and the navy, to employ discontent and distract its attention. The recent attempt on the part of the United States to acquire foreign territory, coming as it does along with an ever-increasing clamor for the enlargement of the Army and for the creation of a great navy, is sufficient to alarm patriotic citizens and lead to an anxious inquiry as to whither we are drifting.

Rome was organized as a Republic, and for the first six hundred years of her history had the best government then existing on the globe. To be a Roman citizen was greater than to be a king. She consolidated her power until she ruled all Italy. She began to spread out along the northern coast of the Mediterranean; but when the policy of acquiring and governing a people who could have no part in her republican form of government began, Rome ceased to exist as a Republic and became an Empire. The misery and ruin of her people began. When she conquered Egypt and Asia, having populations the same as those countries possess today, of low consuming power and great tenacity of life, the Roman found he was no competitor in the growing of crops and in other industrial enterprises.

The Roman of those days was as the Anglo-Saxon of to-day—a man of great vitality, requiring excellent nurture, the best of food, and plenty of it. When he came into competition with, when he conquered and undertook to govern, when he absorbed the Asiatic races, people with a low vitality and great tenacity of life, human machines who could subsist upon the least of food and perform the most of work, the Roman farmer was destroyed and the Roman Empire passed away.

James Bryce, in speaking of this period of Roman history, says:

The ostentation of humility which the subtle policy of Augustus had conceived and the jealous hypocrisy of Tiberius maintained was gradually dropped by their successors, until despotism became at last recognized in principle as the government of the Roman Empire. With an aristocracy decayed, a populace degraded, an army no longer recruited from Italy, the semblance of liberty that yet survived might be swept away with impunity. Republican forms had never been known in the provinces at all—and the aspect which the imperial administration had originally assumed there soon reacted on its position in the capital. . . . This increased concentration of power was mainly required by the necessities of frontier defense. For within there was more decay than disaffection.

Will they be with ours?—

The fact of the matter is that when the Roman Republic was founded most of its people were farmers. Their farms did not exceed 12 acres in area, indicating a dense rural population. No foreign foe could march through that compact rural population of landowners to the wall of Rome. They were successful farmers and prosperous, and they made mighty soldiers. Cincinnatus left the plow and led legions on to victory. But during the first century of the Christian era centralization had done its work. The lands had been absorbed by the usurer and gathered into vast estates, cultivated by tenants and often by slaves; the mines of gold and silver in Spain and Greece had been worked out.

The price of farm products had fallen, as they were compelled to compete with the rich granaries of Egypt. Roman legions were no longer recruited among the farmers who tilled the soil. The soldiers were foreign mercenaries. Roman institutions faded away under the influences which gradually took possession of that empire and destroyed its vitality; and the same story can be told of every nation through all history from the very moment it departed from its policy of peace, its internal policy, and entered upon a career of conquest.

One of the oldest nations in the world to-day is Japan. She has had a succession of rulers for two thousand seven hundred years. For two hundred and fifty years previous to 1859 no foreigner was allowed to set foot upon the soil of Japan. She lived within herself. There was no desire for conquest, and no foreign debt. The result is that, in my opinion, to-day she possesses the most civilized people upon the globe, adopting everything that is good and rejecting everything that is bad in modern civilization. Japan holds everything within her own Government. There is no foreign debt. No foreigner is allowed to own stock in any of her companies or to own her soil. There is that peace and satisfaction, that comfort and contentment among the masses of her people that no other nation I know of possesses. But if she starts upon a career of conquest, if she allows the best blood of her people to depart to foreign lands to conquer and make serfs of an inferior people, from that day will date the ruin and decline of Japan.

I believe these problems, as they have been wrought in the crucible of the past, are the ones that should absorb the thoughtful consideration of our people. I believe attention should not be taken from these great questions of economics and government, from the great questions now revitalized in gigantic trusts and corporations, and should not be distracted by a career of conquest.

I believe it is my duty, under these circumstances, to resist on all occasions the acquisition of any territory beyond our borders not contiguous to our present territory and peopled by an unwilling and an inferior race.

To-day we have no territory that it requires a navy to defend. The United States is so situated that she can say whether she will have peace or war. We possess no territory that can be acquired or held by a foreign foe, even if we owned not one single ship; and no nation, however great or strong, can gain any advantage by a war with us. But the moment we acquire distant possessions, we must build a navy to defend them, for in case of war these possessions would be first attacked and taken from us. France, England, and Germany have possessions scattered all over the world, and are consequently compelled to maintain immense navies to defend them. These possessions, in case of war, furnish so many points of attack, so many embarrassments, so many opportunities for national humiliation, that the strife is to see who can maintain the greatest fleet upon the sea. Shall we enter the arena of this contest?

From our earliest history we have insisted that we would engage in no entangling alliances, that we would acquire no territory that required a navy to defend. We have said that we would attend to our own affairs, and that our interests demanded that no European country should gain further foothold upon the Western Hemisphere; and so strong has been our moral position that without a navy we have been able to enforce this doctrine.

When the French entered Mexico, we had but to indicate our displeasure and they departed; but the very moment we adopt the policy of acquiring distant territories, the very moment we enter upon a policy of acquisition and annexation, upon a colonial system of government, the moral force of our position is gone. I apprehend that, instead of being opposed, France and England would be glad if we would acquire distant islands and thereby place ourselves in the position they occupy in relation to the balance of the world.

The following from Henry Clews's Weekly Financial Review of June, 1898, is in point:

The following is an extract from a letter which I recently received from an influential member of Parliament representing one of Great Britain's largest cities, which speaks for itself:

"Just a line to say that I do not agree with your circular letter, which I have just read, where you suggest that the Philippines should be given back to Spain for Cuba. I hope you will keep the Philippines. It is time your people began to do some work in the world outside your own country. You will have to do it eventually, and you may as well begin now as wait. I am afraid it will not be many years until we have to do some joint-account fighting with continental countries for possession of the parts of the world which are misgoverned at present."

They know too well that colonial acquisition would be an element of weakness; that distant possessions would be hostages for the safety of which we would yield points of right and surrender questions of principle.

How could we invoke the Monroe doctrine and insist that foreign countries should not acquire territory in North and South America if, after our repeated declarations that we had no intention to annex Hawaii, we should proceed to annex it? Would they not justly claim that we would pursue the same course in regard to the republics of North and South America, with the purpose of ultimately acquiring them ourselves? How could we longer argue that we only seek to do right; that we only seek to furnish an example to the world of man's capacity for self-government, the golden rule of doing to others as you would be done by?

What limit can be set to our future acquisition if we once commence a colonial policy and acquire territory in the Tropics, where self-government is impossible?

Mr. President, I contend that it has been the tradition and policy of the people of the United States to acquire no territory that would require a navy to defend.

Mr. Jefferson, in writing to President Madison April 27, 1800, said:

It will be objected to our receiving Cuba that no limit can then be drawn to our future acquisitions. Cuba can be defended by us without a navy; and this develops the principle which ought to limit our views. Nothing should ever be accepted which would require a navy to defend it.—Jefferson's Works, 444.

Secretary Frelinghuysen, in a note to Mr. Langston dated June 20, 1883, says:

The policy of this Government, as declared on many occasions in the past, has tended toward avoidance of possessions disconnected from the main continent.

In 1884 he said to the same minister:

A conviction that a fixed policy, dating back to the origin of our constitutional Government, was considered to make it inexpedient to attempt territorial aggrandizement which would require maintenance by a naval force in excess of any yet provided for our national uses, has led this Government to decline territorial acquisitions. Even as simple coaling stations such territorial acquisitions would involve responsibility beyond their utility. The United States has never deemed it needful to their national life to maintain impregnable fortresses along the world's highways of commerce.

I wish to state distinctly, on the general question of annexation of outlying islands or territory—except in the North, and I make an exception thereof that I trust we have seen the last of annexation, and in this remark I include the whole group of the West India Islands and the whole of the Mexican territory contiguous to the United States, inhabited as it is by a portion of the Latin race, strangely mixed and degenerated by their mixture with native races; a population and a territory that naturally enfeeble man—a population and a territory that I earnestly hope may never be made an integral part of the people and a territory of the United States. We occupy a portion of that great northern zone which girdles the world and which has been the theater of the greatest achievements of civilization, especially in the history of the Anglo-Saxon races; but should we extend our possessions into the tropical (Hawaiian) belt, we would weaken the power of our people and Government.

Although the treaty is not now before us, in view of the fact that we are considering a subject kindred to the treaty made by Mr. Sherman for the annexation of Hawaii, I will read what Mr. Sherman had to say upon the subject:

The events of the future are beyond the vision of mankind, but I hope that our people will be content with internal growth and avoid the complications of foreign acquisitions. Our family of States is already large enough to create embarrassment in the Senate, and a republic should not hold dependent provinces or possessions. Every new acquisition will create embarrassments. The Union already embraces discordant elements enough without adding others. If my life is prolonged I will do all I can to add to the strength and prosperity of the United States, but nothing to extend its limits or to add new dangers by acquisition of foreign territory.

I hope those sentiments were largely held by all prominent members of the Republican party. I am sorry to know that the great Secretary of State, through the exigencies of politics, felt that he was compelled to place himself in sympathy with an Administration which held a contrary view upon so great and important a question.

Mr. Bayard, during Cleveland's first Administration, made the following announcement, and I take this from page 580 of Wharton's Digest of International Law:

The policy of the United States declared and pursued for more than a century discountenances and in practice forbids distant colonial acquisitions. Our action in the past touching the acquisition of territory by purchase and cession and our recorded disinclination to avail ourselves of voluntary proffers made by other powers to place territories under the sovereignty or protection of the United States are matters of historical prominence.

For the purpose of showing the unvarying policy of this country up to the Administration of President Harrison, indorsed by Democrats and Republicans alike, I will read from the first message of Grover Cleveland in 1885. Grover Cleveland had then just come from the people; he had not been contaminated and corrupted by association with the business men who afterwards disgraced the Republic by their influence over its President. He then spoke the real sentiments, in my opinion, of an honest man. He said:

Maintaining as I do the tenet of a line of precedents from Washington's day, which prescribe entangling alliances with foreign states, I do not favor a policy of acquisition of new and distant territory or the incorporation of remote interests with our own.

It has been said on this floor that Mr. Cleveland, up to the time he appointed Mr. Blount to go to Hawaii, was in favor of the annexation of those islands. This message, sent to Congress in 1885, certainly tends not only to disprove that statement, but to refute it altogether, without some positive contrary declaration on the part of Mr. Cleveland himself.

It is true that in the past we have acquired territory, but it has been in pursuance of the policy which I have already indicated. We have acquired territory, but always within the temperate zone, always contiguous to the United States, always adjoining that which we already owned, a territory which possessed climate, soil, and (if people it had) people capable of governing themselves. We purchased by treaty Louisiana and Florida, and we annexed Texas by a joint resolution, admitting her as a State into the Union after securing the consent of her people and under those provisions of our Constitution which allow us to admit new States. Florida and Louisiana we also admitted by constitutional methods, under the power granted by the States to the Federal Government—admitted by treaty.

John Quincy Adams argued in favor of the acquisition of Florida on the ground of its being contiguous territory, and by inference all through his argument he also argues that he would have been opposed to its annexation if it had not joined us.

Let us inquire as to what territory we have rejected, and see how closely we have adhered to the doctrine laid down. In December, 1882, the Government of San Salvador, one of the Central American States, lying well within the Tropics, proposed annexation to the United States and we refused to receive it.

President Polk, in his message of April 29, 1848, after reciting an offer from Yucatan "to transfer the dominion and sovereignty of the peninsula to the United States," said:

Whilst it is not my purpose to recommend the adoption of any measure with a view to the acquisition of the dominion and sovereignty over Yucatan, yet according to our established policy we could not consent to a transfer of the "dominion and sovereignty" to any other power.

Congress took no action on this message.

It was not even discussed, so far as I can find. If it was, such discussion occurred in secret session; but the idea of acquiring sovereignty over a tropical country attracted so little attention that I can find practically no other record referring to the subject. Of more recent date efforts have been made to acquire territory in the Tropics, always with the same result. In 1866 a proposition was made to acquire Santo Domingo. Santo Domingo lies east of Cuba, having an area of 28,000 square miles, including the Republic of Hayti. It is a tropical country. It lies about 1,000 miles from our shore. General Grant, in his second annual message, in 1870, makes a statement in regard to the acquisition of Santo Domingo, and I am going to read it, because it is word for word and line for line the argument made for the acquisition of Hawaii. The Committee on Foreign Relations must have read this message. Every advocate on the stump and in the Senate urging the acquisition of Hawaii must have read this message, for they come so near copying the language that we certainly can not believe they were ignorant of it.

During the last session of Congress a treaty for the annexation of the Republic of San Domingo to the United States failed to receive the requisite two-thirds vote of the Senate. I was thoroughly convinced then that the best interests of this country, commercially and materially, demanded its ratification. Time has only confirmed me in this view. I now firmly believe that the moment it is known that the United States have entirely abandoned the project of accepting as a part of its territory the island of San Domingo, a free port will be negotiated for by European nations in the Bay of Samana. A large commercial city will spring up, to which we will be tributary without receiving corresponding benefits, and then will be seen the folly of our rejecting so great a prize. The Government of San Domingo has voluntarily sought this annexation. It is a weak power, numbering probably less than 120,000 souls, and yet possessing one of the richest territories under the sun, capable of supporting a population of 10,000,000 of people in luxury. The people of San Domingo are not capable of maintaining themselves in their present condition, and must look for outside support. They yearn for the protection of our free institutions and laws—our progress and civilization. Shall we refuse them?

Exactly the same argument, a threat of injury, the promise of a prize, together with a proposition to furnish a worthless people with a decent government. There is the very argument presented by the advocates of the annexation of Hawaii; first, the danger to our Pacific coast if we do not accept these islands; second, a prize in the great richness of tropical products; third, that we shall furnish these people a share of the Government we possess and protection against incursions which they imagine may arise from foreign foes—

The acquisition of San Domingo is desirable because of its geographical position. It commands the entrance to the Caribbean Sea and the Isthmus transit of commerce. It possesses the richest soil, best and most capacious harbors, most salubrious climate, and the most valuable products of the forest, mine, and soil of any of the West India Islands. Its possession by us will in a few years build up a coastwise commerce of immense magnitude, which will go far toward restoring to us our lost merchant marine.

The same argument exactly. We have been told about the vast commercial relations with Hawaii and the number of ships that come and go bearing the American flag.

It will give to us those articles which we consume so largely and do not produce, thus equalizing our exports and imports. In case of foreign war it will give us command of all the islands referred to, and thus prevent an enemy from ever again possessing himself of rendezvous upon our very coast. At present our coast trade between the States bordering on the Atlantic and those bordering on the Gulf of Mexico is cut into by the Bahamas and the Antilles. Twice we must, as it were, pass through foreign countries to get by sea from Georgia to the west coast of Florida.

San Domingo, with a stable government under which her immense resources can be developed, will give remunerative wages to tens of thousands of laborers not now upon the island.

The same argument exactly—annex Hawaii and the American laborer will go there. "Annex Santo Domingo," Grant said, "and American laborers will go there." Then, as now, we were inviting laborers from other lands to come here, our own country being undeveloped, with vast resources untouched.

This labor will take advantage of every available means of transportation to abandon the adjacent islands and seek the blessings of freedom and its sequences—each inhabitant receiving the reward of his own labor. Porto Rico and Cuba will have to abolish slavery, as a measure of self-preservation, to retain their laborers.

San Domingo will become a large consumer of the products of Northern farms and manufactories. The cheap rate at which her citizens can be furnished with food, tools, and machinery will make it necessary that contiguous islands should have the same advantages in order to compete in the production of sugar, coffee, tobacco, tropical fruits, etc. This will open to us a still wider market for our products. The production of our own supply of these articles will cut off more than one hundred millions of our annual imports, besides largely increasing our exports. With such a picture it is easy to see how our large debt abroad is ultimately to be extinguished. With a balance of trade against us (including interest on bonds held by foreigners and money spent by our citizens traveling in foreign lands) equal to the entire yield of the precious metals in this country, it is not so easy to see how this result is to be otherwise accomplished.

The acquisition of San Domingo is an adherence to the "Monroe doctrine;" it is a measure of national protection; it is asserting our just claim to a controlling influence over the great commercial traffic soon to flow from west to east by way of the Isthmus of Darien; it is to build up our merchant marine; it is to furnish new markets for the products of our farms, shops, and manufactories.

In view of the importance of this question, I earnestly urge upon Congress early action expressive of its views as to the best means of acquiring San Domingo. My suggestion is that, by joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress, the Executive be authorized to appoint a commission to negotiate a treaty with the authorities of San Domingo for the acquisition of that island, and that an appropriation be made to defray the expenses of such commission.

Such a joint resolution was introduced; it passed the Senate, went to the House, and they refused to concur in it. With this glowing picture, with the great power Grant possessed—however, I understand there is no record that Grant exerted that power in an unconstitutional manner—but with the great power Grant possessed, he was unable to secure from Congress one step in the direction of the acquisition of Santo Domingo. So firmly in the minds of our people at that time was the determination that our area was large enough, and that only people could be admitted to the privileges of citizenship within this Republic who were capable of self-government, that even the great power and influence of Grant were unable to overturn the practice, precedent, policy, and principle upon which this Government was founded and which up to that time had maintained itself.

There is no record, however, that Grant used unfairly, unjustly, unconstitutionally, the power of his position. I believe that Grant was too patriotic to have done such a thing. But rumors come to our ears that in this contest Senators and Members are called to the White House and told that this is the Administration policy and that they must support it, and intimations of favors, not direct, for that is unnecessary, are used to force the Senate of the United States to break down the century-old policy of this country and compel the acquisition of territory within the Tropics and beyond our own borders.

Mr. Blaine says in his book, speaking of Santo Domingo:

The territory included in the Dominican Republic is the eastern portion of the island of San Domingo, originally known as Hispaniola. It embraces perhaps two-thirds of the whole. The western part forms the Republic of Hayti. With the exception of Cuba, the island is the largest of the West India group. The total area is about 28,000 square miles—equivalent to Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont, and Rhode Island combined. President Grant placed extravagant estimates upon the value of the territory which he supposed was now acquired under the Babcock treaties. In his message to Congress he expressed the belief that the island would yield to the United States all the sugar, coffee, tobacco, and other tropical products which the country would consume. "The production of our supply of these articles," said the President, "will cut off more than $100,000,000 of our annual imports, besides largely increasing our exports."

Mr. President, that is true. If we should acquire a tropical country where they produce sugar and coffee enough for our needs, we would no longer levy a tariff upon those products, but they would be admitted free of duty. It would decrease the balance of trade against us and make it larger in our favor. But what advantage would the people of the United States derive from that if the population which produced those products were incapable of self-government, incapable of helping us maintain this Republic, if they were an inferior race?

The next effort at acquisition was the Danish West Indies, and that is pending. The proposition is before us to-day. A resolution is now, I believe, upon the Calendar of the Senate to acquire the Danish West Indies. The simple acquisition of Hawaii is not all that is in this contest. It is the adoption of a policy of conquest and acquisition that must destroy the very fundamental principles upon which this Government is founded.

Years ago the proposition was presented to acquire the Danish West Indies. They are three little islands east of Puerto Rico in the Tropics, in the West Indies. They are inhabited not by white men, for there are none, and never have been. The Danes tried to live there two centuries ago. The climate was so unhealthy that they found it impossible to do so. The population there is composed of negroes. They produce sugar. If we admit the Danish West Indies, we remit the duty we now collect upon sugar from that country, which will amount to $600,000 a year. It is simply another sugar job. It is another chance to acquire enormous wealth by taxing the people of the United States. That, added to the remission of duties to Hawaii, would amount to nearly $10,000,000 a year. Mr. Wharton says:

There is no printed executive summary of the negotiations for the Danish West Indies.

So far as can be learned from the archives of this Department, negotiations were commenced by Mr. Seward, Secretary of State, on July 17, 1866, by a note to the Danish minister, General Raasløff, offering $5,000,000 gold for the three islands to be delivered, with all fixed public property therein, without conditions or incumbrances. General Raasløff having shortly afterwards returned to Denmark to accept the ministry of war, the negotiations were transferred to Copenhagen, where they were conducted by Mr. Yeaman, our minister there, on our part, and for the Danish Government by Count Frijs, minister of foreign affairs, and General Raasløff. No counter proposal was made until May 17, 1867, by the Danish Government. Then Count Frijs told Mr. Yeaman that Denmark expected $15,000,000 gold for the three islands, and that it would not cede them without the consent of the inhabitants; but that as his Government could not dispose of Santa Cruz without the consent of France, he was willing to cede St. Thomas and St. John for $10,000,000 gold, and to treat separately as to Santa Cruz.

On May 27, 1867, Mr. Seward sent Mr. Yeaman the draft of a convention such as he desired. In it he offered $7,500,000 for the three islands on the conditions above stated. And in addition he instructed Mr. Yeaman that in no case was a stipulation for the consent of the inhabitants to be inserted in the convention; that permission would be granted them to leave the island at any time within two years after the United States took possession of it, if they preferred their original allegiance to that of the United States; and that the convention must be ratified on or before August 4, 1867.

These terms not proving acceptable to Denmark, the negotiations were prolonged until finally Mr. Seward gave up the attempt to fix the date of ratification, concurred in a stipulation in the convention for the consent of the inhabitants, and offered $7,500,000 for St. Thomas and St. John.

On this basis a treaty was concluded on October 25, 1867. This was promptly ratified by Denmark, but the United States Senate delayed action on it, and finally rejected it in the session of 1868, as appears by the records of the Department of State.

Denmark had no particular desire to sell to the United States, but was persuaded to do so. The inhabitants of the islands had already voted to accept the United States as their sovereign. The late Mr. Charles Sumner, then chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, who was engaged in a personal quarrel with the Administration, simply refused to report back the treaty to the Senate, and he was supported by a sufficient number of his committee and of Senators to enable the matter to be left in this position. It required new negotiations to prolong the term of ratification, and it was with great difficulty that in a subsequent session the treaty was finally brought before the Senate and rejected. As may be imagined, our friendly relations with Denmark were considerably impaired by this method of doing business.

So we have refused on all occasions to acquire territory in the Tropics, where the population is not capable of self-government.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that the Senate take an executive session now. The Senator from South Dakota does not desire to proceed further this evening.

Mr. DAVIS. I am very reluctant to terminate the debate at an hour so early, the afternoon having been broken, but on the whole I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I shall insist upon a later session to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WELLINGTON in the chair). The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 23, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 22, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

THE RECORD.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to a speech appearing on the first page of the RECORD of this morning by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TODD]. On Monday evening during the consideration—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the gentleman to whom he refers is not in the House.

Mr. PERKINS. I am aware he is not present, and will bear that fact in mind.

On Monday evening the gentleman offered an amendment to the general deficiency bill and secured thereby five minutes to address the House. At the expiration of that time he asked for an extension of five minutes, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] objected. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] in charge of the bill asked the gentleman from Michigan whether it would not do as well to print his remarks. The gentleman from Indiana thereupon said that rather than have leave to print granted, he would withdraw his objection and allow the gentleman from Michigan five minutes more. Thus that gentleman was enabled to occupy ten minutes. But in the RECORD of this morning is found a speech covering about three pages and a quarter, the larger part of it made up of elaborate tables.

Now, I am not going to make any motion with regard to this matter. I simply desire to call the attention of the House to this abuse. No request was submitted to the House for the privilege to print. This matter was simply handed in to the Public Printer and appears in the RECORD without any authority of the House. This is an abuse that ought not to be encouraged by members of the House, and there ought to be some way in the Public Printing Office to prevent it. I shall make no motion.

Mr. KING. As has been stated, the gentleman from Michigan is not present. I was sitting by him at the time he made his remarks. I remember distinctly that he held in his hand a number of tables and stated that he would not read them, but desired to have them printed with his remarks.

Mr. PERKINS. That, Mr. Speaker, constitutes no authority. If he desired authority to print, that request should have been submitted by the Chair and granted by the House. Any member standing in his place can say in a low tone of voice that he will print tables or other matter not spoken, but that constitutes no authority.

Mr. KING. The gentleman from Iowa will remember that the gentleman from Michigan submitted a number of tables, stating that he had obtained them from the War Department, and desired to have them inserted in his remarks. That was his statement at the time, as I remember his language.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that such a statement does not give a member any right to print tables.

Mr. KING. Perhaps that is technically true—

The SPEAKER. It is not only technically true, but it must be absolutely so.

Mr. KING. But I think the gentleman from Michigan regarded what he stated as tantamount to a request for leave to print the tables and a submission of the request to the House.

The SPEAKER. That may relieve the gentleman from Michigan personally. Still there does not seem to be any remedy in cases of this sort. Members do about as they please with regard to the RECORD, and the consequence is that it has lost every element of reliability. As soon as the public thoroughly understands that fact of course it will cease to do any harm. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Allow me to add that the gentleman from Illinois in charge of the bill asked the gentleman from Michigan whether he would not as soon print as to take the time of the House. The gentleman from Michigan said no; that he understood the gentleman from Illinois proposed to have a vote on his bill that night, and he wanted members of the House to hear what he had to say; that if he simply printed his remarks in the RECORD members would not have a chance to hear them and to get the benefit of them in order to vote intelligently on the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That does not appear in the RECORD.

Mr. PAYNE. It was said in the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think not.

Mr. STEELE. And my remark does not appear in the RECORD, that rather than have the gentleman print those tables, I would withdraw my objection to allowing him to have five minutes longer. That does not appear in the RECORD, but it was stated in the hearing of the House.

The SPEAKER. There is no question before the House.

NATIONAL CONGRESS OF MOTHERS.

Mr. LINNEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 10841) to incorporate the National Congress of Mothers.

Mr. SIMPSON. I rise to a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. LINNEY. Will not the gentleman withhold that a moment until this bill has been considered? I think it will take but a few moments.

Mr. SIMPSON. All right.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Alice McLellan Birney, of the District of Columbia; Phebe A. Hearst, of California; Letitia Green Stevenson, of Illinois; Emma Morton, of Nebraska; Helen Townsend Birney, of the District of Columbia; Mary E. Mumford, of Pennsylvania; Helen Lewis, of New York; Mary Louisa Butler, of Illinois; Natalie H. Wilson, of West Virginia; Cora E. Fuller, of the District of Columbia; Jane L. McGill, of the District of Columbia; Harriet A. McLellan, of Georgia; Janet E. Richards, of the District of Columbia; Jennie Holtzman, of the District of Columbia; Harriet Lincoln Coolidge, of Massachusetts; Vesta Casedy, of Maryland; Ella J. Masters, of Illinois; Sallie Southall Cotton, of North Carolina; Mary H. Weeks, of Missouri; Elizabeth Cherrill Birney, of Pennsylvania, and their associates are hereby constituted a body corporate and politic under the name of the National Congress of Mothers, and in that name may sue and be sued, contract and be contracted with, maintain a corporate seal, make by-laws, and have perpetual succession. The principal place of business of such corporation shall be at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

The objects of this corporation shall be to promote conference among parents upon questions most vital to the welfare of their children; to further develop the manifold interests of the home; to cooperate with educators and legislators to secure the best methods of physical, mental, and moral training of the young; to enlighten motherhood upon all the problems of race development; to uplift and improve the condition of mothers in all walks of life, and to these ends to promote the formation of mothers' and home-makers' clubs in all States and Territories of the United States.

The officers of this corporation shall be a president, three vice-presidents at large, a recording secretary, a corresponding secretary, a treasurer, and an auditor, who shall be elected by ballot at an annual convention, and hold office for such terms as may be fixed by the by-laws.

There shall be a board of managers, which shall be composed of the officers above provided for, and a president or a representative from each State and Territory, who shall be chosen by the assembly of mothers' clubs in such State or Territory. This board shall meet once before and once after each annual convention of the National Congress of Mothers, and, at the call of the president, at such other times as the exigencies of the corporation may demand.

There shall be an executive committee, of which the president shall be chairman ex officio, which shall be elected by the board of managers annually, and shall in the interim between the meetings of the board approve all applications for affiliation and fill vacancies in office till the next convention of the congress, and attend to such other business as may be delegated to it by the board of managers.

The president of the congress may call meetings of the national board of managers and of the executive committee at any time she may deem necessary, and shall call such meetings of the board of managers upon the written request of any five members thereof: Provided, That not less than ten days' notice of the time and place of such meetings be given.

Each State assembly of mothers' and home-makers' clubs shall be entitled to send to the annual conventions of this congress the president of such State assembly, or a representative, and three delegates at large, and each local club shall be entitled to send to the annual conventions of this congress one or more delegates: Provided, That such State or local organization shall first have paid to the treasurer of this corporation such dues as may be provided for by its by-laws. Each delegate shall be entitled to one vote upon all questions submitted for action at any annual convention and in the election of officers of this corporation. Such delegates shall constitute the active membership of this corporation, but the by-laws may provide for associate members, life members, contributors, and benefactors, and fix their rights.

The Committee on the District of Columbia recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

On page 2, line 3, after the word "mothers," insert the words "of the District of Columbia."

Also, amend the title of the bill by inserting, after the word "mothers," the words "of the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOODY. Reserving the right to object, I should like to hear some statement from the gentleman who calls this up.

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced by me by request. I think some twenty or twenty-two of probably the most intelligent ladies in the United States came to this House some ten or fifteen days ago and desired its introduction. Of course they selected the best looking man in the Congress to do it, the Speaker, I think, being absent at that time. [Laughter.]

I was never more moved in my life or more gratified than by reason of my selection by this great and intelligent agency to introduce the bill and press its consideration in the House. And I want to make now the very best speech that I have ever made on the floor of the House in just five minutes' time. I want to admit, however, before beginning, that I am not the author of one single word of it. [Laughter.]

The society which to-day asks for incorporation by the authority of Congress I believe to merit the national character which such an incorporation would bestow, on account of its aims, its methods, and its present measure of success.

Herbert Spencer in his great work on Education has urged with great power that courses of training in the greatest, the universal business of life should be introduced into all educational institutions. Men and women, fathers and mothers, were in his time—alas, still are—ignorant of the simplest facts on which depend the physical and moral welfare of their children. Few mothers know how to exercise intelligent care, and even mother love works harm through mother ignorance.

Many of Spencer's theories have been embodied in schools and colleges, and they have revolutionized the science of pedagogy, but this most important of all is still neglected. Typewriting and manual training are recognized in all curricula, the government of the family in none. It is this national, nay, world-wide, want that the National Congress of Mothers proposes to meet. Mothers must be educated and avail themselves of the results of scientific child study. We read in one of Victor Hugo's stirring romances of a band of malefactors who made a business of deforming children for the profit of mountebanks, placing the tiny unfortunates in great earthen jars in which the head alone was left free; these jars were gradually filled by the expanding limbs of the child, which were thus twisted and cramped until growth ceased and a hideous dwarf was made to order. The strong arm of the law now prevents such horrors, but how many moral deformities exist to-day, hidden indeed, but all the more serious for their concealment.

These noble women who have organized the Congress of Mothers are striving to make ignorance impossible, and their weapons are organization and love.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that that is one of the clearest, ablest, and best speeches that has ever been made on the floor of the House, and yet I repeat that I am not the author of one single line of it. It is the product of twenty or thirty of the greatest and purest women in the United States—the product of their combined intelligence, judgment, experience, and wisdom.

Mr. LOVE. And of course that combined wisdom was shown in the selection of their agent. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINNEY (continuing). Certainly, my friend, I made a speech, Mr. Speaker, once before in my lifetime that was composed by a woman, before a court of justice, and won my cause; and I think it will be won here for the same reason. I trust that there will not be one single solitary vote cast against the consideration of the bill and its passage, especially when you remember that it comes from this source to which I have alluded. These eminent ladies do not vote, but they represent the best thought of the age, and we can not despise the thought of the great mothers of the Republic.

A MEMBER. Is the gentleman a widower? [Laughter.]

Mr. LINNEY. No such misfortune has overtaken me.

Mr. MOODY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question before disposing of this matter.

Mr. LINNEY. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY. I did not hear the reading of the bill in all of its details, but I take it that this is not a measure like the artificial hatching of chickens, for instance. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINNEY. Oh, no; nothing of the kind. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOODY. I understand it will go on the same way after the passage of the bill just as before. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINNEY. It does not change, by any means, the old processes. It is a bill giving artificial privileges—

A MEMBER. Who asked it?

Mr. LINNEY. Why, some thirty of the best and ablest women in the United States. It is a proposition by which men and women in the future of the world will be benefited. Chevy Chase, Md.; Bloomington, Ill.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Washington, D. C.; Falkland, N. C.; Lewiston, Ill.; Kansas City, Mo.; and many other great centers of intelligence are represented by their most talented ladies.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MAHON. I would like to ask the gentleman if this bill prohibits any woman from being a mother who does not belong to the corporation proposed to be created? [Laughter.]

Mr. LINNEY. Not at all. It rather assists them, especially where there is any home delinquency. [Renewed laughter.]

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being read the third time, it was passed, with the amendment recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The amendment to the title was adopted.

On motion of Mr. LINNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SEMINOLE INDIANS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate No. 3365, to ratify an agreement between the Dawes Commission and the Seminole Nation of Indians, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from all of its amendments.

The report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 5880. An act to vest in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the control of the street parking in said District; and

H. R. 10209. An act to repeal an act of Congress, approved March 2, 1893, entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10280) to require the Brightwood Railway Company to abandon its overhead trolley on Kenyon street between Seventh and Fourteenth streets, had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. GALLINGER, and Mr. FAULKNER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4694. An act to permit the State of Utah to select certain granted lands;

S. 3557. An act for the relief of Thomas Paul;

S. 4714. An act to protect the harbor defenses and fortifications constructed or used by the United States from malicious injury, and for other purposes;

S. 2388. An act for the relief of the Marion Trust Company, administrator of the estate of Samuel Milliken, deceased, of Indianapolis, Ind., for services rendered as mail contractor on route No. 9704, between Paducah, Ky., and Iuka, Miss., in the year 1861; and

S. 4200. An act for the relief of Huff Jones, for breach of contract with Indian agent.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to concurrent resolution No. 36, "to print the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies," disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LODGE, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 10606. An act to amend section 10 of an act approved April 22, 1898, entitled "An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes;" and

H. R. 1073. An act to provide for the construction of a bridge across Niagara River.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the enrolling clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to number consecutively the sections in the act (H. R. 6148) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 4694. An act to permit the State of Utah to select certain granted lands—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3557. An act for the relief of Thomas Paul—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 4714. An act to protect the harbor defenses and fortifications constructed or used by the United States from malicious injury, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2388. An act for the relief of the Marion Trust Company, administrator of the estate of Samuel Milliken, deceased, of Indianapolis, Ind., for services rendered as mail contractor on route No. 9704, between Paducah, Ky., and Iuka, Miss., in the year 1861—to the Committee on War Claims.

S. 4200. An act for the relief of Huff Jones for breach of contract with Indian agent—to the Committee on Claims.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. Speaker, in this morning's Post there is a special dispatch, dated Columbus, Ohio, June 21, in which it gives a speech supposed to have been made by an honorable member of this House, Mr. GROSVENOR, at the Republican State convention at Columbus, Ohio, yesterday. In that speech he refers to the conduct of the opposition to the Republican party in this House, and reflects very seriously, I think, upon the honor and dignity—

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that this raises no question of personal privilege.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman wait until I state it?

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman has stated enough now to disclose the fact that it does not raise a question of personal privilege.

Mr. SIMPSON. No; he has not.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us hear what he has to say.

Mr. SIMPSON. In this speech the gentleman says, in one part of it:

And if you will notice the passage of the fifty-million war-emergency bill in Congress, it marks the last echo of patriotism of nine out of every ten of those gentlemen—

Referring to the opposition to the Republican party in this House.

Mr. DALZELL. I renew my point, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SIMPSON (reading)—

They were willing to gain some sort of popularity before the people of the country by shouting about the suffering reconcentrados of Cuba—

The SPEAKER. One moment. The gentleman from Kansas will please suspend. The Chair does not see what this has to do with a question of personal privilege.

Mr. SIMPSON. If the Speaker will let me finish this paragraph I think he will change his mind in regard to that. It is the last words of this—

The SPEAKER. The action of the House of Representatives is the subject of comment outside quite often.

Mr. SIMPSON. I think if the Speaker will hear the last words of this paragraph he will change his mind in regard to that:

But when the money has been asked for for the suffering soldiers of the Union, nine out of ten of them have voted "no" on every appropriation bill.

Mr. DALZELL. That is true.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is untrue; false in every particular.

Mr. LENTZ. It is a lie.

Mr. SIMPSON. The opposition has voted for every appropriation bill in this House to carry on the war.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is scarcely a question of privilege to contradict every statement that is made about Congress which a gentleman thinks is not so. If it was, I am afraid we should not have time—

Mr. SIMPSON. But this is a reflection upon the conduct of a large number of the members of this House.

The SPEAKER (continuing). We should not have time for that careful consideration and deliberation which marks our course. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMPSON. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, I do not care what other members think about this, I think it is a grave reflection upon the honor of members who are accused of this action in the House, and I for one will raise my protest against it—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to make any proposition—

Mr. SIMPSON (continuing). And to say here and now that the man who made that statement, knowing, as he did, the facts, is lost to all sense of honor and truthfulness. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

SAMUEL D. HUBBARD.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin desires unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which he will present.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 774) for the relief of Samuel D. Hubbard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the record of the War Department in the case of Samuel D. Hubbard, late captain of Company F, Twenty-seventh Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, so as to grant him an honorable discharge.

The following amendment, offered by the Committee on Military Affairs, was read:

Add at the end of the bill:

"Provided, That no pay or allowances shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BARTLETT. I should like to ask the gentleman if this is one of those bills that have been considered at a Friday night session?

Mr. GRIFFIN. It could not be, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BARTLETT. There is a provision of the rules of this House that at the Friday night sessions all bills in reference to pensions and removing disabilities from military records shall be considered.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman's question, I desire to say that this is not one of the bills that come within the rule for Friday night proceedings. This is for the removal of the effect of a sentence of court-martial, and hence could not be considered on Friday evening.

Mr. BARTLETT. Let us hear the report before we consent to have it considered.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me to make a statement—

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly. I will take your statement about it.

The SPEAKER. Will the House please be in order? Because this is legislation by unanimous consent, which ought to have the attention of every member. Above all, the attention of those who want to notice what business is going on ought not to be interfered with. Gentlemen desiring conversation can retire to the cloakrooms or some other part of the building.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to relieve the person named of the effects of a court-martial. The relief is sought for upon two grounds: First, that upon the record of the proceedings reaching the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army, he held and advised in an opinion that the proceedings were illegal, and that the officer should never have been dismissed from the service; but the order of the court-martial had been executed before word could be returned to that effect and the proceedings and sentence of the court-martial arrested. Hence the officer went out of the service. That is the first ground. The second ground is, that no offense was proven to have been committed; and I submit it to any lawyer who will investigate the case and take his judgment and his conclusion, though he may be an entire stranger to this person. The circumstances are these—

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask you a question.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is this the same court-martial case that you had up two or three weeks ago?

Mr. GRIFFIN. No, sir; I have never had one up.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When was this court-martial had?

Mr. GRIFFIN. During the civil war.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, if Congress is constantly called upon to rectify the action of courts-martial, do you not think that some action had better be taken making courts-martial to be held in a fairer and more accurate and juster manner than they are?

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is a question of reform in the administration of justice in the Army.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know. Why do you not bring in that sort of a bill, making those fellows who hold the courts-martial perform their duty in a proper manner?

Mr. GRIFFIN. The responsibility is no greater upon me than any other member of the House, and sometimes mistakes are made.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You are a member of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that these mistakes which were made during the civil war with reference to court-martial proceedings have led to the correction of many errors and informalities and improper proceedings that occurred at that time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Another question. I do not want to do any injustice. What is the reason that this matter has not been called up in any of the thirty-five years that have elapsed?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Because this gentleman has not seen fit to submit his case to Congress.

Mr. SIMS. Is there some position that he seeks to get now?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Not at all.

Mr. SIMS. Why has he become sensitive of this stigma so late?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Because he is informed that Congress is engaged in relieving parties in cases of this kind. I want to say that no offense was committed in this case. This is an exceptional case.

Mr. BARTLETT. Was the sentence of the court-martial approved by the President at that time?

Mr. GRIFFIN. It was not. The trouble is that the proceedings were not approved by the proper officers at all. That is why the Judge-Advocate-General held that the court-martial proceedings were void.

Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentleman from Georgia that this case was carefully considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, and we thought it ought to be favorably reported.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have no objection, on that statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of my friend what was the offense for which this officer was court-martialed?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I was about to explain that. This officer was engaged in 1864 in the recruiting service. He reported with troops at the rendezvous of the State, at Madison, Wis., and remained there a number of days. Finally, one day, reporting to headquarters, he was asked by the adjutant if he would be ready to go to his command. He said all that he had to do was to settle with the disbursing officer and then he would be ready. At the same time he was informed that others were going. Now, then, this officer returned in the afternoon before the train was to leave to the adjutant's office, and then he learned for the first time that he was to be placed in command of 150 men and to take them to the front.

The adjutant said he thought he told him in the morning that he was to be placed in command. The officer said that he did not tell him so. And upon cross-examination, and it is in the proof, that while the adjutant said that he thought he had told him he would not state positively that he told this officer so in the morning. The captain certified that he never intimated to him until he called there the second time that he was to have anything to do with the 150 men and their taking to the front. These are the circumstances of the case.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is an alleged disobedience of orders.

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is it, and as he never received the orders, he could not disobey them.

Mr. SIMS. If the bill passes, will it result in his getting any financial benefit that he could not get without it?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Not at all; the proviso cuts that off.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed. On motion of Mr. GRIFFIN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PRINTING DECISIONS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the following joint resolution from the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print from the stereotype plates 300 copies each of volumes 2, 3, 4, and 5 and 150 copies each of volumes 1, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 11 of Decisions of the Department of the Interior Relating to Public Lands for the use of and for sale by the Department of the Interior, and 500 copies each of volumes 20 to 29, inclusive, and of the Digest of volumes 1 to 22, to be delivered to the Superintendent of Documents for distribution to depositories of public documents in the several States and Territories.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution which has just been reported to the House? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time; and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

THOMAS J. CHACE AND THOMAS J. CHACE, JR.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1895) for the relief of the heirs of Thomas J. Chace and Thomas J. Chace, jr., late of Monticello, Fla.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. HULL. I hope the gentleman will not do that until I can have taken from the desk a bill with Senate amendments and have them concurred in.

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

Mr. FLEMING. I now renew my motion, Mr. Speaker, for the present consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the heirs of Thomas J. Chace and Thomas J. Chace, jr., late of Monticello, Fla., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $132.10, in full for rent of buildings used for hospital and other purposes, situated in Monticello, Fla.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, there is a short report accompanying the bill, and I have here a letter dated October, 1866, from an officer of the Government, admitting the justice of the debt. It has hung along all this time. No interest is asked, and it has been passed by the Senate and has been reported on favorably by a committee of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. FLEMING, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BLANCHE T. HUNTON.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2785) for the relief of Blanche T. Hunton.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to sell the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section No. 23, township 24 north, of range 64 west, in Laramie County, State of Wyoming, to Blanche T. Hunton for the sum of $1.25 per acre.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply permits the beneficiary in the bill to buy this land at its appraised value. One dollar and twenty-five cents per acre is the value set upon it, and the bill is reported unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OSBORNE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HENRY P. RAWSON.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6127) for the relief of Henry C. Rawson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the military record of Henry C. Rawson, late of Company C, Sixth Regiment of Michigan Infantry, so as to show that he served as an enlisted man, and that he grant him an honorable discharge.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "late," in line 5, and substitute the following: "A first Lieutenant, Company B, Tenth United States Colored Heavy Artillery, by setting aside Special Order No. 278, Department of the Gulf, dated November 7, 1863, so far as it applies to him, and granting to said Henry C. Rawson, late first Lieutenant Company B, Tenth United States Colored Heavy Artillery, an honorable discharge as of date November 7, 1863: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAMILTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask leave of absence indefinitely for my colleague, Mr. BLAND. He has gone home on important business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. BLAND. Without objection, it will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of absence for two weeks, on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ALABAMA RIVER NEAR MONTGOMERY, ALA.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3871) to authorize the Montgomery-Elmore Bridge and Improvement Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River near the city of Montgomery, Ala.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BREWER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PURCHASE OF LAW BOOKS FOR WAR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, with the amendments of the Senate, the joint resolution (H. Res. 251) to limit section 3 of "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898 and 1899, and for other purposes."

The amendments were read.

Mr. HULL. I move that the House concur in the amendments. Mr. DOCKERY. I understand that the amendments limit the operation of this bill—

Mr. HULL. To the coming fiscal year.

The question being taken, the amendments were concurred in.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also lays before the House a concurrent resolution of the Senate, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the enrolling clerk of the House be, and is hereby, authorized to amend consecutively the sections in the act (H. R. 6148) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move concurrence in this resolution.

The resolution was concurred in.

CAPITAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10667) to change the name of Capital Railway Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Capital Railway Company is hereby authorized to change the name of said company to the Washington City Railway Company.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill add:

Provided, That such change of name shall not in any way affect the existing obligations of said railway company."

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply changes the name of the Capital Railway Company, the change being desirable on account of the confusion between the names of two companies—the Capital Railway and the Capital Traction Company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WASHINGTON, WOODSIDE AND FOREST GLEN RAILWAY.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 6432) relating to the Washington, Woodside and Forest Glen Railway and Power Company, of Montgomery County, Md.

The bill, with the amendments reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Washington, Woodside and Forest Glen Railway and Power Company, of Montgomery County, Md., a corporation created, organized, and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Maryland, shall have the right to run its vehicles over the tracks of the Brightwood Railway Company, and to use the power of that company for propelling its cars, or to furnish power to that company for that purpose, upon such terms and conditions as may be mutually agreed upon; and in case said companies are unable to agree in regard thereto either company may apply by petition to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and after reasonable notice thereof to the other party, said court shall, upon hearing and investigation being had, have full power to adjudicate and finally determine the terms and conditions upon which the joint use of said power and tracks shall be enjoyed; and the said companies are each hereby severally authorized to enter into any agreement with each other as may be necessary to insure a continuity of traffic over the tracks of said companies and under the management of either of said companies: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall operate to relieve the Brightwood Railway Company of any of its charter obligations, limitations, requirements, and restrictions, all of which shall remain in full force and effect, and shall be binding in all respects upon any company operating cars upon the route of said Brightwood Railway Company.

SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right to amend or repeal this act.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask unanimous consent to substitute for the bill just read Senate bill No. 2916 and that the House bill be laid on the table. The two bills are identical.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, Senate bill No. 2916 will be substituted for the bill now before the House.

There was no objection.

The Senate bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, House bill No. 6432 will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF ELEVENTH STREET NW.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10474) for the extension of Eleventh street NW.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to extend and open Eleventh street NW. on a straight extension of the lines thereof, as now established in the city of Washington, with a width of 90 feet, from Florida avenue to Princeton street, and thence with the same width and on deflected lines running parallel with the lines of Sherman avenue to Lydecker avenue, and to fix and establish the grades of the extension herein provided for within sixty days from the date of the approval of this act.

SEC. 2. That said Commissioners shall, within thirty days from the date on which the grades on the extension herein provided for have been fixed and established according to the requirements of this act, institute by petition a proceeding in rem in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, holding a district court of the United States for said District, for the condemnation of a permanent right of way for the public over all the land lying within the limits of the aforesaid extension not already owned by the United States or the District of Columbia, excepting also all lands that may be dedicated to the public use for the said highway and the extension thereof. And said proceeding shall be prosecuted under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 287 to 297, both inclusive, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the District of Columbia, concerning the condemnation of lands in said District for the public highways.

SEC. 3. That when a verdict shall have been rendered by the jury in any proceeding provided for by this act the said court shall thereupon enter its judgment condemning a right of way for the use of the public over the lands to which such proceedings relate and for the damages found by the jury to be due as compensation for the pieces or parcels of land to which such condemnation relates, and also such as may be found to be due for injuries caused by said extension or by the abandonment of any street or avenue. When said court shall have entered its judgment for the amount found due in respect of any parcel of land the use of which shall have been condemned, and there shall be no controversy as to the persons who are entitled to receive the same or as to the distribution of the amount adjudged to be due, said court shall decree such payment to be made, and upon presentation of a duly certified copy of such decree to the Treasurer of the United States he shall thereupon make payment thereof to the person or persons appearing by such decree to be entitled thereto in the manner hereinafter provided for; but when any such controversy shall arise, or when there shall be any doubt as to the proper disposition of the compensation awarded, the court shall order that the amount decreed by it to be due involved in such controversy or doubt shall be paid into the registry of the court; and upon the presentation of a copy of such order to the Treasurer of the United States he shall pay the amount there mentioned to the clerk of said court, and the claims of the respective parties thereto shall be thereupon heard and decided by the court as in interpleader suits in equity, under such general rules as may be prescribed by said court. Payment of the sum and sums of money so adjudged to be due and payable shall be made by the Treasurer of the United States, ex officio commissioner of the sinking fund of the District of Columbia, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 4. That whenever any final decree shall have been made by said court under the provisions of this act for the payment of the compensation and damages to the owners of the pieces or parcels of land condemned for public use in pursuance of this act or for the payment into the registry of the court of the sum or sums of money adjudged to be due as compensation and damages, and when and as soon as the sum or sums of money so adjudged to be due to the owners or payable into the registry of the court shall have been actually paid to such owners or into the registry of the court the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall be entitled to take immediate possession of the pieces and parcels of land payment for which shall have been made as herein provided, and the court shall enforce such right of possession by proper order and by process addressed to the marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia.

SEC. 5. That when the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have taken possession of the pieces or parcels of ground in respect of which judgment condemning a right of way shall have been entered under the provisions of this act it shall be their duty to cause the said Eleventh street NW., as extended under the provisions of this act, to be at once graded and the roadway thereof at once paved and proper sewers constructed, and the cost thereof shall be paid by the Treasurer of the United States, ex officio commissioner of the sinking fund of the District of Columbia, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, upon the warrant of the said Commissioners.

The amendments reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "Princeton" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Harvard."

Page 1, lines 8, 9, and 10, strike out the following words: "on deflected lines running parallel with the lines of Sherman avenue to Lydecker avenue" and insert in lieu thereof the following words: "in a straight line to Lydecker avenue, joining said avenue with its center line opposite the center line of Eslin avenue."

Page 3, line 24, after the word "Columbia" insert the following clause: "and a sufficient sum to pay such judgment and award is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of said District."

Mr. BABCOCK. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. PAYNE in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10474) for the extension of Eleventh street NW.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read, unless by unanimous consent the first reading be dispensed with.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading. The bill has just been read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, this bill is one of the most important that has been reported from our committee during this session. It makes a new departure; that is to say, under this bill Congress must indicate its future policy so far as the streets in the city of Washington are concerned.

In 1893 a law was passed known as the "highway act," providing for the extension of the city plan to the streets of the whole District. The difficulties attending the execution of that law have been so great that Congress has been called upon to repeal it. Since the passage of that law no single street or subdivision has been opened or settled according to the intention of the act when it was passed, and only yesterday Congress repealed the entire act.

Now, the question is as to the future policy of the Government for the District of Columbia, and that is a question we must consider now. What will Congress do with these irregular subdivisions; and what will we do in reference to opening up the avenues and streets of the city?

This bill provides, Mr. Chairman, for the opening of Eleventh street from Florida avenue, the terminus of the street at the present time, to a junction with Eslin avenue. Eleventh street is about equally distant between Seventh and Fourteenth streets; and no part of the city of Washington needs an opportunity to get below the boundary more than this particular portion of the city. On the entire line between Seventh and Fourteenth streets, and the entire section of the city north of that point, there is no practicable street to reach the portions of the city lying below the boundary.

It is estimated that the expense of the opening of this street will be in the neighborhood of $310,000 for something over three-fourths of a mile of street 90 feet in width. As it is now there are but very few, and no expensive improvements lying in the path of the proposed extension. Holmead Manor, a settlement at the terminus of the street, about Lydecker avenue, is a populous part of the city; but there is no means of reaching the city directly from that section of the District unless this street is opened.

I have not heard a single objection to the proposition involved here from any representative citizen of the District of Columbia. I think the Commissioners of the District, the board of trade, and all persons who are familiar with the city and its needs approve and demand the legislation here proposed.

This bill provides that the entire expense involved in the opening of the street shall be paid out of the revenue of the District of Columbia, and a sufficient amount is now on hand and in the Treasury to pay the entire cost. As I said before, the time has come when Congress must determine its policy with reference to these matters. For five years past the highway act has been in the courts and nothing has been done. All concede that this street must be opened, and the only question is whether it is not good policy to open it now before expensive improvements are made upon the line. The District has the money on hand now to do it with. Will you do it now or leave it for next year, or the year following, when it will cost twice as much and probably more than twice as much as now?

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I was in hopes that we would hear something in detail from the chairman of the committee, giving us reasons for the passage of this very extraordinary bill. The gentleman has indulged in some general statements, but has not given us the information that I think we are entitled to have.

I want to know, in the first place, who is asking for this legislation. I would like him to identify the citizens asking it, where the application comes from, and generally from what source it arises.

Mr. BABCOCK. If the gentleman will take time to read the report, he will secure very much information upon the subject.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is the very point. I have not had time to read the report. I have only reached the second page of it.

Mr. BABCOCK. If the gentleman will continue the reading, he can get very much information, I think, with reference to the inquiry he has made.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would like to ask the gentleman if the owners of property about Lydecker avenue are asking this legislation?

Mr. MUDD. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Missouri, with his consent—

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. MUDD (continuing). If it would not be as well at this time to call attention to one or two proposed amendments which I desire to offer to the bill, while he is looking up the report, and which will not interfere with the general purposes of the bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. Does the gentleman desire the floor at this time?

Mr. MUDD. No; not at all. I only wish to offer an amendment to the bill. I will not undertake to interfere with the time of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. But general debate must be closed before amendments can be offered.

Mr. MUDD. I understand that.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman can offer his amendment and have it read for information; but I do not want to give unanimous consent to close the general debate.

Mr. MUDD. I only wish general consent to offer the amendment now, and if possible to have it acted upon without interfering with the progress of the general debate.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will yield to the gentleman to offer the amendment and have it read for information.

Mr. MUDD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read for the information of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 10, page 1, after the word "avenue" and before the word "and," insert as follows: "also Pennsylvania avenue extended, on the east side of Anacostia River, to the District line;" and substitute the word "extensions" for "extension," wherever it appears in the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the Clerk please report that amendment again?

Mr. MUDD. The object of the amendment—

Mr. DOCKERY. I did not catch the wording of it. I ask the Clerk to report it again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MUDD. Now, if it can be done, I will ask action on that amendment, not to interfere with general debate.

Mr. DOCKERY. It could not be done without closing general debate, and I do not desire to do that.

Mr. MUDD. Then I ask unanimous consent that it be considered as pending.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, it is read for information.

Mr. BABCOCK. As I understand, the amendment was simply read for the information of the House.

Mr. MUDD. That is all.

Mr. BABCOCK. And is not pending.

The CHAIRMAN. No; it is not pending.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield time to the gentleman.

Mr. MUDD. The object of the amendment is very plain. In discussing the amendment, which I shall do very briefly, I do not care to make any observations upon the general policy of these street extensions, but if street extensions are to go on, I want them to go on in all portions of the city. At any rate, sir, I am opposed to the policy which has been pursued thus far, of liberal and luxurious development in the way of street improvements and otherwise in one section of the city and of neglect and utter disregard of the requirements and interests of another. We have, within the last three or four days, made large, not to say extravagant, appropriations for the construction of bridges in the northwestern portion of the city.

Scarcely a day passes in the House or Senate when District matters are under consideration that some measure of improvement is not proposed for the northwestern section of the city, while the eastern and southern sections, which contribute their proportion of taxes to the city, which are just as much entitled to the favorable consideration of Congress as any other portion of this city, receive nothing at all. Now, my position is just this: If we are to continue in these expensive extensions, which, I am frank to say, I think are in large measure reasonable and ought to go on, whenever there is a bill for this purpose here I intend to yoke onto it, if I can, a proposition to extend or improve some street where there is the most need of extension and improvement over here in the eastern section of the city.

Mr. KING. What street do you propose to yoke onto this one?

Mr. MUDD. Pennsylvania avenue extended, across the river. It is an inexpensive improvement. It may not appear to gentlemen here as a very important matter, but it is.

Mr. KING. Is it in the District?

Mr. MUDD. It is unquestionably in the District. I can not get an extension into Maryland. If I could I do not say that I should not be tempted to attempt it; but these street improvements can only be carried on in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. Knowing the loyalty of my friend to his constituents in his own State, I thought he might want an extension of the street into the State of Maryland.

Mr. MUDD. There is no sort of question about the matter of my loyalty and interest in my constituents.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. If the gentleman will allow me, how far is the present terminus of Pennsylvania avenue extended from the District line?

Mr. MUDD. I think 1 mile or a little over would bring it to the District line. It is a suburban improvement undertaken, if it shall be, not for a populous portion of the city; but to those who live in the rural sections across the Eastern Branch, a section that is building up considerably, it is of great importance.

If it were not building up, this street, which is but little more than a country road at the point of its present terminus and which under my amendment will still be but little more than a country road, is needed, in order that facilities may be offered to the people living in that portion of the District and in the contiguous portion of the State of Maryland to get into this city.

Now, gentlemen may say that the State of Maryland is not to be considered, but it is of mutual advantage to the people of this District and to the people of this rural section as well that they have roadways, so that the people of the District can get to Maryland and the people of Maryland can get into the District, where they have all their trade and business, contributing in that way to the trade and business of the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. I want to ask my friend if these people across the river for whom he is pleading have asked the District Committee during this session for an extension of Pennsylvania avenue, or have filed any petition or made any demand or request looking to that end?

Mr. MUDD. The necessity and justice of this proposition are so obvious that it ought not to require any petition to be brought before the body which constitutes the local legislature of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman answer the question?

Mr. MUDD. And furthermore, Mr. Chairman, the people in this section have been so long denied the benefit of any improvements at all that I think they have rather begun to despair of knocking at the doors of Congress, or of the committees having charge of their interests here.

Mr. KING. If the gentleman will pardon an interruption, it should be stated in all fairness that there has been no request made by those people, or their eloquent champion here, and so far as I remember neither they nor he have invited the attention of this House or of the District Committee to what he considers this obvious necessity.

Mr. MUDD. In response to the gentleman from Utah I will say that there has been no delegation of citizens from across the eastern side to this committee and no petitions. Neither have there been any that I am aware of in the case of the extension of Eleventh street.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, yes.

Mr. MUDD. I want to say very frankly, Mr. Chairman, that I do not mean to intimate that the Committee on the District of Columbia have been exercising their functions, certainly not intentionally, in such a way as to have neglected any portion of the city. But Congress has been very abstemious toward and very negligent of that portion of the city and district lying east and south of this Capitol.

Mr. KING. I agree with you in that statement.

Mr. MUDD. Then, if you agree with me, vote with me; and act upon your judgment, as I shall. If this would require a great expenditure of money, there would be some reason for opposing it, but I apprehend $5,000 or $10,000 will meet the expenditures of this short extension. As I have said, it requires but little amount of construction beyond that of a good county road, and good county roads are blessings that are largely unknown as leading from this section of the city to the rural sections in the directions I have indicated and the contiguous parts of the State of Maryland.

Gentlemen seem to think I am unduly exercised concerning the building of roadways that will lead to Maryland. Mr. Chairman, if Utah happened to lie immediately outside of the District of Columbia, I would concern myself just as much for good roads to it.

Mr. KING. If the gentleman knew the people and what a lovely State it is, he would want to go out there.

Mr. MUDD. I am sure I would feel great pleasure in going out there anyhow; but I do not expect the people of the District of Columbia to build a road for me to walk there. [Laughter.] It is not the fault or the misfortune of the State, but rather the good fortune of the District, that the State of Maryland happens to lie close to it. This District ought to be very grateful to that State, that ceded the territory that we stand upon to-day; and when we consider the history of the State in its connection with the District, and its liberality and generosity to the District that have been instanced in many ways that I might call attention to, there ought to be some feeling of mutuality and liberality in the appropriations needed to build the roads that are required by the District people, and needed also to bring the people of the adjoining portions of that State into the District, where all their business lies.

I am not here as any special apologist for or defender of the Eleventh street proposition. I take it for granted that, being a part of a plan for the general improvement of the city, it has its merits and ought to be favored; but with it I want to couple this proposition for the extension of Pennsylvania avenue, which will bear hardly any expense, and which, in my judgment, is the more needed and more meritorious measure of the two.

As I stated in the beginning, whenever propositions shall be pending here for large expenditures for improving the northwest I shall, if I can, tack on something for other sections of the city that have been so long and utterly neglected; and I believe that that is the only way I will have a chance to get them through. This is not an expensive improvement. I believe that $5,000 or $10,000 will cover the whole expense. I rather apprehend that the distinguished chairman of the committee will very cheerfully, if he can, accept this amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. Why, the amendment is obviously out of order—

Mr. MUDD. It is too late to make that point.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). In view of the policy that has been maintained—

Mr. MUDD. Why is it out of order?

Mr. DOCKERY. Because the policy seems to be to build up the northwest—

Mr. MUDD. I want to change that policy.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). At the expense of other parts of the city. I do not charge that it is the intentional policy, but that is the effect.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the gentleman say it is the policy of the District Committee?

Mr. DOCKERY. I say it is the effect—that most of their legislation has that object.

Mr. KING. I think if the gentleman would make that charge against the Committee on Appropriations of the House rather than come in and attack the Committee on the District of Columbia in matters of appropriations, there would be foundation for it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri that the District Committee has nothing to do with the improvement of streets, and that the improvements heretofore have all been in connection with the Appropriations Committee. The District Committee have nothing to do with improvements that have been made in the streets.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am glad to have such a disclaimer.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The gentleman must put down history correctly. I assert that the District Committee has never improved a street in all the years that I have been a member of the committee. Gentlemen around me know if there has been an exception of this kind. But if we have ever brought in a bill to improve a single street I do not recollect it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will correct my statement by saying that it has been the policy of "Congress," because I desire to acquit my good friends of the District Committee of the suspicion of a lack of impartiality.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Missouri will not deny the soft impeachment when I say if we take the estimate of Congress as made by the Committee on Appropriations, that committee is "the whole thing."

Mr. DOCKERY. I will answer that statement very fully, as soon as I shall have yielded five minutes to the gentleman from Utah, by a disclaimer.

I now yield to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I agree with many of the remarks made by my distinguished friend from Maryland [Mr. MUDD], and concur in some of the criticisms which he has made against Congress in its manner of dealing with certain portions of this city. I had occasion, a few days ago, to invite the attention of the House to what seemed to be a very unfair procedure. An appropriation was made of a very large sum for the construction of a bridge on Connecticut avenue as extended.

A further appropriation was made for the commencement of the construction of a bridge on Massachusetts avenue, and it was then charged by a number of gentlemen, and I repeated the charge, that there seemed to be an evident determination to build up one part of this city at the expense of other portions. It did seem to me, in looking at the large appropriations carried by the District appropriation bill, that one portion of this city was receiving undue consideration. I believe that the Anacostia Flats and various other sections in this city ought to have received more consideration at the hands of the Appropriations Committee than was accorded them.

Mr. LOVE. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the northwestern portion of the city is built up at the expense of the other portions?

Mr. KING. Yes; in the sense that there has been undue attention devoted to certain portions of the city when appropriations were made. But that is no sufficient argument against a just measure, such, I think, as the one now being considered is. I believe that highways ought to be extended in the direction indicated by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD], and, speaking for myself as a member of the committee, if attention had been invited at any time to this, as he says, "obvious necessity," it certainly would have given the committee, I believe, great pleasure to accede to his demand. I believe that so far as the committee is concerned there is a disposition to treat fairly the requests which are made by the inhabitants of the various sections of Washington, and if my friend will submit a bill for the extension of Pennsylvania avenue or any other avenue or street in those sections which seem to have been less favored in the past than others, I think it will receive the cordial and cheerful support of the committee.

I think my friend has voted harmoniously with the committee on the measures of the character under consideration.

Mr. MUDD. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Utah that all of these propositions in this bill were introduced and came late to the committee.

Mr. KING. Yes; I will say that I am not familiar with it and was not in the committee when it was considered.

Mr. MUDD. No; I think if the gentleman had been there he would have remembered that I stated that I would offer this amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I wish the chairman of the committee [Mr. BABCOCK] would give us the names of the citizens who are pressing this movement. I find on page 4 of the report there is a request from Leo Simmons, president of the Columbia Heights Citizens' Association. I suppose the gentleman had a large petition, signed by a number of real estate owners, asking this bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri that this is not a lot of real estate agents and speculators asking for this proposition. This is asked for by the people, and when he asks me to give the names I will tell him to take the city directory and take every name there is in it from that locality. They are the people that want this street opened.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the gentleman indicated at the outset that I would find the information in the report. I did not have the opportunity to read it then, but I have read it since, and I do not find the names. I do not know who constitutes this Columbia Heights Association.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will pardon me, the citizens' association referred to is a voluntary organization, and is made up of citizens who reside between Seventh street and Fourteenth street, and all north of the boundary within that section clear up to Holmead Manor, as I remember the line. It embraces that section of country, and this Mr. Leo Simmons is the president of it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the passage of this bill at this time, because, if for no other reason, it carries an indefinite appropriation. This is contrary to the policy of Congress, and contrary to business principles. It not only authorizes condemnation proceedings, but by the amendment carries an indefinite appropriation. I am against it, because it requires $310,000 to complete the extension, and when that is paid we will have absorbed almost every dollar of the surplus revenue belonging to the District of Columbia.

At this time there is about $1,000,000, in round numbers, of surplus in the District treasury, after allowing $300,000 for work upon the Lydecker tunnel. That work, which begins at once, requires $350,000 additional for the completion of that great improvement. Two hundred and thirty thousand dollars is required to pay for the land recently condemned to reach the bridge on Connecticut avenue extended, authorized by Congress a few days since on the District appropriation bill. So that when you appropriate $310,000 of the money of the District people to extend Eleventh street, you will have exhausted every dollar of their surplus revenue.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; but let me suggest to the gentleman that by the time this money is expended will not the surplus be built up by the revenue in the meantime?

Mr. DOCKERY. I think not, because our expenditures are increasing, and we have only been able to hold down appropriations by the exercise of the most resolute will on the part of the House conferees. Why, sir, the Senate put an increase of $1,500,000 on the District of Columbia bill in the form of amendments, and after struggling day after day the House conferees were only able to reduce that increase to about $750,000. Thus expenditures under the pressure of local interests are constantly increasing. And the District Committee comes in now with a proposition which practically wipes out every dollar of surplus belonging to the people of the District. Yet I am appealed to to vote for this because it is District money that is to be appropriated.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. BABCOCK. Is it not a fact that in this District there has been for years a surplus of revenue that has not been used or appropriated?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. BABCOCK. Is it not also a fact—I can state that it is a fact appearing upon examination by our committee—that a very large amount of property in the District that ought to be on the assessor's list escapes taxation?

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, undoubtedly that is true.

Mr. COWHERD. Because they say they do not need the money.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes; the statement is that they do not need the money. Now, when a necessity arises, there are millions of dollars' worth of personal property that could be put on the assessor's list.

Mr. DOCKERY. Do I understand the chairman of the District Committee to assert that there is a large amount of property escaping taxation because the District does not need the money? Is that the reason the officers are derelict in the collection—because they do not need any more money than they now have?

Mr. COWHERD. They say they do not need to raise any more because Congress will not appropriate as much as they do raise.

Mr. DOCKERY. But that should not be an excuse for the tax dodger. I hope no official of this District will offer any such excuse.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to correct a statement I made a moment ago, for I desire to be absolutely just to this committee. My remark may have implied—in fact, I am not sure that I did not make the direct statement—that the District Committee is responsible for the very extensive improvements in the northwest. I withdraw that statement. The District Committee is not responsible. Congress alone is responsible, and especially another body the rules forbid me to refer to in this connection.

Mr. KING. Of course the gentleman does not mean the Senate.

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, no; not at all. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment to extend Pennsylvania avenue on the other side of the Eastern Branch, I believe. I do not wonder that the amendment is offered, because that section secures very little of the public money. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] says that the Appropriations Committee is responsible for this unequal distribution. The gentleman is in error on that point. Congress appropriates for the streets of the city on the basis of the schedules submitted by the District Commissioners. The House Committee on Appropriations does not make the selection of the streets of the city for appropriations. Occasionally, when we get into the House, as was the case when we had the District bill up the last time, some able and popular gentleman, like the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, offers an independent proposition and over my protest carries it through the House.

Mr. BABCOCK. I know the gentleman wants to be absolutely correct.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. BABCOCK. And I know it is furthest from his intention to mislead any member of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I could not afford to do that.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, is it not true that in that debate it was shown that the committee had departed from the rule just stated by the gentleman and had made three appropriations for three different streets in violation of that rule?

Mr. DOCKERY. I recall the debate. It was shown that we had made a departure at two points. One was on the street east of the Interior Department and the other on the street east of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. BABCOCK. And the gentleman said he would never do it again.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope there will be no occasion for repeating such an appropriation, but the officials complained as to those two streets that the noise was so great that it absolutely interfered with public business. And then came my friend from Wisconsin and secured the adoption of an amendment, doubtless meritorious, that designated another street for improvement. But the District of Columbia Committee and the Appropriations Committee, under the rules followed for a long term of years, have avoided partiality by following the schedule of streets named by the District Commissioners.

Now, what has Congress done for this northwest? Fifty thousand dollars was appropriated for the Connecticut Avenue Bridge last year—for the purchase of certain land. Two hundred and thirty thousand dollars additional is now necessary to pay the awards, making $280,000. The bridge to be constructed there will cost not less than $300,000—making an expenditure of $480,000 at that point. Then, about 1 mile away, I believe it is, we have involved the District in a liability of $200,000 for another bridge to cross Rock Creek on the line of Massachusetts avenue extended.

There is an expenditure already authorized of $680,000 in that favored section alone. Now comes the District Committee of the House with a recommendation of $310,000 additional, to be expended for extending Eleventh street northward, making a total of $990,000 to be appropriated by the Federal Government out of the Federal Treasury in part and out of the District revenue in part, to be expended in improvements in the northwest section of the city. I do not wonder that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Mudd] offered an amendment to improve an avenue in the eastern part of the city.

Mr. Chairman, my answer, in response to the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] that this raises a new question, is, if we intend to inaugurate a system of public improvements by the extension of the streets beyond the boundary, in view of the repeal of the highway act, it ought to be inaugurated under such auspices as would enable us to deal fairly and justly with all sections of the city and to treat all precisely alike. This bill, in the light of the action of Congress heretofore, does not, it seems to me, deal fairly with the northeast, southeast, or the southwest portions of the city, because if the bill passes—and we have already incurred liabilities of about $680,000 for the northwestern part of the city—we will have imposed liabilities of nearly $1,000,000 for the improvement of the northwest quarter of the city.

Mr. Chairman, if we are to use the District revenues for the extension of streets and avenues, instead of improving one street or one avenue in one section of the city, I say that it should be divided and distributed equally, so that the taxpayers of the city will not have any just cause for complaint against Congress. We can not justify ourselves in making these appropriations exclusively for one particular portion of the city to the neglect of all the rest. I do not believe the policy is fair or just. I do not think it ought to be done, and hope it will not be continued. And for that reason I oppose this bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. BABCOCK. If this bill is passed and becomes a law, it will be a matter of two or three years before these awards can be made and the money expended; and before that time has elapsed the surplus of which the gentleman talks will be duplicated perhaps once or twice. It is not a question of the expenditure of money now. There is enough money in the Treasury belonging to the District to accomplish this work without injury to the District revenues; and during the time that the work will require for its completion there will be an ample increase of the surplus in the Treasury rather than a diminution.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does the gentleman know how long it has required to accumulate the surplus which is now in the Treasury?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, several years, of course.

Mr. DOCKERY. Several years? Yes; four or five years. It has been accumulating during all that time. And right now, in view of the growing demands of the District, I can tell the gentleman that the surplus will soon be dissipated.

Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to give consideration to the importance of an increased water supply for the District. Congress has authorized the completion of the Lydecker tunnel, and has already appropriated $300,000 of the surplus in the Treasury for that purpose, and it will require an additional $350,000 to complete that work. But when we enter upon the extension of the highways, the extension of the streets and avenues of the city, we can not tell where the demands upon the Treasury are to end.

This bill asks for at least $310,000, but it is the merest guess as to the cost of the work, let me say to the gentleman, especially in view of the fact that you have taken down all of the safeguards which have heretofore been established and opened the Treasury to an indefinite appropriation of money.

Let me suggest to my good friend from Wisconsin that if he wants to protect the public—and he is practically mayor of the city—there is a way of doing it. You not only authorize condemnation proceedings, but you make the appropriation to pay the awards—

Mr. BABCOCK. We are perfectly willing that the gentleman shall make any suitable amendment in that respect if he thinks it is necessary.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). You make provision not only for condemnation proceedings, but you provide for the payment at once, because your amendment declares that a "sufficient sum to pay such judgment and award is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of said District."

Now, such a privilege as that ought not to be accorded at this time. It has not been the policy of Congress in respect to such matters, and there is no necessity for such legislation now. We ought not to pass a bill which not only condemns the land but makes an indefinite appropriation for the amount of the awards.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that the committee would have no objection to having the amount named, $310,000, specified in the bill—a sum not to exceed that amount. But I want to say further, in answer to that, that the estimate made by the Commissioners is based upon the selling prices of the land, taking it as a whole. Now, two of the largest landowners have made a proposition to donate their lands, but that has not been figured upon by the committee at all; and another thing that will reduce the amount is the fact that any benefits assessed there will be deducted from the damages awarded. So, instead of the amount being greater, it will be less.

Mr. DOCKERY. But you do not allow for court expenses.

Mr. BABCOCK. As to the amount of the appropriation, let me say this has to go before an intelligent jury, and I do not see how any of this money can be improperly diverted from the purpose for which it is intended. Now, another thing, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman in all his talk has failed to suggest one single method or remedy to cure this evil. What are you going to do with the 23,000 people who live up there? Are you going to give them an avenue and connection with the city or not? If it is going to be done, now is the time to do it, and now is the time for Congress to say whether this policy shall be carried out or not. It can be done now, the Commissioners say, for about $300,000. Undoubtedly in a year from now it will cost 25 per cent more, and in five years from now it will cost a million dollars to open this street through that territory.

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, Mr. Chairman, that sort of conjecture, I suggest to my friend from Wisconsin, hardly rests upon any substantial foundation.

Mr. BABCOCK. This is in a growing part of the city.

Mr. DOCKERY. The same sort of a plea has been made in behalf of every street that has been urged for appropriation. The highway act was passed under the same sort of a plea, and we were besought to appropriate $242,000 for Sixteenth street, to pay the awards under that act, because, forsooth, the land might increase in value. Of course the land is going to increase in value under this bill, because you open the door wide. Congress invites them to come in and take out the surplus of the District revenues.

It makes no difference to me whether this money comes out of the District or out of the people of the United States. I am against it. I think we owe something to the people of this District. I might have no special reason to champion the cause of the people of the District if I was governed by personal considerations, but as we are by law constituted the board of aldermen of the District, we should guard the money of the people of the District with as jealous care as we would guard our own money or the money of your people or my people.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman suggest a remedy or a cure? What would you do about it?

Mr. DOCKERY. I will tell you what I would do about it. I would distribute the revenues of the District equally, as nearly as might be practicable, among the different sections of the city. That is the contemplation of the law. The District Commissioners submit their estimates every year for the northeast section, the southeast, the southwest, and the northwest, and Congress appropriates according to those schedules. There are four great sections of this city, but this bill seems to ignore three of those great sections. I do not say it is done intentionally.

Mr. BABCOCK. We must take one street at a time. The highway act covered the whole District, but that has been repealed.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does the gentleman say to the House that this is the only street even in the northwest that would be benefited by extension and improvement?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no.

Mr. DOCKERY. Why, certainly not. Extensions can be made here, there, and everywhere in the District.

Mr. BABCOCK. But the gentleman must remember that the highway act covered the whole District, and that Congress has seen fit to repeal it. Now, will you attempt to go to work and take up all these streets in one measure and at one time, or will you take up those that are most pressing and most needed to accommodate the people of the city? This is a great section. There has been no money expended in this section at all. It happens to lie in what you call the northwest, but it is between Seventh and Fourteenth streets, near Mount Pleasant, Columbia Heights. There has been no money expended there. The question of sectionalism has not been raised. I do not know of a resident of the District of Columbia who has opposed this measure. There has been no opposition to it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suppose they have been in the same situation as myself; they have no knowledge of this proposition.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, this has been advocated through the papers and otherwise.

Mr. DOCKERY. I had to read the report after the bill was presented in order to obtain information. I do not, however, intend to reflect on anyone, but I have no doubt that of the 270,000 people in this District, very few know of this bill.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. A synopsis of the bill was published in the papers.

Mr. BABCOCK. And editorials have been written upon it.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. And the chairman of the committee will testify that very few bills have been urged by more people than this one.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to say that I am earnestly opposed to this bill, and so far as I can intend to resist the passage of it, if you persist in urging this indefinite appropriation. I do not propose to have this indefinite appropriation made with my consent under the rules of the House. If the House desires to go ahead and authorize the condemnation proceedings, and will withhold the appropriation and let Congress deal with that question in the future, so as to right any wrongs that are possible under the jury system, I will content myself with a negative vote against it; but I am not willing to open the treasury of the people of this District to an indefinite appropriation, so that we shall have no power to review the condemnation proceedings.

I want the power to review the awards of the jury and the decisions of the courts. I desire to know whether the gentleman intends to insist upon the indefinite appropriation. It is against the policy that has been pursued by Congress. The indefinite appropriations amount now to $117,836,000. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], who have had long service on the Appropriations Committee, will admit that great abuses frequently occur by reason of these indefinite appropriations. There is nothing more salutary, nothing so restraining upon public officials, as annual supervision and overhauling of the appropriations.

Aside from interest on the public debt and certain expenses necessary for collection of customs, and perhaps a few other matters that I do not now call to mind, all our appropriations should be annually revised by Congress. This has been our policy in recent years. We should make definite appropriations. I desire the power on the part of Congress, if there is an improper award made, to withhold the money and review the findings.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will it be satisfactory to the gentleman to limit it to $310,000?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not desire any appropriation made.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will it be satisfactory to the gentleman to strike out these words:

And a sufficient sum to pay such judgment and award is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of said District.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will say to the gentleman, if he does that, I will content myself simply with voting against the bill on the ground that I think there ought to be a more equal distribution.

Mr. BABCOCK. Those are the words on page 4.

Mr. DOCKERY. I shall not invoke any power of the rules, except simply to vote against the bill, because I think there ought to be a more equitable distribution of the money of the people. I have the highest personal regard for the gentleman from Wisconsin and every gentleman of the District Committee; but this bill overturns the settled policy of Congress, and involving as it does so large an amount, with no quorum present, I desire to say that I can not consent to the passage of the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. If the committee withdraws the committee amendment, withdraws the appropriation, will the gentleman consent then to a motion that the committee rise and report the bill, without any dilatory motion?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly; but I desire the gentleman, if he does that, to deal fairly with us.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, certainly.

Mr. DOCKERY. All that I contend for, and all I want, is that Congress should revise the awards and then make the appropriation. I ask the gentleman to stand in line of the proposed action as against any amendment offered elsewhere.

Mr. BABCOCK. No action will be taken on this bill that is not in harmony with the sentiment of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I refer to any amendment that may be offered elsewhere.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman is aware that on a certain conference report I voted against my own judgment so as to carry out the wish of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman is entitled to very great credit for the position he has taken in those matters.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Chairman, with the understanding that these words shall be stricken out—and a sufficient sum to pay such judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of said District—as I withdraw that committee amendment, I move the committee do rise.

Mr. MUDD. There are some other amendments; and my amendment, I want to act on that.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, then I desire to withdraw that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, general debate will be considered as closed.

Mr. MUDD. I have no objection to that.

There was no objection.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move the adoption of the first committee amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "Princeton" and insert the word "Harvard."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next amendment.

In lines 7, 8, 9, and 10 strike out the words "on deflected lines running parallel with the lines of Sherman avenue to Lydecker avenue," and insert "in a straight line to Lydecker avenue, adjoining said avenue with its center line opposite the center line of Eslin avenue."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MUDD. Now, Mr. Chairman, on the amendment offered by myself, I desire to make this statement.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not pending.

Mr. DOCKERY. Offer it.

Mr. MUDD. I offer it again.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 12, page 1, after the word "avenues" and before the word "and," insert as follows: "Also Pennsylvania avenue extended on the east side of Anacostia River to the District line," and substitute the word "extensions" for "extension" wherever it appears in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that that should come in, if it is to be offered, after the committee amendment. It comes in on line 12 instead of line 10.

Mr. MUDD. I have the original bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill before the committee is the bill reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the amendment would come in at line 12.

Mr. BABCOCK. I wish to submit a point of order against that amendment. It is an entirely different subject. There is no reference to Pennsylvania avenue, no extension of Pennsylvania avenue. It has not been considered by the committee, and we have had no opportunity to investigate it; and while I dislike very much to make this point of order, I feel compelled to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MUDD. Can I be heard on that?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MUDD. In the first place, I understood the amendment was pending.

The CHAIRMAN. It was distinctly stated that it was read in the time of the gentleman for the information of the committee.

Mr. MUDD. Well, Mr. Chairman, it is a singular thing that I should be allowed to get up here and proceed some five or ten minutes in debating that amendment if it was not before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman understands that that was during the general debate.

Mr. MUDD. Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the point of order, if the Chair has decided it, of course it is unnecessary for me to argue it; but I can not see why an amendment adding one street can not be put onto a bill which has for its sole subject-matter the question of street extension in this District. It might as well be said that if every street but one were embraced in the bill the other remaining street in the District could not be added to it. There is just as much propriety in holding that, in my judgment, as to hold that my amendment is not germane. But, Mr. Chairman, using a homely phraseology, it is useless, I suppose, to kick against a brick wall, and it is unnecessary for me to argue further a question that the Chair has already decided. But I may be pardoned for saying that it seems to me a narrow construction to hold that a bill which has for its object street extensions can not have one other street included within its provisions.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MUDD. The bill has to be read through yet for amendment section by section.

Mr. KING. I think unanimous consent was given for dispensing with the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee: You did not change the provision that made this improvement and condemnation payable from the District revenue alone?

Mr. BABCOCK. The committee withdrew that provision.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman from Maryland make the point that the bill must be read through by sections?

Mr. MUDD. If I can ask one question, perhaps that may be dispensed with. I understand the chairman of the committee has stricken out the provision on page 3 as to the appropriation.

Mr. BABCOCK. No; we have withdrawn the committee amendment on page 4 which reads, "and a sufficient sum to pay such judgment and award is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of said District." That is stricken out on account of the objection made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], who said it was indefinite, and at his suggestion it was withdrawn.

Mr. MUDD. The same thing is on page 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin understands that withdrawal requires the consent of the committee.

Mr. BABCOCK. I asked unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MUDD. On page 5 it is said: "And the cost thereof shall be paid by the Treasurer of the United States, ex officio commissioner of the sinking fund of the District of Columbia, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, upon the warrant of said commissioner."

Mr. BABCOCK. That is simply a regulation. That which we have stricken out is the appropriating clause, and this on page 5 has nothing to do with it.

Mr. DOCKERY. It still leaves the liability on the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. There is no proposition to make any charge against the Government of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask this question: If you strike out the appropriation and provide for condemnation proceedings, can you condemn unless you have got the money to pay for the land?

Mr. DOCKERY. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. I think it would be better to appropriate the sum of $1,000, which will be quite sufficient for that purpose. I think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. KING. I think, as a legal proposition, the condemnation proceedings or preliminary steps for the "taking" would not be affected, but the title would not pass until the payment was made for the land.

Mr. CANNON. I am very clear upon that point.

Mr. KING. But I think the proceedings for condemnation can be initiated and carried to a successful termination so far as the judicial tribunals are concerned, but no title will pass and no person will be deprived of the possession of his property until compensation has been made.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if the gentleman strikes out the appropriation, I submit whether it is not well enough to provide that when damages are ascertained they should be reported to Congress and shall be paid, subject to the discretion of Congress, out of the District revenues?

Mr. BABCOCK. That is fully provided for in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose it is the sense of Congress not to appropriate, then this matter is never consummated. I think that is the legal effect, but the only question is whether you had better by this provision seem to recognize that fact.

Mr. KING. That the proceedings may not amount to a taking?

Mr. CANNON. No. When you provide for condemnation and the ascertainment of the damages, when paid, if at all, should be paid from the District revenues, it should further provide that it should be reported to Congress for appropriation; and if not appropriated for in six months after the beginning of the session of Congress, then the whole matter should be null and void. I am only making this suggestion, otherwise it seems to me, if it was not the sense of Congress to appropriate for it, it might be hung up between heaven and earth like Mohammed's coffin for several years to come. But I am suggesting to the gentleman whether it would not probably be wise to do so.

Mr. KING. I think it would be fair to amend the bill if it is not sufficiently definite on that point, so that, the people against whom proceedings may be initiated may know that ultimately there will be an appropriation sufficient to compensate them for any property which may be condemned.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MAXWELL] asks me to read the provision of the bill in reference to making compensation. It is as follows:

Payment of the sum or sums of money so adjudged to be due and payable shall be made by the Treasurer of the United States, ex officio commissioner of the sinking fund of the District of Columbia, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

There is a provision in the bill which relegates the question of the ascertainment of damages to an appropriate judicial tribunal, and another providing for the return of the assessment of damages.

The only question that the gentleman from Illinois raises, as I understand, is this: This bill seems to contemplate a "taking" without making an appropriation, and the question suggested by him is whether, constitutionally, we can initiate proceedings looking to the taking of private property without simultaneously making adequate appropriation to pay the persons whose property may be taken.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman's position is that you can go on and assess damages and provide by law that they shall be reported to Congress for action on its part.

Mr. KING. I think so; that is my judgment.

Mr. CANNON. Now, the only question is whether in terms you had better make your bill that way or leave it as a legal inference from the bill as it now is.

Mr. KING. The only persons who could complain here would be, of course, the property holders against whom we are proceeding. I understand they are satisfied with this bill; they trust to the magnanimity and fairness of Congress, after having commenced proceedings for the condemnation of their property, to make an appropriation to cover whatever an impartial tribunal may determine to be a just compensation.

Mr. CANNON. But suppose the damages should be assessed at $1,000,000. In your report you estimate that the property in question is worth about $300,000.

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Now, suppose these juries should assess it at $1,000,000, even after they had taken into consideration the advantage of the improvement to adjacent property, which, I believe, is to be taken into consideration.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. It is perfectly evident that Congress, unless the question should come up before a Congress different from the present, would not appropriate any such amount.

Mr. KING. I think that is true; and yet—

Mr. CANNON. What I want to suggest to the gentleman is whether he had not better amend the bill, not so as to make an appropriation, but to provide that when the report has been made to Congress then, unless an appropriation to pay the amount of the awards out of the District revenues should be made within six months, say, after the awards are reported to Congress, the whole thing shall drop. Otherwise you are liable to have the matter tied up indefinitely. I am merely suggesting to the gentleman whether that would not be wise.

Mr. KING. In the first place, I think the assumption that perhaps a million dollars might be allowed, when the estimate is $300,000, is not warranted. But assuming that such an award might be made, I can not think any court would permit an award of that character, so unsupported by the evidence which would be adduced, to stand. The verdict would unquestionably be set aside.

But assuming that a very unfair and disproportionate judgment or award should be rendered, it is to be reported to Congress. The ultimate determination of the question whether it shall be paid rests with Congress; and if Congress does not feel like paying the amount which the jury may award, then I assume that all the proceedings initiated under this act would be a nullity and the property would not be transferred from the property holders to the Government for the purposes contemplated by this act, or at all.

Mr. CANNON. But my point was this: Suppose, in the event that this bill passes, the report should be made on the 25th of next November. Congress meets in December. A short session passes by. Nothing is done affirmatively or negatively. Does the whole proceeding fall? No. Suppose when Congress meets again nine months afterwards nothing is done affirmatively or negatively, does the whole matter fall? No. Now, what I am suggesting is that the gentleman so amend his bill that if within six months after the report of the damages is made to Congress an appropriation is not made the whole matter be annulled. Otherwise you may for five or ten years continue this doubt and uncertainty.

Mr. KING. There would be a good deal of force in what the gentleman says were it not for the fact that the report will be made to Congress when we meet in December; and then we can determine what shall be done with respect to that award. This merely postpones action until Congress shall meet. In other words, instead of incorporating in this bill such a provision as my friend from Illinois suggests, Congress can deal with the question de novo, so to speak, when the matter is presented upon the transmission of the awards.

Mr. CANNON. But suppose Congress takes no action.

Mr. KING. It would be a very grave wrong to property holders if a cloud should be put upon their titles by a judicial determination not amounting to a taking of the property. If proceedings for condemnation are had under this bill, then Congress should appropriate to recompense the property holders.

Mr. CANNON. The reason I make the suggestion is that on the highway act, when under discussion in the House in last March, we had a very obstinate contest in this body about an appropriation of $250,000 under the act to pay for property condemned under that law. Well, after the fight, after a long discussion, the appropriation was not made. And yet it could have been made at any time within six months after the first Monday of last December, but if not made within that time under the terms of the law it became void.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that the time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I thought I was talking in the time of the Chair, and hardly believed the Chair would make a point on himself. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Wisconsin asks that the amendment on page 4 be disagreed to?

Mr. BABCOCK. If the Chair will kindly withhold the question for a moment, I desire to offer a substitute which is now being prepared, and will be here in a short time.

I yield to the gentleman from Kansas who, I understand, desires to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is still proceeding under the five-minute rule, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kansas in his own right, if he so desires.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to ask a question of the gentleman in charge of the bill. I perceive that the bill makes provision for condemnation proceedings—

Mr. BABCOCK. It does.

Mr. RIDGELY. What provision does it make for the payments in such cases?

Mr. BABCOCK. That is the very point with reference to which the amendment is now being drawn and which I shall offer in a few moments.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer, if it be in order at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk and the Clerk will report it.

Mr. MUDD. I send to the desk the following amendment, and ask its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "out of the revenues of the District of Columbia;" and add after the word "Columbia," in line 7 of the same page, the words "one half out of any money that may be in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. MUDD. I understand from the chairman of the committee, if I can have his attention for a moment—

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. MUDD. The concluding language of section 5 of the bill provides that the grading and expenses of sewerage and other necessary charges for the work which is contemplated by the bill after the condemnation proceedings are determined shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is the effect of the bill.

Mr. MUDD. Now, my amendment requires that these expenditures shall come one-half from the revenues of the District and one-half from the National Treasury.

Mr. Chairman, the object of the amendment is manifest, and will be understood by every member of the House, and I do not intend to discuss it at any great length. I do not believe it necessary.

The organic act of 1878, which has often been referred to in the course of discussion on the District of Columbia bills as "the constitution" of the District of Columbia, makes provision that one-half of the expenses of the District shall be paid from local taxation and one-half from the Treasury of the United States.

It is proposed, so far as the purposes of the pending bill are concerned, to repeal, or at any rate to violate, the provisions of that organic act. I for one am not in favor of any such proposition. I do not propose to disregard what I conceive a valid and subsisting obligation and compact on the part of Congress toward the people of the District after the passage of that act. I do not believe that this city should pay all of the expenses of its local government—the expenses necessary for the repair and construction of streets and avenues—out of its own revenues. I do not believe the District of Columbia is able to do it, in the first place. In the second place, there are further and higher considerations which should prevail in determining the matter.

It is well understood, sir, that there is no other city in the United States whose streets are constructed and maintained on such a scale as those of the city of Washington at the present time. I understand from the report of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK]—one of the ablest reports I have ever had the pleasure to read—a report made in the Fifty-fourth Congress, that about one-half of the territory of the original limits of the city, or what constitutes at this time the city limits, is embraced in the streets, avenues, and alleys. There is nothing approaching to that condition in any other city in the world.

I find also—and rely on the information that the gentleman has given in that regard—that there is more than one-half of the whole territory and property located and controlled in the District of Columbia which is owned by the National Government. Now, if we are to make the District pay all of the expenses of the local government, including such objects as the opening and extension of streets, which are rendered necessary by the growth of the city, then the national property in the District ought to be subject to its share of taxation.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MUDD. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does not the gentleman know that there is no city in the United States where the taxes are so low as they are in this city? In other words, is it not true that every other city pays heavier taxes than are borne by the people and property of the District of Columbia?

Mr. MUDD. That may be, Mr. Speaker. I do not know as to all the other cities in the United States, but I do know this, that no other city in the United States at all approximating this in size pays anything like the rate of taxation that will be put upon this city if we make a general departure from the organic act, because the rate will then be $3 upon the hundred, which is greater than the rates paid in most of the cities in the United States.

Mr. KING. If the gentleman will champion the proposition to change the form of government in this District, I think he will find many sympathizing auditors upon this side of the Chamber.

Mr. MUDD. Well, I am not so sure about that. It would seem that that sympathy has been late to arise and lacking so far on the part of the gentleman from Utah, if I mistake not, when the matter of giving the District a local government was before the committee.

Mr. KING. If the gentleman will pardon me, there were but two of us in that committee who voted to give them an opportunity to vote upon that question, and my friend from Maryland, if I remember, voted against the proposition.

Mr. MUDD. I accept the gentleman's statement as to himself, but I think he will find that he is in error as to my position. My recollection is that I voted in favor of it.

Mr. KING. I think if the gentleman will read the record, he will find that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] and myself were the only gentlemen who favored that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MUDD. I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. MUDD. The proposition suggested by the gentleman from Utah is not now before the House.

Mr. KING. But the gentleman injected it improperly into this discussion.

Mr. MUDD. I did not make any statement or any argument whatever as to the expediency of changing the form of government of this District. I rather think that if the proposition were pending before this House to give a local government to the District of Columbia, to restore the right of suffrage and the exercise of it, I should vote for it, because I believe in the exercise of the right of suffrage by all people who are entitled to it under the general principles of the laws and Constitution of this country; but that is not now before this House.

The question is simply this: Having abolished the form of government under which the franchise was exercised; having taken from the people of the District all participation in the government of their own affairs; having, when we did that, entered into a compact with them, which will be found in what is called the organic act of 1878, a compact solemnly made by Congress; having taken into our own hands the sole and exclusive government of the District, and having agreed that the National Government should from that time onward pay one-half of the expenses of this District, I am not in favor of the repudiation of that pledge made by the Congress of the United States.

If you can do it in this little matter, you can do it in greater matters. If this is done with reference to the extension of Eleventh street, the time will be short before it will be done with reference to more extensions. The principle is the same. If Eleventh street should be opened at the entire expense of the people of the District of Columbia, then Twelfth and Thirteenth streets should be so opened and Pennsylvania avenue extended, and all the other streets should be so opened.

If you are going to make the people of this city pay the expense of maintaining a capital of such a kind as to measure up to the requirements and comport with the dignity of a great Federal city, then in common justice and in common decency you ought to impose the ordinary tax for municipal purposes upon the property which the Government has in this District—property representing more than one-half in money value of all the property within the limits of this District. When that shall have been done, as it ought to be done if we are going to enter upon this kind of a policy, the amount received from that taxation will much more than compensate for the amount that the National Government is now contributing to the expenses of the municipality.

I know it is an easy thing and sometimes a popular thing for members of Congress from remote sections to vent their theories of economy upon this District, which is at the mercy of Congress. The people have no vote here. They have, in the full and objectionable sense of the term, taxation without representation. It is an easy thing for a gentleman representing a constituency 2,000 miles away to trample upon the rights and cramp and dwarf the growth and development of this city, but it is not altogether a proper sort of spirit to manifest toward the people of this our great national capital.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Will the gentleman permit a question there?

Mr. MUDD. Certainly.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Why is it that the people of Washington are denied the right to vote and to control the administration of their local affairs?

Mr. MUDD. Well, if the gentleman can look into and fathom the mysteries of the motives that animate Congress in that and other matters of legislation, he will be able to answer the question for himself. I do not undertake to do it.

Mr. MAGUIRE. If my party had taken such action with respect to any part of this country, or any great part of the people of this country, I should try to find out the motive within the party; but the action and the motive for it were on the other side of the House.

Mr. MUDD. I would assume from the gentleman's remarks that he meant to convey the impression that his party was not to much extent represented when the organic law of 1878 was passed. It was represented by gentlemen of great ability in the other branch of Congress—by gentlemen who voted for this change in form of government. I do not know just how largely it was represented here. I hope your party, if you want to do the proper thing now, will vote for this amendment. I am informed that your party had a majority of this House at the time of the passage of the act of 1878, known as the organic act.

The question was taken on the amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the committee amendment on page 4 of the bill, printed in italics, and in lieu thereof insert the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 4, after the word "Columbia," insert: "And the sum of $1,000 is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of said District to apply as so much payment upon the condemnation proceedings under this act."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation. The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DALZELL having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10474, and had directed him to report the same back with amendments, and that as amended the bill do pass.

The question was taken; and the amendments were severally agreed to.

The question was taken on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed for a third reading, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MUDD. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that there were 34 in the affirmative.

Mr. MUDD. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask the gentleman not to raise that point. The SPEAKER pro tempore. One in the negative. On this question, the ayes are 34 and the noes 1.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage.

Mr. MUDD. No quorum, Mr. Speaker. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. SIMPSON. It is too late, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that no count has yet been taken on this question.

Mr. MUDD. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 41.

Mr. MUDD. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The ayes will be seated and the noes will rise. On this question the ayes are 41, noes 2; and the gentleman from Maryland makes the point of no quorum. [After a count.] Evidently there is not a quorum present. Under the rules, the yeas and nays will be considered as ordered, the doors will be closed, and members as they come in will have an opportunity to vote.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, at the urgent request of gentlemen around me, who state that they have matters of importance that may be jeopardized, I am willing to withdraw the point of no quorum if that can now be done.

Mr. BABCOCK. I understand the gentleman withdraws the point of no quorum.

Mr. PAYNE. There can not be a withdrawal of the point when an announcement has been made by the Chair that there is not a quorum.

Mr. RIDGELY. I move that the House adjourn, Mr. Speaker. The question was taken; and the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll, and gentlemen, as they enter, can answer on the roll call. The doors will be closed.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 85, nays 37, answered "present" 27, not voting 206; as follows:

Mr. MOODY. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that I have a letter from Mr. GILLET, and he said that he did not expect to hold the gentleman from Arkansas to his pair.

Mr. STRAIT. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. BAKER. I voted "no," and I wish to withdraw that vote.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). Before putting that motion the Chair will have the Clerk read a part of the rule under which the House is now proceeding.

The Clerk read as follows:

And any time after the roll call has been completed the Speaker may entertain a motion to adjourn, if seconded by a majority of those present, to be ascertained by actual count by the Speaker; and if the House adjourns, all proceedings under this section shall be vacated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the House do now adjourn. As many as are in favor of seconding the motion will rise. Evidently a majority of those present rising.

The motion to adjourn was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 23, 1898.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. BURROWS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 17th instant, a list of all claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted, etc., amounting to $58,288.12; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3596) to ratify the agreement between the Dawes Commission and the Seminole Nation of Indians.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

- A bill (H. R. 774) for the relief of Samuel D. Hubbard;
- A bill (H. R. 6127) for the relief of Henry C. Rawson;
- A bill (H. R. 10341) to incorporate the National Congress of Mothers in the District of Columbia; and
- A bill (H. R. 10667) to change name of the Capital Railway Company.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

- A bill (S. 1726) concerning attorneys and marshals of the United States;
- A bill (S. 2678) for the relief of Lizzie Hagney, administratrix of the estate of Frank B. Smith, deceased;
- A bill (S. 4738) to authorize the Kansas, Oklahoma and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through Chillico Indian Reservation, Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes;
- A bill (S. 4750) granting right of way through the Pikes Peak Timber Land Reserve and the public lands to the Cripple Creek District Railway Company;
- A bill (S. 4759) to authorize the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company to straighten and restore the channel of the South Canadian River, in the Indian Territory, at the crossing of said railroad;
- A bill (H. R. 8541) to define the rights of purchasers of the Belt Railway, and for other purposes;
- A bill (H. R. 10290) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a court of Private Land Claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, and the act amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1893; and
- A joint resolution (S. R. 168) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to refund and return to the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company $15,395.75, in accordance with the decision of the Secretary of the Interior, dated March 3, 1898.

PETITIONS.

Mr. WILSON presented sundry petitions of citizens of the State of Washington, praying for the suspension of the law requiring assessment work on mining claims; which were referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

- A bill (H. R. 2276) granting an increase of pension to Almon Stuart;
- A bill (H. R. 6799) granting an increase of pension to Warren W. Morgan;

Mr. ROACH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3164) granting a pension to Alden B. Thompson, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7989) granting an increase of pension to Annie J. Bassett, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 95) to amend the laws relating to American seamen, for the protection of such seamen, and to promote commerce. I will state that this is a measure which has excited considerable attention, referring to the shipping business of the United States. It contains many provisions of interest to those engaged in the shipping business, and at the earliest possible moment the bill will be called up. It has received the unanimous indorsement of the committee in its amended form, and it is supposed that there will be no debate when the bill is considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the amendment relative to a proposed change in the holding of the regular terms of the circuit court and district courts of the United States for the district of Montana, at Butte, Mont., submitted by Mr. MANTLE on the 17th instant, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the amendment relative to the payment of J. B. Fortune for fees earned as clerk of the United States district court from July 17, 1897, to December 31, 1898, submitted by Mr. PRITCHARD on the 16th instant, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. HANNA, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

- A bill (S. 4231) granting an increase of pension to Millie A. Berry; and
- A bill (H. R. 6841) granting an increase of pension to James C. Hervey.

Mr. HANNA, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

- A bill (H. R. 5069) to pension Jacob N. Atherton; and
 - A bill (H. R. 4811) granting a pension to Jane E. Zink.
- Mr. HANNA, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:
- A bill (S. 4053) for the relief of Oren M. Fletcher, late of Company F, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry;
 - A bill (S. 1052) increasing the pension of James A. Ludington; and
 - A bill (S. 144) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lucy A. Harding.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2631) to increase the pension of Dwight D. Wilber, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. LINDSAY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4534) to grant a pension to Ovid G. Sparks, reported it with amendments.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. MANTLE on the 22d instant, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment proposing to pay $1,500 to Thomas Williams for injuries received by him while engaged in the performance of his duties in the Senate.

folding room, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1118) to establish a marine hospital at Sabine Pass, Tex., reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by himself on the 4th instant, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4786) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the judicial district of Kansas, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WARREN. A few days ago I reported favorably from the Committee on Claims an amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the bill (S. 3546) to refer certain claims rendered against the United States Government to the Court of Claims. I now present a report to accompany that amendment, and ask that the report may be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made:

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. TURLEY introduced a bill (S. 4805) to increase the pension of Annie B. Goodrich; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 4806) for the relief of Winslow Warren; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 4807) directing the issue of duplicate of lost check drawn by C. C. Sniffen, major, United States Army, in favor of Fourth National Bank, New York City; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,000 for necessary additional work in connection with investigation of clay-working industries, mica, and other minerals, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also submitted an amendment proposing an appropriation of $50,000 for the repair, improvement, and enlargement, or for the construction of suitable and necessary additions to the public building at Greensboro, N. C., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also submitted an amendment relative to the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of North Carolina, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCENERY submitted an amendment relative to deficiencies in appropriations for the year 1899 for salaries, United States mint at New Orleans, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $7,600 for sufficient additional employees in the office of the Assistant Attorney-General, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $7,780.44 to reimburse the State of Wyoming for expenses incurred in preserving the formation, natural curiosities, and objects of interest in the Yellowstone National Park, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CAFFERY submitted an amendment relative to the salaries of the employees of the mint at New Orleans, La., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment proposing to pay $97,128.78 to William B. Reaney, surviving partner of the firm of Reaney, Son & Archbold, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to increase an item of appropriation in the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Arkansas, it was Ordered, That 6,000 additional copies of H. R. 8581, for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, as enrolled, be printed for the use of the Senate.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. KYLE. I present the testimony taken at a hearing before the subcommittee on Education and Labor of the Senate on June 16, relative to the hours of labor for workmen, mechanics, etc., employed upon public work of the United States. I move that the testimony be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

THE NICARAGUA CANAL.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on the Construction of the Nicaragua Canal is directed to inquire into the claims of the Republic of Nicaragua, relating to the stock or securities of the Maritime Canal Company under the concession of said Republic to the Nicaragua Canal Company, and any demands of said Republic connected with said claims. And said committee is authorized to conduct such investigation by a subcommittee, and to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths to the witnesses called before said committee or subcommittee.

Mr. MORGAN. There will be no expense connected with that investigation. The object is merely to get some testimony before the Senate that I think they would like to have. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Chair understands from the Senator from Alabama that there will be no expense connected with the investigation under the terms of the resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. None.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution just read.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 774) for the relief of Samuel D. Hubbard; and

A bill (H. R. 6127) for the relief of Henry C. Rawson.

The bill (H. R. 10841) to incorporate the National Congress of Mothers of the District of Columbia was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

The bill (H. R. 10867) to change name of the Capital Railway Company was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

TIMBER SEIZURES IN ARKANSAS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution laid over from yesterday, No. 395, offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], directing the Committee on Public Lands to investigate the conduct of the special agent in the seizure of timber in Arkansas, etc.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. JONES of Arkansas, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, by full committee or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it hereby is, authorized and directed to investigate the conduct of Special Agent C. A. M. Schlierholz in the seizure of timber in Arkansas; that said committee or subcommittee shall, at its discretion, visit the State of Arkansas or other locality necessary for a thorough investigation of the subject, and is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and employ a stenographer, and the necessary expenses incurred shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, since the morning hour of yesterday I have taken occasion to make some slight investigations of this timber-depredation case.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Before the Senator proceeds, will he allow me to make a slight correction of the RECORD that I think I ought to make?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I see in the RECORD that I am reported as saying:

He sent for the chief of division having such matters in charge, and asked him in my presence what evidence Schlierholz had of the fact that the timber he seized was taken from public lands, and the man answered, "None."

The Reporters either misunderstood me or I failed to express myself as I intended. The fact was that when the Commissioner sent for the chief of division who had charge of this matter, he asked him what evidence Schlierholz had that this timber was cut from public land, and he said he reported that he had positive proof. Then the Commissioner asked what statement of evidence had been submitted to the Department by Schlierholz, and he answered, "None;" and in that connection created the impression on my mind that the understanding of the chief of division, as well as of the Commissioner, was that instead of reporting the facts on which he had acted to the Department, he was reporting those facts to the district attorney and was acting under his instructions in seizing the timber. I make this correction because the statement of fact as it appears in the RECORD is not correct; it was not the way the thing occurred.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. As I was saying, Mr. President, I have made some slight investigation of this case since yesterday, having called upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office and talked with him about it. In view of the fact that the Senator from Arkansas has made quite an exhaustive statement of his side of this case, I think it is no more than fair that the complete report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office submitted in response to the resolution of the Senator from Arkansas should be read, and I send the communication to the desk so that it may appear in its entirety in the RECORD.

The Secretary read as follows:

Letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to resolution of the Senate of June 10, 1898, a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office relative to instructions given to Charles A. M. Schlierholz, special agent, General Land Office, at Batesville, Ark., as to seizing timber.

JUNE 16, 1898.—Laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, June 15, 1898.

SIR: Under date of the 10th instant the Senate passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to inform the Senate what instructions are given to Charles A. M. Schlierholz, special agent, General Land Office, at Batesville, Ark., as to seizing timber, and particularly whether said Schlierholz is instructed to seize all timber arriving at that place."

In reply I have the honor to hand you herewith a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, of even date herewith, which supplies the information called for by the resolution. Accompanying said report is a copy of "Instructions to special agents of the General Land Office relative to timber on public lands" and a copy of "Compilation of public timber laws," which are also transmitted herewith.

Very respectfully,

C. N. BLISS,
Secretary.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 15, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt, by reference from the Department, "for early report in duplicate, with return of this paper," of copy of resolution of the United States Senate of June 10, 1898, directing you to inform the Senate "what instructions are given to Charles A. M. Schlierholz, special agent, General Land Office, at Batesville, Ark., as to seizing timber, and particularly whether said Schlierholz is instructed to seize all timber arriving at that place."

In reply thereto I have the honor to report that no definite or specific instructions have been given to Special Agent Schlierholz by this office to seize any timber whatever in the State of Arkansas, and all seizures made by him, it appears, have been made under advice or instructions from the United States attorney for the eastern district of Arkansas and by virtue of the general authority vested in him as a special agent of this office appointed to protect the public interests.

This appears to be all of the information required by the above resolution, but, in order that you may be fully advised as to the seizures of black walnut and other timber referred to at or in the vicinity of Batesville, Ark., I have the honor, most respectfully, to submit the following additional facts of record in regard thereto.

Information having been received at this office several months ago from different sources that black walnut, cedar, and other valuable timber was being unlawfully cut and removed from public lands in the State of Arkansas, and many carloads thereof were being shipped out of the State to other markets, Special Agent C. A. M. Schlierholz, on duty in Missouri, with headquarters at St. Louis, in said State, was directed to proceed to Arkansas, and in conjunction with Special Agent F. S. Goodrich, who was then on duty in said State, to investigate and report on the matters referred to. From his first reports to this office it appears that certain dealers in black walnut and other valuable timber, located in several States, had agents in the State of Arkansas buying up such timber and shipping it to their respective employers; that said agents did not confine their operations to the purchase of timber from private or deeded lands, but bought timber wherever and from whomsoever they could get it, and in many instances induced and encouraged parties to cut from unperfected homestead entries and from vacant public lands, in some cases advancing money to the parties to file fraudulent homestead applications on the lands, under cover of which to cut and dispose of the walnut and other timber thereon.

In the course of his investigations he discovered that timber unlawfully cut and removed from public lands was being rafted down the White River to Batesville, Ark., and he has, under the general authority vested in him as a special agent of this office, from time to time taken possession of or seized certain rafts containing such timber. United States Attorney Jacob Trieber and Special United States Attorney H. F. Auten have filed libels in rem in the United States court at Batesville, Ark., for the timber so seized, and the same is now in the custody of the United States marshal. This is, in brief, the present status of the matter in regard to the seizures of timber at and in the vicinity of Batesville, Ark. The entire matter is now within the jurisdiction of the United States court, where all parties interested will be protected in their rights and the questions at issue will be judicially and finally disposed of.

With regard to the general authority of special agents of this office to take possession of or seize timber or lumber unlawfully cut or removed from public lands, I most respectfully call your attention to circular of instructions to special agents, approved March 8, 1898 (copy herewith), on page 36 of which it is held that "timber unlawfully cut from Government land is the property of the United States, and is subject to seizure as such, wherever or in whatever condition it may be found, and from any party having possession of it, or who in any way lays claim to it."

This rule is based upon several judicial rulings and decisions on the subject, as set forth on pages 41 to 45 of Compilation of Public Timber Laws and Regulations and Decisions Thereunder, issued by this office January 21, 1897 (copy herewith).

There appears to be no question as to the right of the special agents of this office to seize timber unlawfully cut from public lands, and the only question that can arise in the case at issue is as to whether the rafts of timber seized, or any portion of each raft, was unlawfully cut or removed from public lands. Before any seizures were made by Special Agent Schlierholz, and before it was known that any seizures were contemplated by him, he was, under date of December 1, 1897, advised as follows in regard to a seizure of timber which had been made by Special Agent F. S. Goodrich, and whom he was directed to instruct in his duties:

"You will also duly impress upon him the necessity for securing conclusive evidence in every instance before recommending legal action thereon of any nature, and that only in emergent cases in which conclusive evidence has been secured should seizure be resorted to."

Again, under date of April 3, 1898, Special Agent Schlierholz was advised that the matters in hand at Batesville, Ark., "require discretion and caution in order to avoid any false step that might unduly prejudice the cause of the Government or its efforts to protect the public domain from the vandalism of unlawful depredators."

These letters of precaution undoubtedly were duly observed by Special Agent Schlierholz, but, as a further precaution, and to fully satisfy myself in the matter, I, on May 31, 1898, telegraphed as follows: "Seize or sell no logs until you have positive evidence of ownership by Government," in reply to which said special agent, under date of June 4, 1898, reports:

"I have only seized rafts of which I had positive proof that the entire lot, or a large amount of the timber, came from vacant or mostly from unperfected homestead lands, and since I started out on the field investigations I am utterly surprised at the outrageous timber trespasses committed by the walnut and cedar buyers whose headquarters are at Batesville, Ark., and whose interests are protected by a great majority of the people of Batesville, Ark., who for twenty-five years past have made a large amount of money out of the timber cut and removed from public lands."

I return the resolution of the United States Senate herewith.

Very respectfully,

BINGER HERMANN, Commissioner.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am very glad to say, upon an investigation of this matter, that there does not seem to be any partisan politics in this case. I supposed, after listening to the rather heated argument of the Senator from Arkansas yesterday, that this special agent, Schlierholz, was probably a Republican. I supposed that this Administration had made a mistake and had sent some man down there who did not know what his duty was and who was perhaps incompetent, and should not have been sent there. But upon an investigation I find that Mr. Schlierholz is an appointee of the last Administration; that in fact he is a Democrat. I also find that the district attorney who was prosecuting these cases in the United States court in Arkansas is a Republican. I assume that most of the defendants in these timber cases, being residents of Arkansas, which is very largely Democratic, are of that political faith. Therefore I repeat that there can be no partisan politics whatever in this case.

Yesterday after the Senator from Arkansas had spoken, as I stated a while ago, I went to the Interior Department and conferred with the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the subject. He had just received a communication from the United States attorney at Little Rock, Ark., dated June 18, and as this additional communication on the subject is full of interest as well as bearing the evidence of truth in every line, I desire to present it and have it read at the desk, so that it may be made a part of the record.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
EASTERN DISTRICT OF ARKANSAS,
Little Rock, Ark., June 18, 1898.

SIR: We have just returned from the United States court held at Batesville, in which most of the timber cases are pending. Owing to the fact that we had not been able to secure the attendance of all the witnesses needed, most of the civil suits were continued. A number of the timber thieves were convicted and in some cases execution of the sentence stayed by the court when the parties showed a willingness to aid the Government in the prosecution of the principal criminals. Several preliminary questions were disposed of by the court and all of them decided in favor of the Government.

The court held that the special agent had the right to seize timber, which he had reason to believe, from evidence collected by him, was unlawfully cut from the public lands; that a homesteader could convey no valid title to timber cut from his entry before a patent was issued except such timber as was cut from the land he was clearing for actual cultivation, and that cutting timber promiscuously from a homestead entry is a crime and passes no title to the purchaser; that the proceedings instituted by us for the determination of the title to the timber seized by Special Agent Schlierholz were proper proceedings, and that the special agent, while acting under the instructions promulgated by your office, was properly discharging his duties.

I can not speak too highly of the work done by Mr. Schlierholz in these cases. He is fearless, indefatigable, and does everything intelligently. He has submitted to taunts, threats, and every possible kind of annoyance. He has in rain and sunshine gone over the mountains to make personal examinations and secure the proper proofs, in spite of the obstacles thrown in his way by parties interested in defrauding the Government. On many occasions the people in those sections have refused to furnish him with food and lodging, but he has not been deterred from discharging his duty. Some of these parties boast that they possess sufficient influence to have Mr. Schlierholz removed, and in that event feel that they are safe. Should he be removed, it will be impossible for us to recover the judgments to which we are entitled, and I earnestly request that he continue to receive the support from you which he has had in the past, as he is deserving of the same.

The effect of his acts is being felt, and there is less cutting of timber off the public domain now in this State than there ever has been before. As soon as he finishes his present investigations I want him to ascertain how much timber has been purchased by these dealers and sawmill owners in the past, but which has long ago been sawed and disposed of, in order that civil actions for the value thereof may be instituted. At the last term of the grand jury in this city I obtained proofs showing that a large mill employed men to hunt for valuable timber, and when found on Government lands would furnish the money for a homestead entry to some of their employees, and as soon as entered cut every valuable tree on the land, which would then be abandoned. The records of the land offices here will show that fully 75 per cent of the entries of cedar lands are abandoned as soon as the timber is stolen. In fact, cedar lands in this section are absolutely worthless for agricultural purposes, and when entered it is done with the intent of cutting the timber only.

The trouble we are having is that for years the Department has had no efficient special agents here and these parties were never molested, and now they believe they have vested rights to cut on the public domain.

I explained to you fully the condition of affairs here when I entered upon the discharge of my duties as United States attorney, and I am glad to say that with the assistance rendered me by your office and the intelligent investigations made by Mr. Schlierholz I have not only been able to make some large collections for the Government, but the people have learned that these laws can not be violated with impunity. I am satisfied that the Senators from this State have been imposed upon by interested parties, and when they ascertain the true facts they will second our efforts to enforce the laws.

Thanking you for the assistance rendered, I have the honor to be,
Yours, very respectfully,

JACOB TRIEBER,
United States Attorney.

COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In the light of the facts contained in this document and the document which I had read previously, I do not believe there is the slightest necessity for an investigation of this case by any committee of this body, and I trust that the resolution which goes to the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate may be reported back to this body adversely.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President—

Mr. DAVIS. What is the pending question? Is the morning business closed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is not closed. The resolution offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], laid over from yesterday, is before the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. I raise a point of order.

Mr. BERRY. Does the Senator desire to ask any question?

Mr. DAVIS. I raise the point of order that debate is not in order.

Mr. BERRY. I am entitled to the floor, and I did not hear the point of order made by the Senator from Minnesota. I was recognized by the Chair. What is the point?

Mr. DAVIS. I raise the point of order that debate is not in order at the present stage of business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must overrule the point of order. The Senator from Arkansas is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BERRY. Just why the resolution is not debatable I do not know. I do not propose to detain the Senate. The Chair ruled that I am entitled to the floor, as I understood.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BERRY. I understood the Chair to rule that I am entitled to the floor; otherwise I should have said nothing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas will proceed.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I desire to occupy the time of the Senate for only a very short period. The chairman of the Committee on Public Lands has not met the question, nor has it been met, as I conceive, by the answer of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It is the proposition laid down by my colleague, shown by these papers and undisputed, that when this timber was libeled, as he calls it, no persons whatever were made defendants to that suit. It was a proceeding against the timber. Then, under the ruling of the court, parties who claim this as being their timber are not permitted to be made defendants, but are compelled to come in and intervene and take the burden of proof to show that the timber was not cut upon Government land or upon homesteads. There is the difficulty about that.

If there is a law upon the United States statute book which authorizes the agents of the Interior Department to seize timber, to take the timber without any process except to file proceedings in the court afterwards against the timber, and not make any parties defendant, not permitting them to be made defendants, but compelling the owner of that timber to come in and intervene and take the burden of proof upon himself in order to have his property released from this contest, I say that statute ought to be repealed. The Committee on Public Lands ought to investigate the question and see whether there is a law of the United States that treat all men as thieves who happen to have timber in their possession. It is an injustice that any fair-minded man will recognize.

Now, what are the facts in regard to this particular case? This agent seized the timber, made no parties defendant, and when the owners came forward and asked to be made defendants it was refused them. When they took the burden upon themselves and said, "We will intervene; we have got the proof to show that the timber was cut off our land," the court said, "We will continue the cases for six months and will not permit you to make the proof now."

Now, does the Senator from North Dakota believe that that is just and fair? "Seize no timber," says the Commissioner, "except you have positive proof that it was taken from the Government land." This agent says he had positive proof; and yet, Mr. President, when these parties came in and intervened and said they were ready to prove to the court that it was their timber, cut off their land, this man, who said he had the positive proof, says, "We have not got any witnesses, and we want to continue it for six months and take this property that belongs to these people," many of them owning nothing else, living 50 or 100 miles from there, unable to stay at court, unable to return, and at the end of six months, if it were released, they have no remedy against the Government or anybody else.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. BERRY. Now, does the Senator think that is just?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will not offer my opinion on this subject. I simply quote from the last report of the district attorney. The Senator from Arkansas says that these people had no opportunity to defend themselves; that they were not made defendants. On the contrary, the district attorney says in this communication which I had read at the desk:

A number of the timber thieves were convicted and in some cases execution of the sentence stayed by the court, when the parties showed a willingness to aid the Government in the prosecution of the principal criminals.

Mr. BERRY. Oh, Mr. President, I am not talking about that.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think that answers the Senator's proposition.

Mr. BERRY. No, it does not. I am not talking about the parties who were indicted. I am talking about the civil suit, the proceedings in rem, against this timber. I say that General Neill, who was for four years a member of Congress here, as honorable and truthful a man as there is in Arkansas, an attorney in the case, wrote a letter, which was read here the other day, in which he stated that they asked the court to make them defendants, so that the burden would be upon the Government to prove that the timber was stolen. The court refused. Thereupon they did intervene, and asked to intervene, announcing themselves ready to make the proof that the timber was honestly obtained, and the district attorney and the special agent, who said he seized none except where they had positive proof, come into court and say, "We have no proof, and we want the cases continued for six months."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. They did not say they had no proof. They said they were not ready with their witnesses, and in view of the difficulty which this timber agent has had in prosecuting these cases I am not surprised that he was prevented from getting his witnesses to court in time.

Mr. BERRY. When the Senator from North Dakota attempts to reflect on the people down there—

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Not at all.

Mr. BERRY. I think the fact that the special agent has not been molested under the circumstances speaks a great deal for those people. They have not interfered with him. But the Commissioner says, "I instructed him to seize no timber except where he had positive proof." Now, then, he had no proof; and when they would not require the Government to make the proof and threw the burden upon the other parties, and the owners of the timber said, "We are ready for trial; we are ready to make the proof that it is our timber, honestly cut," then this man who was not authorized to take it unless he had positive proof said, "We have not got the proof and we ask it to be continued."

Now, if that be the statute, if that be the Government law, that law is wrong. If timber is seized, the party in whose possession it is found should be made a defendant in that suit, and the Government should be required to prove that it was unlawfully in his possession, and not seize the timber and force the parties to come in and take the burden of proof to show that it was honestly obtained. That is what those people complain of.

When that agent says the people of Batesville, Ark., have for years made money out of the purchase of stolen timber, and for that reason that they are in sympathy with those who stole it, he states that which is false, and for which he ought to be removed, if for nothing else. It is not true. The community in and around Batesville is one of the best in the South. They are not timber thieves, and the man who attempts to throw that imputation upon them is a slanderer, and ought not to be permitted to remain in office another day.

Mr. President, I think for these reasons the Committee on Public Lands should ascertain the facts, should look at the statutes and find what the law is; and if there is a law which authorizes the Government, without proof, without testimony, arbitrarily to seize a man's property and say then that he must prove that he is not a thief before he can get it back again, I think that law ought to be repealed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that the action of the special agent has been indorsed by the court before which these cases were brought, and I say that while this matter is in the court it should not be taken out of the court and brought here to this body and sent to any committee for investigation. If there is any necessity for a law governing special agents hereafter, the Senator from Arkansas, as he knows, is at liberty to introduce a bill to that effect; and when it comes to the Committee on Public Lands, it will be given due consideration.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President—

Mr. FRYE. What is the regular order of business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is resolution No. 305, offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. FRYE. Which is now under consideration?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Which is now under consideration, laid over from yesterday.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should be glad to have the copy of the communication from Mr. Trieber, which was read at the desk some time ago.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have the copy here. I will be glad to send it to the Senator. I understand that a copy was sent to the Vice-President. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Interior saying that a copy had been sent to the Senate as part of the report called for by the original resolution.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I confess that I am astonished at the attitude taken by the Senator from North Dakota. No man in the Senate has any doubt for a moment that this matter can not be removed from the jurisdiction of the court that has it under control. There is no proposition here to remove anything from the court. I have said nothing about criminal proceedings. I have heard nothing about criminal proceedings.

No complaint has been made to me about any criminal proceedings, but, on the contrary, on the first presentation of the case to the Senate I suggested that one of the difficulties about it that I did not understand was that while this special agent reported to the Land Office that he had found instances of trespass on the Government timber lands, I saw no statement from him that any criminal proceedings had been instituted at all; that he seemed to be directing his attention to seizing timber and that alone; that if the people were taking the Government timber off of this land, they ought to be punished as well as to have the timber seized, and that I could not understand why, while he was making such a showing about the amount of timber received, there was nothing said about criminal proceedings.

In the letter which has just been read the district attorney says that persons have been convicted. I had not heard of that before. I saw a paragraph a day or two ago in a local paper published at Batesville that within two or three days the court said there that one indictment against a man for trespassing on Government timber had been tried and the man found not guilty. Nothing was said about any other trials. I do not know whether there have been any other trials or not. I can not say anything about that. The complaint that I make is that this timber agent, this agent of the General Land Office, should be seizing and holding and selling timber when he has been instructed by Mr. Hermann to seize no timber except when he has positive proof that the timber comes from Government land.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Just let me finish the sentence. And yet when there have been some thirty rafts brought into the custody of the court at Batesville, and when the parties claiming this timber were present in the court asking for a trial and offering to take the court's own terms and prove positively that the timber was their own, that it was not cut from Government land, and this special agent reports to the Land Office that he has seized no timber except upon positive proof, that he has positive proof that all the timber came from Government land—when the defendants go in court and offer to prove that timber to be their own this Government agent says he has no witnesses present. He does not show that a single subpoena has been issued, that anybody has been summoned to the court to testify. He shows no diligence and has taken no steps whatever, but simply asks the court to continue the cases for six months, without any showing of diligence on his part and without any effort on his part to prove what he says he has positive proof of.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I presume that is true in a few isolated cases, but it is also true that this timber agent did have positive proof in other cases, and that the cases came regularly before the court and the defendants were convicted, as is stated by Mr. Trieber.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Does the Senator make that statement?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The statement is in the record.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is not.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will ask the Senator—

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is nothing in the record to sustain that statement—not a line, not a syllable. There is a statement here that criminal cases were brought. I have said nothing about indictments in criminal cases. I am talking about the seizure of timber; and when the Senator states that this proof was made, he goes outside of the record.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will ask the Senator to read the first paragraph of that document.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I will read it. Mr. Trieber says, under date of June 18:

We have just returned from the United States court held at Batesville, in which most of the timber cases are pending. Owing to the fact that we had not been able to secure the attendance of all the witnesses needed, most of the civil suits were continued. A number of the timber thieves were convicted, and in some cases execution of the sentence stayed by the court when the parties showed a willingness to aid the Government in the prosecution of the principal criminals.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I claim that there have been convictions, and that fact is stated in the paragraph just read by the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have stated to the Senator again and again that my point in this case has nothing to do with criminal proceedings. My complaint is that this timber, the property of these poor citizens along White River, has been seized by this man in violation of the instructions of the Land Office, in violation of his duty; that the timber has been practically confiscated; that it has been sold, and these people have been deprived of their money, and that this man has done it in a high-handed and arbitrary way; and the Senator from North Dakota says he is justified in what he has done.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I say the court has said he is justified.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I say the court has said nothing of the kind.

Mr. WILSON. May I interrupt the Senator from Arkansas for a question?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. I understand the Senator's proposition to be that the special agent of the United States or the agent of the Commissioner of the General Land Office has seized certain amounts of timber in the State of Arkansas, that the matter is now in the United States court, and that some of those cases have been continued. The Senator from Arkansas is now asking that the resolution be sent to the Committee on Public Lands for the purpose of an investigation and to take these cases out of the hands of the United States court, at least temporarily.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Not by any means.

Mr. WILSON. Until that can be determined.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Not by any means.

Mr. WILSON. Then I do not understand the Senator, and that is what I am trying to do.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The object of this resolution is to ascertain the facts connected with the conduct of this officer in the seizure of timber and other things. I am sure the Senator from Washington will agree with me that it was an outrage, if what I read from a letter here yesterday morning at this table should be true, that a raft taken by a man to Batesville was seized by this man Schlierholz; that the timber was sold for $205; that afterwards it was shown conclusively the timber was cut from his own land and was not taken from the Government land, and he was compelled to pay expenses amounting to more than $160, leaving for himself out of the $205 that was his own only about $40.

I say if that is shown, it was an outrage; it was a violation of the natural rights of an American citizen, and that an officer who would do this in plain and direct violation of the instructions given to him by the Commissioner of the Land Office ought to have his conduct understood fully by the Senate, by the Department, and by the American people. It would not in the slightest degree affect the status of the proceeding in the United States court. It would simply bring, in an official way, the facts in this case before the public, before the Senate, and before the Department; that would be all.

Mr. WILSON. I can not understand why all those facts can not be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, who, in my judgment, is as able, kind, conscientious a Secretary of the Interior as we have ever had. He is thoroughly interested in his work, and why can not he and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who is, by his long service in Congress and his acquaintance with facts of this character as applied to the West and his great industry peculiarly fitted for his present position, bring out to the entire satisfaction of the Senator from Arkansas all the facts that he wishes the committee to bring out?

What I wish to avoid, if possible, is that the Senate of the United States, through its proper and legitimate committee, shall enter into such investigations from time to time, because if we go into one investigation upon these matters, the committee will be investigating almost every session of Congress the action of certain special agents. I want it to come out in the interest of the Senator from Arkansas. I want his people to have exact justice, and I think he will get that from the Department of the Interior a good deal better and a good deal quicker than he will get it from the Committee on Public Lands, with all respect to that committee.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In reply to what the Senator from Washington has just said, I wish to say that I cordially agree with all he says about the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Public Lands. I believe they are all he says of them. As I said yesterday and as I have said again and again, the Commissioner of Public Lands has done all that any reasonable man could ask in his instructions given to these officers in the field.

Mr. President, up to this hour I have hoped and believed that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office would correct this wrong. But the position taken by the Senator from North Dakota leads me strongly to think that whenever one partisan connected with that piece of rascality reports to the Department that it is all right, they will be too much inclined to accept his statement as being the truth. Here was conclusive argument, as it seemed to him, presented by the Senator from North Dakota. In this letter of the district attorney he says that some of those people boast that they can have Schlierholz removed. That is a very vague sort of a charge. It is the kind of a trick that is resorted to by people who want to undertake to avoid a fair investigation to say the people have boasted that they can have Schlierholz removed.

I have no doubt in the world that that statement is absolutely without truth. I do not believe anybody has ever boasted of any such thing. How could that be true? Who has the influence to have this man Schlierholz removed? Who is the individual in the district who has such influence with the Secretary of the Interior or with the President of the United States that all he has to do is to ask that this man should be put out in order to have him put out? No, sir; that was done for the purpose of undertaking to prevent his removal; it had no other purpose. I believe this man Schlierholz has been violating the law and that he has been guilty of the most outrageous tyranny and the most outrageous wrong; and I suppose they want to excuse his conduct by this kind of an argument.

One of the letters I have read stated that this man Schlierholz was in the habit of telling these men that he would not believe them on oath. When a man clothed with a little brief authority, holding a commission from the Government of the United States, insults in that way honest men with whom he comes in contact, he is a disgrace to the Government service, and that, if there were not anything else, would justify his removal and make it necessary that he should be kicked out of the service.

Mr. WILSON. I understood the Senator to state that this man was a partisan. Does the Senator know his politics?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Schlierholz's?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not know. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] stated a while ago that he was a Democrat. I have never asked any question about his politics.

Mr. WILSON. Nor have I.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have never asked about his politics, but a Democratic tyrant or a Democratic oppressor is no more, in my mind, and stands no higher than a Republican tyrant or a Republican oppressor. I believe the dignity of American citizenship and the honesty of our people stand above every other consideration, and when a man is violating their rights I never ask whether he is a Republican or a Democrat.

Mr. WILSON. I did not ask the question of the Senator in any partisan way.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understand that.

Mr. WILSON. I understood the Senator to say that the man was a partisan; and therefore I wanted to know if he was our partisan.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I did not mean a political partisan.

Mr. WILSON. I beg pardon.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I meant that he had been a partisan in these proceedings.

Mr. FRYE. His bad conduct indicates that he is a Democrat.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I said on yesterday that I hoped the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office would look into and correct this wrong, but I am afraid, after the position taken by the Senator from North Dakota to-day, that it will be assumed that this man is a model officer, simply because he writes stories of this kind to the Commissioner. If the Commissioner will investigate and ascertain the truth; if he will send for and get the facts from the outside, from other people, and will do justice, then I shall be satisfied with his action; but, for my single self, I believe that citizens of my State have been wronged, and I believe the most outrageous iniquities have been inflicted on them by this man.

If the Commissioner of Public Lands and the Secretary of the Interior do not choose to act, then I want the Committee on Public Lands to act. Even when the chairman of the committee has made up his mind beforehand that he does not want the investigation, I want that committee to investigate. I shall be perfectly willing to have the investigation conducted by the Senator from North Dakota himself; and I have no doubt, when the proof is brought before him that this man Schlierholz has been guilty of wrong, has been guilty of outrages, that the Senator from North Dakota will make a report, whether the cases are pending in the Federal court or not.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am not defending Mr. Schlierholz in any way, and am not attempting to defend him in any degree whatever. I am simply presenting the report made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the report made by the United States district attorney as opposed to the newspaper clippings and ex parte letters which the Senator from Arkansas submitted on yesterday.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator expressed himself as satisfied in view of the letter that was written by Mr. Trieber that there should be no investigation. If by that the Senator was not committing himself, I do not know what it means.

Mr. President, I read a newspaper report which has been published far and wide. It has not been criticised by anybody; it has not been denied by anybody. It was published under the eyes of the district attorney and the assistant district attorney in their own town, and the letters that I read yesterday are from three as honorable and as reputable men as live inside or outside of the State of Arkansas. There are no better men anywhere. They are good lawyers; they are men of integrity; they are men of high character; and their statement of facts has not been and can not be denied.

Even the district attorney himself says that the court sustained them in all of their claims, and that the burden of proof was upon the defendants, the claimants of this timber, to show that it was not stolen. There was not one scintilla of evidence to sustain the Government side of the case. I do not believe that a more palpable, unjust, and indefensible outrage was ever committed, and the fact that the matter is a small one is no reason why the wrong should not be corrected here. The fact that a poor fellow has only $200 worth of timber, and that that is all he has got in the world, is no reason why he should be oppressed by the great Government of the United States; but it is a greater reason why this Government should vindicate any of the citizens of this country against an outrage of this sort.

I hope and I believe the Senate of the United States will not hesitate for one moment to put it in the power of this committee to make this inquiry and to apply the needed remedy.

Mr. STEWART. I hope this investigation will be made. I have observed within the last twenty years several instances of most terrible outrages. One occurred in my State, where special agents of the Government seized all the timber that had been collected by the miners for mining purposes; all the water left the mines, about 300 miners were driven out of the country, and at least $200,000 or $300,000 worth of property was destroyed; and, on an investigation, the case against the miners was dismissed. I have always protested against such wrongs resulting from the action of special agents. There may be some very faithful special agents, but there have been a great many unfaithful special agents in the last twenty years.

When a case of this kind is presented I think it ought to be investigated, with a view of framing laws to prevent such outrages. When a man who is ignorant and vicious has control of the power of the Government in one of these outside districts, he is liable to commit great injury, and I think the Committee on Public Lands will do well to take the case up and examine it, and see if there can be any legislation framed to correct such wrongs as are complained of.

I do not propose to take any sides in this matter. I have not any information about this case, but I have known of some fifteen or twenty such cases where there have been great abuses.

Mr. WILSON. Let me ask the Senator a question. Here is a case of the seizure of timber. The timber agents have their instructions under the law. They may possibly exceed their instructions, as the Senator says. Doubtless now and then there comes along, as the Senator from Arkansas has said, a man clothed with a little brief authority who goes too far, but when you come right down to the facts, what can we do? If this matter goes to the Committee on Public Lands, of which I am a member, there will be no investigation this summer. The Senator knows that as well as I do. There is no member of that committee who will have the time to go to the State of Arkansas to investigate this question. Therefore, if we once enter upon the domain of investigating every special agent of the United States who seizes timber which he supposes he has evidence to believe has been cut from the public domain, the Committee on Public Lands will be engaged in a continuous investigation.

Why not leave that matter where it properly and legitimately belongs—to the Department of the Interior? Then if the investigation which the Senator wants is not made, the Senator can ask for an investigation by the committee. There is generally a great deal to be said on both sides of all questions, and probably these people have been dealt with unjustly. I know occasionally, as the Senator said, in the West we have been dealt with unjustly; but nevertheless the fact remains, and we must admit it, Mr. President, that on the public domain all over this country people are attempting to secure timber without paying the Government that compensation to which it is honorably entitled. In all the years gone by we of the West have had to bear that burden. We of the West have had these special agents; and I am exceedingly glad that this case has come up from the section of the country it has. We have complained, but our complaints have not produced very great results. Occasionally timber has been seized there which has been cut from the public domain and sold.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I want to make a suggestion to the Senator, and it is just this: He says that we can not get anybody on the Committee on Public Lands to make such an investigation. I want to say, if the facts in this case are as I believe them to be and that committee is authorized to send a subcommittee to the State of Arkansas to investigate this question, that, anxious as the Senator from Washington is to go home, I will venture my reputation that when the matter is presented to him he will go to Arkansas and make the investigation. He has too much regard for the rights of American citizens not to do so.

Mr. WILSON. I have every regard for the rights of the American citizen, but, notwithstanding the very complimentary terms in which the Senator from Arkansas has referred to me and my great desire to see the people of Arkansas, I am afraid that I shall not have the time to do it. Still I would do my duty in regard to that matter if I should be selected.

Mr. STEWART. I think legislation can be framed which will modify this evil very much. I do not believe there is sufficient care under our system in selecting these special agents. They certainly ought to be nominated by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. They should be known as men of high character. I have contended all along that we should get the best men to be charged with this very important duty, because I have known a great many men to be bankrupted and destroyed by special agents who have been appointed.

It is supposed by many to be a very subordinate place and that anybody will do for a timber agent, when really he has great judicial functions to perform and has to use the highest discretion. I believe, if the Committee on Public Lands will investigate the matter, they will come to the conclusion I reached years ago, that a very different class of men, men of greater experience and better qualifications, ought to be appointed to these places by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, with a view to their experience, knowledge of law, and fitness for this very important service, which, if wrongly performed, may destroy whole communities, as I have witnessed in several cases. I believe if the committee will investigate this matter and will consider the necessary requirements for these officers, the system will be changed and we will have a provision of law to secure men competent to discharge such important duties.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to say, as we all know here, that the Senator from Nevada is a good lawyer. He has had wide experience in such matters, and I do not know any Senator in this body whom I would prefer to trust in drafting a bill covering this question. The Senator is fully competent to draft such a bill as will cover this and many other questions such as he has referred to; and I say to the Senator that if a bill of that character comes to the Committee on Public Lands, it will be given every consideration.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not believe it is the province of the Committee on Public Lands to investigate the conduct of every timber agent against whom complaints may be made.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise to make the point of order that, under the rules of the Senate this resolution must first go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as it imposes a charge on the contingent fund.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the motion before the Senate, made by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That was my motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg pardon. I did not know that fact, being absent from the Chamber when that motion was made.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to read one paragraph from the letter of Mr. Trieber which has been read to the Senate at the request of the Senator from North Dakota. Mr. Trieber says:

The court held that the special agent had the right to seize timber which he had reason to believe, from evidence collected by him, was unlawfully cut from the public lands.

The chief of Mr. Schlierholz had instructed him not to seize timber except where he had positive proof that it had been taken from the public lands. This man writes in justification to Mr. Hermann that the court held that Schlierholz had the right to seize this timber where he had what he considered reasonable ground to believe that the timber had been taken from the public domain; and he was violating the orders of his chief according to his own statement. I think that of itself is sufficient ground for him to be dealt with. But here comes a remarkable statement. Mr. Trieber says that the court held:

That a homesteader could convey no valid title to timber cut from his entry before a patent was issued except such timber as was cut from the land he was clearing for actual cultivation, and that cutting timber promiscuously from a homestead entry is a crime and passes no title to the purchaser.

I do not believe that the Senator from North Dakota will say that that is the law, or that he will say that there should have been any such ruling by any court when a man has lived on land the required period of five full years, has made his final proof, and has received his receipt, simply because the clerks in the Department in the city of Washington are not able to keep up with their work and issue patents as rapidly as they are due, thus keeping him from having all the rights he is entitled to as to the land. Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I was laboring under a misapprehension—

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me one moment—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. DAVIS. I decline to yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

Mr. DAVIS. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, under the rule I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What rule is that?

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the point of order that the rule as to the morning hour does not provide that the hour of 1 o'clock shall terminate the morning business if a Senator has the floor at that time; and if the Senator from Minnesota will permit—

Mr. DAVIS. I move to take up the joint resolution providing for the annexation of Hawaii.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator does not wish to be so discourteous as that. I rose and addressed the Chair before the Senator did, as the record will show. If he wishes to do it, it is all right; but he will not facilitate the passage of his joint resolution much by that operation. I was about to make, if the Senator will permit me, a single observation.

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to say that I was laboring under a misapprehension when I made the suggestion a few minutes ago that the pending resolution should go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, not knowing that a motion had been made to that effect. Surely that reference will not be denied. I think all Senators will agree that the reference shall be made now, at this moment, and afterwards, if a report is made from the committee, the discussion of the resolution will be in order if taken from the Calendar for that purpose. I trust the reference may be made without further debate. That is all I want to say.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the resolution submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The Chair hears no objection, and that order is made. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] is entitled to the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 129) to amend "An act for the correction of the military record of Wilhelm Spiegelburg," approved July 21, 1892;

A bill (S. 242) for the relief of Moses Pendergrass, of Missouri;

A bill (S. 2063) to authorize the White and Black River Valley Railway Company to build a bridge across the Black River, in Arkansas;

A bill (S. 2393) granting an increase of pension to Henry Hinckley;

A bill (S. 2813) granting a pension to Barney Smith;

A bill (S. 3110) granting a pension to Patrick Breen;

A bill (S. 3368) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Yankton, S. Dak.;

A bill (S. 4269) granting a pension to Margaret Ferriter;

A bill (S. 4400) granting an increase of pension to Joel Blackman;

A bill (S. 4456) to designate Gladstone, Mich., a subport of entry; and

A bill (S. 4568) granting a pension to Jacob Miller.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the two reports of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 13, 14, 186, 221, 222, and 233, upon which the committee of conference have been unable to agree, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CANNON, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, and Mr. SAYERS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

VISITING INDIANS AT OMAHA EXPOSITION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Select Committee on International Expositions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to Senate resolution of June 10, 1898, requesting the President "to make such arrangements as may be necessary to secure at the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition to be held in the city of Omaha, Nebr., the attendance of representatives of the Iroquois tribes and Delawares of Canada and of the Abenakis of St. Francis and Beaucourt and such other Indian nations as have emigrated from the territory now of the United States to Canada."

To carry out this resolution, if it shall be found agreeable to the government of Canada, it will be necessary for this Government to send an agent to visit the tribes and secure their assent, organize the representative delegations, escort them to the exposition, take charge of and care for them while there and until they are returned to their respective tribes.

The resolution seems to presuppose that there are funds which may be lawfully used to defray the expenses which must necessarily be incurred in the premises. By reference to the Secretary's report, it will be seen that there are no moneys lawfully available for that purpose.

It is not to be presumed that the Senate, under such circumstances, would desire the Executive to take the action indicated in the resolution, and I am therefore constrained to await the requisite appropriation by Congress for the payment of the expenses that must be necessarily incurred in the accomplishment of the proposed objects.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1898.

ANNEXATION OF THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 259) to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution named by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I rise to invite the attention of the Senate to a matter of very grave importance, but which is not strictly pertinent to the question of the annexation of Hawaii. I call attention to the report of the committee of conference upon the Indian appropriation bill. That report recommends the adoption of the following amendment:

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert the following:

I read the second proviso:

Provided further, That hereafter no Indian or tribe of Indians shall lease for mining purposes lands, except by the authority of the Secretary of the Interior first had and obtained, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him as to quantity of land in each case, and limit of price, and time of lease, which in no case shall exceed seven years, and shall only be made by the authority of the council of the tribe making such lease, and with the approval also of the Secretary of the Interior after said lease has been agreed upon, except in cases where the lands have been patented to any tribe or allotted to individual Indians; and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. President, that provision, if adopted, is a recognition of the title in fee of the Indians to all minerals within all of the reservations of the United States. It is equivalent to a grant by the United States to the Indians of all the minerals embraced within what are known as Indian reservations. The annexation of Hawaii or its cession to the United States may be important; but of far greater importance, beyond all comparison to the United States, is this question as to whether, while we obtain the cession of four or five million acres of land embraced within what are known as the Hawaiian Islands, we cede away to about 25,000 Indians the minerals in an area which exceeds 50,000,000 acres of land, embraced principally in the mining States and Territories of the United States, and that exclusive of the mineral lands within the Indian Territory, also excluding all the mineral land within the District of Alaska.

Mr. President, I desire now to invite the attention of the Senate to this provision in order that Senators may not be taken by surprise in voting upon this conference report. I call attention to the right of Indians respecting these reservations as it has heretofore been recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States, which clearly establishes that the Indians have no rights whatever to these minerals. I invite attention to the case of the United States vs. Cook, reported in 19 Wallace, page 591. This was a case brought by the United States against Cook for damages for the conversion of timber which had been cut by Indians upon an Indian reservation and sold to him. It was held that the United States had a right to recover. I ask to have read the opinion of the court, which is not very lengthy, but which was delivered by the Chief Justice, and it clearly defines the rights of the Indians upon these Indian reservations.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Chief Justice delivered the opinion of the court.

We think the action was properly brought and that it may be maintained. The right of the Indians in the land from which the logs were taken was that of occupancy alone. They had no power of alienation except to the United States. The fee was in the United States, subject only to this right of occupancy. This is the title by which other Indians hold their lands. It was so decided by this court as early as 1823, in Johnson vs. McIntosh. The authority of that case has never been doubted. The right of the Indians to their occupancy is as sacred as that of the United States to the fee, but it is only a right of occupancy. The possession, when abandoned by the Indians, attaches itself to the fee without further grant.

This right of use and occupancy by the Indians is unlimited. They may exercise it at their discretion. If the lands in a state of nature are not in a condition for profitable use, they may be made so. If desired for the purposes of agriculture, they may be cleared of their timber to such an extent as may be reasonable under the circumstances. The timber taken off by the Indians in such clearing may be sold by them. But to justify any cutting of the timber, except for use upon the premises, as timber or its product, it must be done in good faith for the improvement of the land. The improvement must be the principal thing, and the cutting of the timber the incident only. Any cutting beyond this would be waste and unauthorized.

The timber while standing is a part of the realty, and it can only be sold as the land could be. The land cannot be sold by the Indians, and consequently the timber, until rightfully severed, can not be. It can be rightfully severed for the purpose of improving the land or the better adapting it to convenient occupation, but for no other purpose. When rightfully severed it is no longer a part of the land, and there is no restriction upon its sale. Its severance under such circumstances is, in effect, only a legitimate use of the land. In theory, at least, the land is better and more valuable with the timber off than with it on. It has been improved by the removal. If the timber should be severed for the purpose of sale alone—in other words, if the cutting of the timber were the principal thing and not the incident—then the cutting would be wrongful, and the timber, when cut, become the absolute property of the United States.

These are familiar principles in this country and well settled as applicable to tenants for life and remainder-men. But a tenant for life has all the rights of occupancy in the lands of a remainder-man. The Indians have the same rights in the lands of their reservations. What a tenant for life may do upon the lands of a remainder-man the Indians may do upon their reservations, but no more.

In this case it is not pretended that the timber from which the saw logs were made was cut for the purpose of improving the land. It was not taken from any portion of the land which was occupied or, so far as appears, intended to be occupied for any purpose inconsistent with the continued presence of the timber. It was cut for sale and nothing else. Under such circumstances, when cut, it became the property of the United States absolutely, discharged of any rights of the Indians therein. The cutting was waste, and in accordance with well-settled principles the owner of the fee may seize the timber cut, arrest it by replevin, or proceed in trover for its conversion.

The Indians having only a right of occupancy in the lands, the presumption is against their authority to cut and sell the timber. Every purchaser from them is charged with notice of this presumption. To maintain his title under his purchase it is incumbent on the purchaser to show that the timber was rightfully severed from the land.

That the United States may maintain an action for cutting and carrying away timber from the public lands was decided in Cotton vs. United States. The principles recognized in that case are decisive of the right to maintain this action.

The answer of the court, therefore, to the question propounded by the circuit court is in the affirmative.

During the reading of the decision,

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his inquiry.

Mr. HOAR. Does this document relate to public lands in Hawaii?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that this document has some reference to the conference report on the Indian appropriation or to the Indian appropriation bill. That is the understanding of the Chair. It is being read on application of the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS].

Mr. HOAR. Is that report before the Senate? I do not see any member of the Committee on Foreign Relations in the Senate, and I should like to ask the Senator from Utah what is the pending question?

Mr. RAWLINS. The pending matter is some remarks which I was undertaking to submit to the Senate for its consideration, and I asked the Secretary to read an opinion by the Supreme Court of the United States. He has about completed it. There are only two additional lines.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the decision.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I very much desire the attention of Senators to this matter. It is of far greater significance than the question of the annexation of Hawaii, and I am in favor of such annexation. The opinion of the Supreme Court, which has just been read to the Senate, holds that the Indians upon these reservations have the right of occupancy only. They have just such rights as a tenant for life possesses, and no more. It is held that they have no right to the timber standing upon the land. If they cut it for the purpose of sale, it is waste. It is equally well settled that a tenant for life has no right to open mines or to extract and carry away or sell mineral from the land. That rule is laid down in elementary text-books upon this subject. From Tiedeman on Real Property, I read first, section 74:

In respect to trees.—The tenant has no right to cut down any trees or to injure them in any way beyond the amount he is entitled to as estovers. And at common law certain trees which were used for timber could not be cut for any purpose.

Such is the rule laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case which has just been read. In section 75 this author says:

In respect to minerals and other deposits.—The tenant is not permitted to dig and sell gravel, clay, and other deposits which may be found thereon, or to use the clay for the purpose of making bricks.

In other words, the law is well settled that a person having the mere right of occupancy, like a tenant for life, or like the Indians upon a reservation, has no title to the minerals, or to the timber upon the land. Notwithstanding that such is the well established law defining the interests of the Indians upon these various reservations, it is proposed by the amendment to the Indian appropriation bill to reverse the policy which has heretofore prevailed, to change the title of the Indians from that of mere occupancy, with the rights of a tenant for life, to that of an estate in fee, giving them the right not only to the timber, but to all the minerals within those lands.

Mr. President, in the last report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs I find that the land embraced within these Indian reservations amounts to 82,770,345 acres. Of this vast area 33,074,000 acres are within the Indian Territory. Outside of the Indian Territory there are, therefore, in the United States, located principally within the mining States and Territories of the United States, an area of 50,000,000 acres in round figures.

The policy heretofore inaugurated by acts of Congress looks to the cession by the Indians of the lands within those reservations, amounting thus to some 82,000,000 acres, to the United States, all in excess of what may be needed for allotment. Lands suitable for allotments are agricultural and not mineral lands. The Government of the United States has been in the habit, in the treaties which have been made with these Indians for the cession of their lands, of compensating them for parting with the rights of possession which they possess. If this policy of leasing is adopted and mines of immense value are discovered in these various Indian reservations as the result of the operations of the lessees, which will doubtless disclose mines of valuable minerals worth perhaps many millions of dollars, the question will at once arise as to obtaining a cession of those lands from the Indians.

It will be complained by them or those who may represent them that Congress has recognized their right to these minerals; that they possess the lands in fee. Before any treaty can be obtained for the cession of those lands thus made valuable, containing these minerals, in many cases known to be of immense value, the Indians will demand compensation not only to the full extent of the value of the possession, but of the minerals which may thus be discovered. Before this vast area of land can be reclaimed, before it can be made available for settlement by American citizens, before it can be merged into the mass of property subject to taxation in the various States, the Government, by reason of the adoption of this amendment, will in the future be called upon to expend untold millions of dollars.

This involves a question far, far more important, as pertaining to the future welfare of this nation, than the annexation of the little group of the Hawaiian Islands containing but four or five millions acres of land. It seems strange to me, after the Senate has time and again voted down propositions of this kind, that at this critical moment, the end of the session, when Senators have their attention absorbed by other and more important matters—matters of war, the annexation of Hawaii, and the future policy of the United States in respect to these great exigent questions—this matter, by which it is proposed to part with the right of the Government to all the minerals, is sprung upon us unexpectedly and is sought to be forced through the Senate and the other House.

Mr. President, the motive which inspires the springing of this matter upon the attention of Congress at this time is not difficult to fathom. Speculators have got into these Indian reservations and by contrivances, corrupt means, have obtained the consent of the Indian councils referred to in this provision, by which large areas of lands are to be leased to them if they can procure their ratification. I do not believe that the Secretary of the Interior is favorable to this provision, but I am certain that the people of the United States, I am certain that the members of the Senate and the House, if their attention is brought to the matter, if they consider the vast consequences which are to follow from the enactment of this measure, are not prepared to make a cession to these Indians occupying these lands outside of the Indian Territory, aggregating, in round numbers, 50,000,000 acres, land which they do not improve, barely possess, roam over, where at the present time habitation by citizens of the United States is excluded—I take it that we are not prepared to make a cession to some 25,000 Indians, and they do not, I believe, exceed that number upon all these lands, all the minerals within this vast area of that section of our country.

Yet that is precisely what this proposition means. As occupants of the lands, with the rights of tenants for life, it is settled by the decision of the Supreme Court that the Indians have no estate or interest in the minerals. If they have no estate or interest in the minerals, then they have nothing to lease, and the lessee would derive no higher right than they possess.

These minerals do not belong to the Secretary of the Interior, and he has no title in the minerals, discovered or undiscovered, to part with to the lessee. Therefore, to enact this provision is to acknowledge the right, to concede the right by act of Congress, to grant the right to 25,000 Indians occupying or possessing 50,000,000 acres of land to all the minerals that may be found therein.

The Senate ought never to consent to the adoption of this report. As I understand the rule, we have not the right to move to refer it back with instructions to the conferees to exclude this provision, and the only remedy is to vote for the rejection of the report and thus throw it back to the conferees in order that they may reconsider it. I call the attention of the Senate to the matter at this time in order that at an early moment the Senate may have an opportunity of voting upon this report and to reject it for the reasons which I now give, so that the conferees may have time to reconsider it. If we wait until the last moment, until these other questions which are now pending are disposed of, and if then this matter comes up, there will be little or no time in which it can be considered by the conferees or the members of either branch of Congress.

Mr. President, I have the various provisions of law relating to the rights, so far as they have been recognized by acts of Congress, embodied in chronological order, which I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, without reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

[See appendix.]

Mr. RAWLINS. In the remarks which I have thus far made I have made no allusion to the mineral lands within the District of Alaska. I am informed that there are many millions of acres in that District possessed by the Indians and within the limits of Indian reservations. If this provision be enacted into law, it would not only be a recognition of an estate in fee of the Indians to the lands, 50,000,000 acres outside of the Indian Territory and within the limits of the United States, but to the vast areas in Alaska which are possessed by these Indians in the form of reservations.

With this statement, regretting merely that more Senators are not present in order that they may understand the gravity of the question which is thus presented to them, I submit the matter.

APPENDIX.

SEC. 2116. No purchase, grant, lease, or other conveyance of lands, or of any title or claim thereto, from any Indian nation or tribe of Indians shall be of any validity in law or equity unless the same be made by treaty or convention entered into pursuant to the Constitution. Every person who, not being employed under the authority of the United States, attempts to negotiate such treaty or convention, directly or indirectly, or to treat with any such nation or tribe of Indians for the title or purchase of any lands by them held or claimed, is liable to a penalty of $1,000. The agent of any State who may be present at any treaty held with Indians under the authority of the United States, in the presence and with the approbation of the commissioner of the United States appointed to hold the same, may, however, propose to, and adjust with, the Indians the compensation to be made for their claim to lands within such State which shall be extinguished by treaty.

And provided further, That at any time after lands have been allotted to all the Indians of any tribe as herein provided, or sooner, if in the opinion of the President it shall be for the best interests of said tribe, it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with such Indian tribe for the purchase and release by said tribe, in conformity with the treaty or statute under which such reservation is held, of such portions of its reservation not allotted as such tribe shall, from time to time, consent to sell, on such terms and conditions as shall be considered just and equitable between the United States and said tribe of Indians, which purchase shall not be complete until ratified by Congress, and the form and manner of executing such release shall also be prescribed by Congress: Provided, however, That all lands adapted to agriculture, with or without irrigation, so sold or released to the United States by any Indian tribe shall be held by the United States for the sole purpose of securing homes to actual settlers and shall be disposed of by the United States to actual and bona fide settlers only in tracts not exceeding 160 acres to any one person, on such terms as Congress shall prescribe, subject to grants which Congress may make in aid of education.

And provided further, That no patents shall issue therefor except to the person so taking the same as and for a homestead, or his heirs, and after the expiration of five years' occupancy thereof as such homestead; and any conveyance of said lands so taken as a homestead or any contract touching the same or lien thereon, created prior to the date of such patent, shall be null and void.

SEC. 3. That whenever it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that, by reason of age or other disability, any allotment under the provisions of said act, or any other act or treaty, can not personally and with benefit to himself occupy or improve his allotment, or any part thereof, the same may be leased upon such terms, regulations, and conditions as shall be prescribed by such Secretary for a term not exceeding three years for farming or grazing or ten years for mining purposes.

NOTE.—(1) The quantities specified in the act of 1887, February 8, chapter 110, section 1 (24 Stat. L., 388), that section being superseded in terms by this, are as follows:

To each head of a family, one-quarter of a section;
To each single person over 18 years of age, one-eighth of a section;
To each orphan child under 18 years of age, one-eighth of a section; and
To each other single person under 18 years now living, or who may be born prior to the date of the order of the President directing an allotment of the lands embraced in any reservation, one-sixteenth of a section.
Provided, That where lands are occupied by Indians who have bought and paid for the same, and which lands are not needed for farming or agricultural purposes and are not desired for individual allotment, the same may be leased by authority of the council, speaking for such Indians, for a period not to exceed five years for grazing or ten years for mining purposes, in such quantities and upon such terms and conditions as the agent in charge of such reservation may recommend, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Par. 5. That whenever it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that by reason of age, disability, or inability any allottee of Indian lands under this or former acts of Congress can not personally and with benefit to himself occupy or improve his allotment, or any part thereof, the same may be leased upon such terms, regulations, and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary for a term not exceeding five years for farming or grazing purposes or ten years for mining or business purposes: Provided further, That the surplus lands of any tribe may be leased for farming purposes by the council of such tribe under the same rules and regulations and for the same term of years as is now allowed in the case of leases for grazing purposes.

Par. 5 (4). That whenever it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that by reason of age, disability, or inability any allottee of Indian lands under this or former acts of Congress can not personally and with benefit to himself occupy or improve his allotment, or any part thereof, the same may be leased, upon such terms, regulations, and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary, for a term not exceeding five years for farming or grazing purposes or ten years for mining or business purposes.

Par. 6 (6). That whenever it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that by reason of age, disability, or inability any allottee of Indian lands under this or former acts of Congress can not personally and with benefit to himself occupy or improve his allotment, or any part thereof, the same may be leased, in the discretion of the Secretary, upon such terms, regulations, and conditions as shall be prescribed by him, for a term not exceeding five years for farming or grazing purposes and ten years for mining or business purposes.

To enable the President to cause, under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians," such Indian reservations as in his judgment are advantageous for agricultural and grazing purposes to be surveyed, or resurveyed, for the purposes of said act, and to complete the allotment of the same, including the necessary clerical work incident thereto in the field and in the Office of Indian Affairs, and delivery of trust patents, so far as allotments shall have been selected under said act, $30,000: Provided, That hereafter when it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that by reason of age or disability any allottee of Indian lands under this or former acts of Congress can not personally and with benefit to himself occupy or improve his allotment, or any part thereof, the same may be leased, in the discretion of the Secretary, upon such terms, regulations, and conditions as shall be prescribed by him, for a term not exceeding three years for farming or grazing purposes or five years for mining or business purposes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I undertook to show yesterday that it was contrary to our theory of government, contrary to our customs and precedents as a people, to acquire territory not contiguous to our own, and inhabited by an inferior race of people. Those who favor a different policy now and who favor a departure from those customs and practices that have created the proudest pages of our history say it is manifest destiny. Throughout all recorded time manifest destiny has been the murderer of men. It has committed more crimes, done more to oppress and wrong the inhabitants of the world than any other attribute to which mankind has fallen heir.

Manifest destiny has caused the strong to rob the weak and has reduced the weak to slavery. Manifest destiny built the feudal castle and supplied the castle with its serfs. Manifest destiny impelled republics that have heretofore existed and perished to go forth and conquer weaker races and to subject their people to slavery, to impose taxation against their will, and to inflict governments odious to them. Manifest destiny is simply the cry of the strong in justification of their plunder of the weak. This cry sent forth the nations of Europe to divide among them the weaker nations of Asia and of Africa. This cry has allowed Great Britain to gather the harvests on the banks of the Nile, to lay burdens upon the people of Egypt unusual, intolerable, worse than that of individual slavery.

It is this cry of manifest destiny which causes the guns of Great Britain to echo daily around the world and excuses the massacre and assassination of the weaker people of the earth. Her operations in Africa she justifies by this specious plea. During the last seven years she has killed twenty or thirty thousand of the people of Africa, bombarded towns filled with women and children, and herself has lost in this unequal contest but seven men—all this in the name of manifest destiny. So colonies have been planted by the nations of Europe. They have gone forth to conquer the weaker nations of the world. But the result upon themselves has not been such as to induce us to emulate their example.

Great Britain to-day, with all her mighty power and her vast possessions, has not conferred upon the people of England the comfort and satisfaction and happiness which should come with a proper and honest national policy. One-tenth of her people are paupers. Two out of three of her laborers who reach the age of 60 years either are or have been paupers. Two hundred and twenty-two thousand of her people own all the property. More than two-thirds of the people of Great Britain have no property at all. This is a result of her course in working out to its legitimate conclusion the theory of manifest destiny.

If we pursue it, if we annex the weaker nations of the world and undertake to govern them, such will be the result with us. If we annex nations to which we can not apply our system of government, if we acquire territory in the Tropics where men can not live who are capable of self-government, then republican forms can not exist in those distant possessions. The vigorous blood, the best blood, the young men of our land, will be drawn away to mix with inferior races and to hold them in subjection. Gradually the reflex action of the conquest and government of these inferior races by tyranny, by a new form of government unknown to us, will work its effect upon our own people, and free institutions will disappear from this land as well as from the land we conquer and undertake to hold in subjection. Why should we change our policy as a people? Why should we go back upon our history and our past? What argument can be presented in behalf of an abandonment of the principles and policies that have made us a great nation?

Is there an exception in the case of these islands in the Pacific? I will not go into their history, but I will allude briefly to their locality, to their population, and their climate. The Hawaiian Islands are fifteen in number. Five of them are inhabited. They lie between longitude 154° and 160° west, and between latitude 18° and 22° north. The island of Neehau contains 97 square miles and a population of fourteen families. It has an area of 63,000 acres. It is the first of the group to the westward that has any population. It is owned by a citizen of Great Britain, a New Zealander, who bought it from the King many years ago and uses it for grazing purposes. Upon it are raised from thirty to forty thousand sheep, and their wool is admitted to the United States free of duty, although we impose a high duty upon wool from every other country in the world. Certainly no American interest is promoted by our method of dealing with the island of Neehau.

Kauai, the next island, has 560 square miles, and contains 377,000 acres of land, and a population of 15,392. It is owned almost exclusively by German planters, who are raising sugar by the employment of Asiatic labor, and their products are imported to the United States free of duty. There is no American plantation upon this island. Some of the stock in the German companies is owned by the so-called American citizens of Hawaii, but no American citizen owns any property on this island whatever. Yet the people of the United States are taxed to sustain the remission of duties to the extent of millions of dollars, and the only purpose served through this favoritism is that their products come in free and they profit enormously on the one side through an abatement of duty on our part and through the medium of contract or slave labor on the part of the planters.

Oahu is an island of 600 square miles, containing 384,000 acres, and it has a population of 40,205 people. On this island is situated the city of Honolulu, containing about 30,000 people. The island also contains many sugar plantations, owned almost entirely by natives of the Hawaiian Islands, men whose fathers or grandfathers were citizens of the United States, who were born on the island, whose ancestors went there to confer upon those people the blessings of civilization, and whose sons have beaten them out of their property and out of their Government.

Molokai is an island of 270 square miles, containing 172,800 acres, with a population of 2,307, 1,200 of whom are lepers. This island is a leper colony. On one side it is fertile. There are one or two sugar plantations, but the island is given up almost entirely to the custody and care of lepers. They are isolated, and have been placed upon this island because the disease is contagious.

I notice, as one of the assets paraded by the advocates of annexation, the cost of this leper plant. It is given as one reason why we should annex the island that this is a part of the property we will acquire if the Government takes Hawaii. It is a wonderful, a most desirable, asset! There are 1,200 lepers, and as an inducement for us to accept the island these enterprising sons of missionaries throw in among the assets the value of this leper colony plant.

Maui is an island of 760 square miles, containing 467,000 acres, with a population of 17,726, engaged in the production of sugar. This island is exceedingly fertile, and there are vast areas yet uncultivated and capable of producing sugar, and upon it there is considerable in the way of American interests. Upon this island are the plantations of Spreckels and his boy, and the stock in those companies is quite largely held in this country.

Lanai is an island of 150 square miles, containing 96,000 acres and has a population of 105 people. There is no American interest there. It is a grazing island.

Hawaii, which is the principal island of the group, has an area of 4,310 square miles, or 2,649,000 acres. Its population is 33,385. This island, like all the others, is a product of volcanic action. They were thrown up from the bed of the Pacific. The island of Hawaii is 14,000 feet in height, and has upon it one of the greatest volcanoes in the world. The crater upon the summit, which is 18,000 feet above the sea, and Kilauea, the crater upon its side, being 4,000 feet above the sea, are always active. This island is exceedingly rich. There are vast areas of tropical vegetation capable of producing great quantities of the products of tropical lands.

The total area of all these islands is 6,677 square miles, or 4,208,000 acres. The Hawaiian Islands are within the Tropics. They are capable of producing only the products of the Tropics. They are susceptible of great development beyond that which has already occurred. They are capable of maintaining, in my opinion, three or four times the population that they now possess.

It was argued by the friends of annexation when the debate opened upon the treaty presented for the annexation of these islands that they were enormously rich; that they would produce a valuable trade, and would therefore confer a great benefit upon the people of the United States. I am willing to accept that statement.

Now it is argued that we only need a coaling station and that the islands are barren, volcanic rocks, not capable of population, and therefore that question is unimportant, hardly worthy of consideration. We will, however, go into that subject farther along.

If these islands contained a population as dense as that of Iowa to-day, they would be occupied by 240,000 people; if a population as dense as that of Illinois, they would have 460,000 people.

But, Mr. President, tropical countries produce and maintain populations much more dense than countries in the temperate zone, because it takes less to clothe and feed and care for their people, because their demands and wants are less, and because of the wonderful food-producing power of the soil of the Tropics.

The island of Java has an area no larger than the State of Iowa, and it contains 24,000,000 people. It is within the Tropics. It is reasonable to suppose that the Hawaiian Islands will maintain a population in proportion to their area equal to those of other tropical countries.

But what kind of a population, Mr. President? The more of them the worse. What kind of a population is it, then, that we propose to admit into this country? But our friends who are favoring annexation say American laborers will go over to Hawaii to till the soil and gain easy subsistence. There is not a colony of European or Anglo-Saxon laborers within 23° of the equator anywhere on the globe. No English, no French, no Germans, no Scandinavians, no Russians, none of the people whose blood flows in the veins of our people have colonized any portion of the globe within 23° of the equator. American enterprise and Anglo-Saxon thrift seek the region in the northern hemisphere or the southern hemisphere, if you will, between the thirtieth and fifty-fifth degrees of north or south latitude. They will not go elsewhere.

Is it claimed that these people are not colonists; that they have not gone forth to conquer the world and settle new countries? On the contrary, they have planted their colonies around the world, though never within this tropical belt, for the reason that they do not flourish there.

Jamaica has been an English colony for two hundred years. Jamaica has 4,200 square miles, two-thirds as much as the islands of Hawaii. It lies within the Tropics. It has a population of 633,000 people. How many Englishmen; how many Europeans? Including the garrison, including the officers, including the attachés of the Government, 14,600, and that is all. The rest are blacks. This island lies within the Tropics. It has an elevation of 7,000 feet. It is one of the most healthful of all the tropical islands.

That which may be said of it may be also said of Hawaii. And yet the European will not locate there. He goes to New Zealand, to southern Australia, to Canada. He abides where the frost chills man's blood and where clothing made of the wool of the sheep helps to keep him warm. I think you can lay it down as a proposition which can not be refuted that self-government and independence and high civilization are only embraced by people who find it necessary to wear warm clothes and who feel the tingle of the frost in their veins during a portion of a year.

The Leeward Islands have 701 square miles. They have 123,000 people, 5,000 of whom are Europeans. It is another English colony.

British Guiana, on the north coast of South America, has 109,000 square miles and a population of 280,000 people—negroes, contract laborers, coolies from India raising sugar, with 2,593 Europeans, including the garrison.

Haiti has a population of 600,000 people. It has 10,204 square miles. The language is French. Nine-tenths of the population are negroes, and the rest are mulattoes. You can say a thousand things about Haiti, about its healthful climate, about its wonderful productiveness, about its desirability. White men will not live there because of the climate.

New Guinea, a British colony, lies between 8° and 10° of the equator, has 88,000 square miles and a population of 350,000 people, 250 of whom are Europeans.

New Zealand has an area of 104,000 square miles. It is near New Guinea. It is between the thirtieth and thirty-fifth degree of south latitude, and therefore outside of the Tropics. I give this illustration for the purpose of showing that it is a question of climate whether the white race will occupy a locality or not. Its population is 638,000 Europeans, 41,000 natives, and 4,400 Chinamen. It is near New Guinea. It is in the Temperate Zone. So the Anglo-Saxon went there and settled, and he has built up a government freer, in my opinion, and better than ours, because untrammelled by interference, untrammelled by older influences. This colony was planted later than ours, and, unhindered by greed, by a combination of circumstances which have oppressed us and the English people, the people of New Zealand have worked out what Anglo-Saxon men untrammelled will always work out—a free government participated in by all the people. In my opinion they have better laws. In fact, they furnish about the only example of a first-class English government on the globe to-day.

The Straits Settlements are within the Tropics. There is there a population of 512,000 natives. Singapore, the commercial city, is a great city, one of the emporiums of the East, right under the equator. It is on the route from the Suez Canal to China and Japan. It contains 512,000 natives, 6,500 Europeans and Americans. The Europeans are the English garrison and the English officeholders. The few Americans who are there are engaged in trade and business with the East, and they go away in the summer. They go up to Japan; they go to the health resorts of that delightful country to escape the evil effects of a tropical climate.

It was supposed that the French people would occupy the Tropics, but they do not. The Latin race, more or less, has occupied the Tropics, but the frost of winter has touched the veins of the Frenchman. It has overcome the tendency of his Latin blood to live within the Tropics, and although they have conquered Tonquin, with 2,000,000 of people, and Cochin China, with 3,000,000 more, there are only 3,000 Frenchmen in the whole country, including the officers and the garrison. The rest of the troops are natives.

Martinique is an island on the north coast of South America, of which we have heard much of late. Martinique has 187,000 people, and only 1,807 Frenchmen and Europeans of all classes. The balance of the population are blacks.

French Congo has a population of 7,000,000, and only 300 Europeans, besides the garrison.

So it goes the world over. Look where you will, tropical countries are not inhabited by the people of our race.

There are no American laborers in Hawaii, and there never will be. Annex the islands if you will. A number of American laborers who were taken there years ago to work upon sugar plantations have abandoned the business, and to-day not one is employed in any of their tropical industries. Between 1895 and 1897 even the eighty-seven Americans who were put down in the census of Hawaii as being engaged in the sugar industry as employees have disappeared entirely. They turn them off. They were foremen, they were bookkeepers, but the Jap came in, skilled as he is in every art and in every business. He would work for $12 a month, and the American who was being paid $50 and $75 was dismissed. So even in Hawaii, since 1895, every American employed as a laborer on these plantations has been dismissed and his place filled by an Asiatic.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I think the facts now being stated by the Senator from South Dakota ought to be heard by the Senate. It is obvious that a quorum is not present, and I ask for a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Senator from Texas suggests the lack of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon,	Faulkner,	McBride,	Pritchard,
Bate,	Foraker,	McEnery,	Rosch,
Berry,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	Mallory,	Shoup,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The Chair recognizes the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, it is argued by the friends of annexation that these islands, although in the Tropics, have a very salubrious climate and that Americans flourish and grow and reproduce their kind and are wonderfully happy. Without investigation they give the climate of these islands an average temperature and say that the trade winds have modified it so that it is an exception to the rule of countries within the Tropics. This subject will bear investigation on the part of those who oppose annexation, and I propose to show the temperatures of various tropical countries in comparison with Hawaii to see whether the claim is well founded. I quote from the Hawaiian Annual, by Thrum, a book issued in the interests of annexation, containing many falsehoods in furtherance of the designs of the gang of sugar planters who own that country. Therefore statements upon subjects which are against them can at least be supposed not to contain untruths which are to their disadvantage. It is the only possible indorsement the book is entitled to from anybody, and, with this apology, I quote from it:

For seven years the average temperature of Honolulu, which is one of the most northern points in these islands, was 74° 32' (for the whole seven years, taking them altogether) and the thermometer ranged from 54° to 88°. I have not the observations from the other portions. The main portion of these islands is embraced in the Island of Hawaii, which is very much nearer the equator and, along the coast, undoubtedly very much hotter.

Honolulu being on the southwest side of a range of mountains, the trade winds blowing from the northeast lose their moisture against the face of these mountains. Consequently the climate of that locality is dry for the Tropics, but its temperature ranges about the same as that of tropical countries generally. The range is from 54° to 88° and the average is 74° 32'.

We will take Havana, Cuba. For ten years the mean temperature was 76.8°; the range was from 49° to 100°. It gets slightly colder and slightly hotter in Havana. That is no indication of unhealthiness, but the contrary, for in Dakota it ranges between 40° below and 110° above. It is the even temperature, the continuing temperature at the same range that makes these countries unhealthy and unfit for the habitation of the white race. At San Fernando, Cuba, the average is 75°; the highest range was 87°, and the lowest 51°. In Hawaii the highest range was 88°, the lowest 54°, average 74.32°; while at San Fernando, Cuba, the range was from 51° to 87°, and the average was 75°. The range in Kingston, Jamaica, was, lowest 66°, highest 89°; there being only 1° of difference between that and Hawaii, and the average was 78°.

San Juan, Puerto Rico, another tropical country, and almost the same distance from the equator as the Hawaiian Islands, the average was 78.9°.

The climate, then, of Hawaii is not different from the climate of every tropical country. The climate of tropical countries is pretty even throughout the year. The thermometer ranges but little. There is scarcely a tropical country on the globe where the thermometer ranges above 88°, but the continuous heat, the perpetual heat, the average heat from one year's end to the other, of 73° or 75° or 76°, which is about the average of every tropical country on the globe, is what tells upon the people who are born in the north. Therefore our aggressive, energetic, active, dominating race will never inhabit those islands. If they would, why have they not gone there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 9698) for the restoration of annuities to the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. If there be no objection, such will be the order of the Senate. The Chair hears none. The Senator from South Dakota will proceed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, in 1875 we made a treaty with these people by which we stimulated an industry in such a manner and to such an extent as no other industry was ever stimulated in the world. We admitted their sugar free of duty. We remitted in duties more than it cost to produce the sugar. It is claimed that we did it in the interest of the missionaries who had gone there to convert the people to Christianity and, having abandoned their job, had proceeded to steal their land and steal their Government. Did more Americans go? The climate had no attractions for them. The population of Americans in the islands has not increased materially under this wonderful stimulus. Let us see what is the nationality of the inhabitants of the islands. Is it desirable; does manifest destiny compel us to take in such people?

In Hawaii in 1890 there were 84,436 natives; in 1896 there were 31,019. Of part Hawaiians in 1890 there were 6,186; in 1896 there were 8,485. Of Americans in 1890 there were 1,928; in 1896 there were 8,086.

Now, let me explain these figures. That shows a great increase. The fellows who are running that Government are the shrewdest lot I ever knew. Their fathers had no communion with the devil, and their sons have to have enough of that sort of fellowship to make up for the whole family. They have taken in the census of 1890 only those Americans who they claimed were American born, and have left out the 820 of American blood who were Hawaiian born and Hawaiian citizens.

Then they made an extra class in 1890, and they said Hawaiian-born foreigners, but in 1896 they took all the Hawaiian-born Americans and put them into the class of Americans. So it was with the British, the Germans, French, and Norwegians. The scheme was to make it appear that there had been a wonderful increase in the population of Europeans from 1890 to 1896, when in reality there has been no increase in the population of Americans in those islands, except what was furnished by the fellows they took there from San Francisco to arm in order that they might maintain their tyranny after they overthrew the Government in 1893.

They say in 1890 there were 1,344 British; in 1896, 2,350; of Germans in 1890 there were 1,034; in 1893, 1,432; of French in 1890 there were 70; in 1896, 101; of Norwegians in 1890 there were 227; in 1896, 378.

So, much less than 3 per cent of the population is of American descent. About 4 per cent of the population is British, German, French, and Norwegian.

Of Portuguese in 1890 there were 8,602; in 1896, 15,191. But that apparent increase of Portuguese is fictitious.

The real facts of the matter are that in 1890 the Portuguese-born in the islands under the head of Hawaiian they classed at 7,495, while in 1896 they classed all the Portuguese-born in the island the same as they did the Americans, under the head of Portuguese, making an apparent large increase, although there was no immigration of Portuguese to the islands during that time any more than there was of Americans. There were of Japanese in 1890, 12,360; in 1896, 24,407; there were of Chinese, in 1890, 15,301; in 1896, 21,616; of Polynesians there were 583 in 1890 and 455 in 1896; of other nationalities there were 419 in 1890 and 600 in 1896; of Hawaiian-born foreigners, none in 1890 and 7,495 in 1890.

It will be noticed that there is an enormous increase of the Asiatic population. If you look at their commerce, you will find that there has been an enormous increase of commerce between these islands and Asia and a decrease of commerce between these islands and the United States since 1890. Why? Because the population is Asiatic and they want nothing that we produce. They live upon rice and they wear different clothes from what we wear. There is nothing that the United States produces that the laborers of those islands want. They are the dominant population, and therefore the dream of enormous commerce fritters away. But what kind of people are they? The same kind of people you would expect in the Tropics. What is the difference between the number of males and females? That is interesting. Is a population where there is a disparity between the sexes desirable? Here are the figures:

Table of sex, by nationality.
[From latest census returns, 1896.]

Nationality.	Hawaiian-born of foreign parents.			Whole population.
	Males.	Females.	Total.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Hawaiian				16,360	14,620	31,019
Part Hawaiian				4,249	4,295	8,485
American	461	419	820	1,975	1,111	3,086
British	332	360	712	1,406	844	2,250
German	232	298	530	866	563	1,432
French	10	16	26	50	45	101
Norwegian	71	91	162	216	162	378

Here you notice a wonderful disparity between the males and females, Americans, British, Norwegians, French, and Germans; and if you look over the population of every tropical country in the world, you will find the same disparity; you will find a preponderance of males among the whites. In other words, our race does not live in that climate; it can not. I have investigated a large number of tropical countries, and find as to the character and sexes of the population of Europeans, as a rule, there are from one-fourth to two-thirds more males than females. It seems to me that that is comment enough. But let us see what is worse.

Nationality.	Hawaiian-born of foreign parents.			Whole population.
	Males.	Females.	Total.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Portuguese	3,006	3,353	6,959	8,202	6,989	15,191
Japanese	1,054	1,084	2,078	19,212	5,195	24,407
Chinese	1,204	1,000	2,204	19,167	2,449	21,616
South Sea Islanders	21	25	46	321	134	455
Other nationalities	87	89	176	448	152	600
Total	7,056	6,675	13,733	72,517	36,503	109,020

This shows a preponderance of two to one; twice as many males as females. That is the kind of a population you propose to admit in this Union on an equal footing with the rest of us. I will print with my remarks the next table, which shows the difference in population and its nationalities since 1853. The disparity, so far as the Europeans are concerned, is the same.

The table referred to is as follows:

* There was no complete division of nationalities noted in the census of 1866.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In 1897 the estimated population of the Hawaiian Islands had increased from 100,020 to 115,978, as will be seen from the following table:

Estimated population of Hawaiian Islands July 1, 1897.

	Natives.	Chinese.	Japanese.	Portuguese.	All other foreigners.	Total.

* Less 3, excess of departures in 1896.

Over 6,000 people were added to the population of those islands in 1897. Did they come from the United States, hoping to be annexed? Not at all, Mr. President. They came from Japan; they came as slave laborers, contract laborers. The percentage of Americans down there is less now than it was last year; and while their number has not increased at all, the Asiatics have increased 6,000. I went to these islands last summer, and on the boat on which I traveled there were 500 Japanese, 50 of whom were women and 420 men; and they were contract laborers.

Now, let us see who toils upon the plantations. Here is the nationality of males by the census of 1896 and the number of laborers on the sugar estates in 1895 and 1896. I append a table giving the figures.

Nationality of males, by census of 1896, and number of laborers on sugar estates in 1895.

Nationality.	Males, by census.	Males on estates.
		1895.	1896.
Hawaiians, full and part blood.....	20,648	1,584	84

Why is it that there were employed 84 Americans on sugar estates in 1895, and that none were so employed in 1896? Why is it they were discharged? Because the Japs do the work for $12.50 a month, and the Americans get from $50 to $75 a month. So the American was not wanted. The men who talk so much of their love of country and the prospect of American laborers being imported to Hawaii discharged their American employees and filled their places with Asiatics.

There were in 1890, mostly laborers—being Japanese, Chinese, and Portuguese—of Portuguese 8,202. I will show further that it appears that they discharged the German and British laborers, as well as the American laborers, and for the same reason; and yet they tell us an American community is going to grow up on those islands and American labor is going there to find employment!

It appears from the table that in 1895 there were 2,490 Portuguese employed upon the sugar plantations, and in 1896, one year after, 2,268 were employed upon the sugar plantations. Why? They were discharged and their places were filled by Asiatic laborers, coming in under contract; and before I get through I will show what that contract is.

Of the Japanese there were 19,213 males in all the islands. In 1896, 11,584 were employed upon the sugar plantations, and in 1895, 12,893. That shows who took the places of the Europeans who had been previously employed. Of the Chinese there were 19,167 males upon the islands; and in 1895 there were employed of this number upon the sugar plantations 3,847; and the next year there were 6,289 Chinamen employed upon the sugar estates; and yet we are told about American people and American interests and American labor; and that is one of the arguments set forth by those advocating the acquisition of this "paradise of the Pacific," inhabited by the males of the human race!

Of South Sea Islanders there were, as will be seen by the table, 321, according to the census of 1896, upon all the islands. Of those 133 were employed upon the sugar estates in 1895 and 115 in 1896; of other nationalities 720 were by the census upon all the islands, and in 1895 there were 97 employed, and in 1896 600 were employed—an increase of laborers employed upon sugar plantations from 1895 to 1896 of 3,660.

This is a comment made by Mr. Joseph O. Carter; and I quote the figures from this same book, the Hawaiian Annual, that the American, British, and German people do not find estate work desirable, except as skilled laborers. The American farm hand would find estate work most uninviting.

The figures also prove that the sugar planters find it more profitable to import new laborers on three-years' contracts than to engage labor already on the ground, the reason being that the newcomer works for $12.50 per month, while the old hand demands a higher wage.

The smaller percentage of Chinese laborers on estates is due to the fact that the Japanese is the cheaper man. Japanese are coming in by every steamer from the Orient, and must continue to come or higher wages must prevail.

The number of laborers on sugar estates in 1896 (the year of the census) could not be procured at the Immigration Bureau, presumably because the figures would make a worse showing. I subsequently procured the figures from Thurman's Annual, which came out after that letter was written.

I have here a table showing the percentages:

In 1873 each thousand of the population was composed of the following elements: Natives, 835; Chinese, 102; Americans, 22; English, 15; Germans, 5; and other nationalities, 21. According to the census of this year the proportions are as follows—

This was in 1896—

The natives have decreased to 302; the Japanese, who did not appear separately in the earlier census, are now represented by 223—

The reason the Japanese do not appear in the census previous to 1878 was because they were not there when we made the reciprocity treaty with Hawaii and agreed to admit her sugar free in 1876, which stimulated the industry which has peopled those islands with Asiatics and not with Americans—the Chinese have increased to 198; the Portuguese, another new element, have 130; the Americans have 28; the English, 30, and the Germans 13. As a result of the policy of protecting the foreign planters pursued by this country, the American population has increased less rapidly than any of the others, and the classes that are not likely ever to purchase American goods have increased out of all proportion to the others.

Now, let us see what kind of a population this is. We propose to adopt or accept along with these islands its national debt of $4,000,000. One million two hundred thousand dollars of this national debt was incurred to encourage contract labor to go to the islands. Let us see what is the character of these contract laborers. This testimony which I shall read throws some light upon contract laborers:

TESTIMONY OF CLAUS SPRECKELS.

Q. Suppose a "contract" laborer is idling in the field, what do you do?

A. We dock him; we give him only one-half or three-quarters of a day; and if he keeps it up, we resort to the law and have him arrested for refusing to work.

This is the Republic we are going to annex to our country, and this is a law under which that Republic exists! We fought one of the greatest wars of modern times to overthrow slavery. After having done that and having incurred a national debt of enormous proportions, we propose to add slavery to the great free Republic. This matter grows worse as you look into it.

Q. What do you accomplish by putting him in jail?

A. For the first offense he is ordered back to work, and he has to (eventually) pay the cost of court. If he refuses to obey orders, he is arrested again and a light fine is inflicted, which the planter can pay and take it out of his pay, or else he is put on the road to work. For the third offense he is likely to get three months imprisonment.

And that is a law of this so-called missionary Republic, and that will be one of the laws after our Hawaiian neighbors come into the United States, because we provide that their laws shall continue in force until we enact new laws. So we adopt slavery and all; and yet Senators are crazy to press this question in the midst of war, to take advantage of the patriotic sentiments of our people and restore slavery to this country.

These contracts provide for compelling the laborer to work faithfully by fines and damage suits brought by the planters against them, with the right on the part of the planter to deduct the damages and cost of suit out of the laborer's wages. They also provide for compelling the laborer to remain with the planter during the contract term. They are sanctioned by law and enforced by civil remedies and penal laws.—Blount's report.

Then this question is asked, and this is also a part of the testimony in Blount's report, which he took in investigating this subject:

Q. Those sugar planters who are declaring themselves in favor of "annexation," how do they look at the labor question in connection with "annexation?"

A. They think the United States will make a different law for the islands. If they could not get [cheap] labor, they don't want annexation.

Q. But they are satisfied they will get such legislation?

The proposition is to appoint a commission; and the same interest which was able to accomplish this reciprocity treaty, which has cost us $72,000,000, has also been able to perpetuate and continue that treaty, thus plundering the taxpayers of our country of $10,000,000 per annum, will be pretty nearly able to secure what they want.

Someone has said that the sugar trust is opposed to annexation. So far as I am concerned I should think there need be no fear of the opponents of annexation acting with the sugar trust, when the chief champions of the sugar trust in this body array themselves on that side of the question; and so long as they continue the fierce advocates of annexation I shall conclude that there is no possible danger of my acting with the sugar trust. Here is more of this evidence:

Q. Is it your impression that the calculation of all Hawaiian sugar planters, who are in favor of "annexation," believe the United States will modify their laws against "contract" labor, so that they can maintain a system of "contract" labor in the Hawaiian Islands?

A. I would not say contract labor. They say we may have to give up "contract" labor, but we can get all the labor we want from Japan.

Q. How?

A. They say we can send an agent there and send money, and he can send "labor" to Hawaii, and when it is here then they can make a "contract."

Q. They think in that way the planters can evade the labor laws of the United States?

A. Yes; they think they can get around it. * * *

President Dole said to me: "I have a belief that the United States will give us a separate law, so that we can get laborers here."

That is in the testimony taken by Mr. Blount, on page 975; and it will be found in House Executive Document No. 1, part 2, Fifty-third Congress, third session.

Labor Commissioner Fitzgerald, of California, who was down there last year, came back and made a report showing that American laborers could live there. Here is a part of his statement:

I have seen 20,000 barefooted laborers, half of whom work under a penal contract; I have seen rewards offered for their arrest when they violated their contract and deserted the plantation, with their number printed across their photograph in convict style.

These are the people we propose to admit to this Republic, and the men who enacted those laws, the sons of the missionaries, who are the government down there to-day, are the men who are lauded upon this floor as the highest types of American manhood, and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] says they have the best government he ever saw. The Senator from Alabama fought for several years to maintain slavery in this country, and perhaps that has something to do with his opinion. In his opinion a government that is in favor of human slavery is the best government on earth.

I wish to have the Secretary read an editorial from the Honolulu Independent of Friday, November 19, 1897, headed "Slavery in Hawaii."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Hardly a week goes by without reports of serious labor troubles reaching the Honolulu papers. The unchecked and indiscriminate influx of Asiatics serving as penal contract laborers has reached a point where the sugar planters begin to realize that there are dangerous squalls ahead and that plantations eventually will go up in flames to satisfy the cry for vengeance of the ignorant coolies, who think that they are being ill used and ill treated by their employers, and who are justified in their belief according to all fair-minded men with experience of plantation life and methods.

As stated, a Japanese laborer shipped by the Ewa plantation claims that he was assaulted by an overseer, who fractured his arm. The Jap, who has arrived recently and does not understand English, was advised by his more experienced countrymen to call upon the district judge and appeal to the strong hand of the Hawaiian law. The poor devil was, of course, prohibited from leaving the plantation by his white "bosses." Then he got angry, and, after a palaver with his "gang," all decided to quit work and go to Honolulu to see the representative of their Government. Eighty Japanese set out for Honolulu, but were stopped at Pearl City by employees of the plantation, who started to reason with the men. In the meantime the agents of the Ewa Sugar Company, Messrs. Castle & Cooke, had been apprised of the trouble, and at their request Mr. Chester Doyle, the official court interpreter of the Japanese language, proceeded to Ewa to investigate and, if possible, prevent further disturbances.

Mr. Doyle has had great experience in dealing with Japanese laborers "on strike," and at Pearl City he called the men together and explained to them that they were committing an unlawful act by leaving work to follow their injured comrade, and that they ought to return to the plantation at once, while the man who claimed to have been assaulted could proceed to the proper authorities with his three witnesses and there enter his complaint. After considerable talk the men adopted Mr. Doyle's proposition and returned to Ewa. There a conference was held, and it was suggested—and agreed upon by the Japanese—that all would return to work, but that their wages should not be docked and that the injured man should have medical attendance at the expense of the plantation and his wages to go on during his illness.

The manager, we are told, could not approve of this reasonable proposition, and insisted in being present, having had translated the conversation between Mr. Doyle and the men. He eventually insisted in having the eighty-one Japanese jailed and fined, and, the strict letter of the law being with him, he carried his point.

Ewa jail is a small building containing two or three cells suitable to accommodate two or three persons each. The police force of Ewa is composed of two policemen and a daft native deputy sheriff. The manager evidently considering the force insufficient to arrest eighty-one men, telephoned to the police department in Honolulu asking for help or for permission to swear in men as special constables.

These requests were naturally refused, as violation of labor contracts is a civil and not a criminal offense. The citizens' guard, whatever that may be, was then called out, we are told, and the eighty-one Japs were forced to tramp to Ewa jail, where they were locked up. How the men were accommodated in the cells of the jail is a mystery. They must have been packed like sardines in a box. This morning they were to be tried before the Hawaiian magistrate of the plantation district. They have no attorneys, no interpreter, and no knowledge of our laws. The magistrate will probably order them to return to work and to pay costs, which means that $3 will be deducted from the $12 which each of them receives per month.

This is only one instance in hundreds showing the slavery in Hawaii. It may be of interest to Senator MORGAN and other annexationists who desire, for a consideration, to saddle the United States with the problems of the Hawaiian Islands to know that Ewa Plantation stock is quoted at $315 per share.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Now, what are the arguments which are presented why we should annex these islands, with their peculiar and undesirable population? The arguments presented in debate before were that we should annex these islands because of a wonderful commercial interest; that we should annex these islands because their commerce was carried in American ships and under the American flag; that we should annex these islands because they were on the routes of commerce of the Orient. All this has apparently been abandoned, and the only argument now presented is that an American war vessel can not cross the Pacific without getting coal; that these islands are absolutely necessary in order that we may reach the fleet at Manila. That is the argument now being pressed to the front. I am going to investigate this argument and see if it is honest.

It is further urged that we can not coal in a neutral port; that the reason our ships are going by way of Hawaii is because Hawaii has not declared its neutrality and Japan has, and that therefore our ships can not go to Japan to coal and then go on their way to Manila.

It is well known that the distance from Honolulu to Manila is 4,800 miles; it is well known that the distance from Puget Sound to Yokohama, Japan, is 4,200 miles; in other words, the distance from Hawaii across the Pacific Ocean to Manila is greater than the distance from San Francisco or Puget Sound to the port of Yokohama, in Japan, and so the argument has to be made that we can not coal in Japan. Is there anything to sustain it? Nothing under heaven. No authorities have been cited, no grounds have been given for this statement, but it has been made; and yet every Senator knows that coal only under certain circumstances is contraband of war, and that the vessels of a belligerent may coal in a neutral port.

I wish to repeat again that the distance from San Francisco to Yokohama, Japan, is 800 miles shorter than the distance from Honolulu, in the Hawaiian Islands, to Manila by the shortest possible route, and that, too, a route which is not usually traveled in order to make it short. The distance from Puget Sound to Yokohama is 800 miles shorter than the distance from Honolulu to Manila; and yet they say the Pacific is so wide that none of our vessels can carry coal enough to cross without stopping. The Pacific is wider from Honolulu to the coast of Asia than it is from Puget Sound to the coast of Asia. We have traveled 2,000 miles to get farther away, and then declare that our vessels can not carry coal enough to get across the water.

I contend that we could coal in Yokohama, in Japan; that we could have started our ships from Puget Sound within five days, if we had been carrying on war, after we told Dewey to go to Manila. But we made no move then until he had gone there and destroyed the Spanish fleet. Now it is over fifty days, and we have offered no relief. We have started it by the longest route. A ship can sail from Puget Sound to Manila and save a thousand miles as compared with going from San Francisco by way of Honolulu to Manila. A ship can, therefore, save four days' time. A ship can go from Puget Sound to Manila in twenty-one days, and it is fifty days since Dewey's battle, and during all these dreary fifty days there has been no fighting anywhere except by the insurgents on the Philippine Islands.

If we had had an active Administration, the moment Dewey was sent to Manila we would have started our fleet from Puget Sound and sent him assistance and relief. Instead of that, we must wait, day by day, fifty days, till foreign governments have had to interfere to protect their own people, this country having produced a condition of anarchy and disorder there which made their lives unsafe. So we dragged in European complications. If we had started our ships by the way of Yokohama from Puget Sound, they would have sailed a thousand miles less than the ships will mail which we have finally sent, and we could have coaled at Yokohama and in Japan and reached Manila a month ago.

Mr. MANTLE. If it will not interrupt the Senator from South Dakota, I should like to ask him a question. I have heard him say during the progress of this debate, and I have also heard it stated by other Senators, that it is much nearer to reach Japan or China or the Philippine Islands by what is called the Aleutian route—that is up north; north of Honolulu—than it is by way of Honolulu. I wish to ask Senators if, as a matter of fact, commerce does not take the Honolulu route to those countries. I ask for information.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is a matter of fact that commerce does not take the Honolulu route, but, on the contrary, every vessel leaving San Francisco for Japan, unless it has special business in Hawaii which makes it pay, goes straight across the Pacific. It saves three days' time. When I returned from the Orient last summer I wished to remain in Japan nine days longer, but if I had waited nine days longer the next ship belonging to the same line, the Occidental and Oriental, would not go to Honolulu at all. It would come straight across the Pacific and save three days and save the coal and save the expense. Every ship that they send goes that way unless it has business at Honolulu sufficient to make it profitable to sail 900 miles farther and three days longer.

Mr. MANTLE. I have heard it said, and I have read it, that there are certain currents in the Pacific Ocean running near to Honolulu and in that direction which more than compensate, because of the aid they give vessels in helping to carry them in that direction, for the longer distance by way of that island. I should like the Senator to say something upon that subject.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say that if the Senator should go to San Francisco and desire to go to Japan, the same steamboat company would agree to take him in fifteen days if he went straight across and eighteen days if he went by Honolulu. That is a sufficient answer to the talk about currents. Their schedule time is three days shorter, I do not care whether it is going or coming. It makes no difference. There are currents in the Pacific. They run from half a knot to a knot an hour. Those currents are all through the Pacific.

But if a route has the benefit of the current going one way, you have the disadvantage of the current going the other; and the current that flows by the Hawaiian Islands flows west. The current that flows by the Aleutian Islands flows east. And therefore the ship which goes west by Hawaii goes with the current and comes east against it, and a ship that goes west by the Aleutian Islands goes against the current going out and comes with it coming back. It is only sailing vessels that pay any attention to these things. You will find the sailing routes crooked and long. I have a map which I will bring in here showing the routes of sailing vessels on the Pacific. No steamship follows those routes.

Mr. CAFFERY. I desire to ask the Senator whether or not he has investigated the matter of fogs which are alleged to surround the route from Vancouver, say, by the Aleutian Islands?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Both of the Senators have anticipated my debate. I will reach that question and argue it fully. I should like to dispose, if the Senator is willing, of the question of coaling in a neutral harbor.

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have here International Law by Snow, and I have heard some of the best international lawyers I know say he is one of the most competent authorities on the subject; that he is a writer of great ability and a close student. He says:

Nor is it necessary that the ports should be habitually used. Melbourne formed a sufficiently good base to the Confederate cruiser Shenandoah during our civil war to enable her after a single stay to carry on a campaign in the North Pacific Ocean against our mercantile and whaling vessels without being obliged to resort to any other port.

A neutral hence has the right to impose such restrictions upon belligerent vessels which come within its jurisdiction as may be deemed necessary for the enforcement of its neutrality, and so long as these restrictions are impartially carried out there is no ground for complaint. This right is exercised at times to the extent of forbidding all armed cruisers, with or without prizes, to enter certain neutral ports and waters for the purpose of obtaining provisions, coal, or repairs.

Then he goes on to show that that is not, however, the rule recognized by the great nations of the world:

The restrictions and prohibitions imposed by neutrals upon the vessels of belligerents as to the neutral ports are never extended so far as to deny the hospitality of those ports in case of immediate danger of want, such as stress of weather, want of provisions, etc. Asylum to this extent is required by the ordinary laws of humanity.

By the first proclamation of President Grant, issued August 20, 1870, at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, among the acts forbidden were those of increasing or augmenting the force, armament, or warlike equipment of any belligerent vessel of war within the territory of the United States; also the beginning or setting on foot or providing or preparing means for any military expedition against the territory of either belligerent.

The movements of the belligerent cruisers on our coast and in our waters being such as to call for more explicit and stringent rules, President Grant, on the 8th of October, 1870, issued a second proclamation, by which the belligerent ships were not permitted to frequent the waters of the United States for the purpose of preparing for hostile operations; they were forbidden to leave the waters of the United States, from which a vessel of war, privateer, or merchant vessel of the other belligerent had sailed, until after the expiration of twenty-four hours from its departure. Belligerent vessels were not to use the ports of the United States except in case of necessity, and they were to leave port twenty-four hours after provisions had been secured or the necessary repairs effected. No supplies other than those necessary for the subsistence of the persons on board were to be taken, and only sufficient coal to take the vessel to the nearest European port of her own country, and until her return to such port no coal was to be supplied oftener than once in three months.

That has become the established law of nations. England has already adopted it. A vessel of a belligerent may enter the port of a neutral for the purpose of getting coal and provisions while on its way to another point, and it may get coal enough so that it may return to its nearest home port. Grant declared that German or French vessels could visit our coast, remaining twenty-four hours, not leaving within twenty-four hours after another belligerent ship had left; that they might take coal enough to return to their nearest home port, and that they could not return until they had been to a home port or else had been absent three months. In other words, they could sail at once to the coast of the Atlantic, go to a port in France, and come back again and get coal once more. Let us see what England has done on the same subject. This is what she has done:

In order to guard against a repetition of such acts the British authorities directed that in the future during the war any vessel of either belligerent entering an English port should "be required to depart and put to sea within twenty-four hours after her entrance into such port, except in case of stress of weather or of her requiring provisions or things necessary for the subsistence of her crew or repairs." In such case the local authorities were to "require her to put to sea as soon as possible after the expiration of such period of twenty-four hours." This rule is virtually the same as that incorporated in the proclamation of President Grant in 1870.

I think it can be fairly stated that that is the settled law.

The Geneva award, and that was cited by the Senator from New Hampshire the other day, was made under certain rules which were laid down, and among those rules it is provided that the port of a neutral can not be used as a base. No one pretends that it can. But there is no doubt that our ships crossing the Pacific can stop at a neutral port to secure coal with which to go on their way, and there is no possible question but that they can secure coal enough to reach the nearest home port.

Speaking of coal as contraband of war, Russia and France have refused to recognize it as contraband, because they have little of it. England has recognized it as contraband of war under certain conditions, because she has it all over the world and will have the advantage of an enemy if she can establish that doctrine. We have recognized the English rule.

England, during the Franco-Prussian war, judged of coal in this way: She refused to consider it as unconditionally contraband, but vessels were prohibited from sailing directly from English ports with coal for the French fleet in the North Sea. It is probable that nations having a limited coal supply will strive to keep coal from the list of contraband articles. France and Russia are at the present time the leading opponents among nations to declaring coal as contraband of war.

Therefore the port to which anything is to be shipped, the destination of the ship, is taken into consideration in determining whether it is contraband of war or not. That is true of coal and many classes of provisions. If a ship has taken out a bill of lading to a naval station pure and simple, the supposition is that the freight is contraband of war; but she may have the same freight for another port in a belligerent country and yet not be contraband of war. It is governed by the circumstances.

It follows, then, that the United States at present hold defined and limited agreements as to contraband with Bolivia, Colombia, Santo Domingo, Ecuador, France, Guatemala, Haiti, the Netherlands, Italy, Mexico, Prussia, Salvador, Spain, Sweden and Norway, and Venezuela.

And in every treaty we say what shall be contraband of war, and coal is not included.

With other nations than those named above the United States has no agreement as to contraband goods, and the prize courts would determine according to public law the character of merchandise shipped to enemy's ports.

Wharton, in his Digest of International Law, in the third volume, speaking of coal, says:

It is a product of nature with which some regions are bountifully supplied while others are destitute of it, and its transportation, instead of meeting with impediments, should be aided and encouraged. The attempt to enable belligerent nations to prevent all trade in this most valuable accessory to mechanical power has no just claim for support in the law of nations; and the United States avow their determination to oppose it so far as their vessels are concerned.

This was Mr. Cass, Secretary of State, in a letter to Mr. Mason, dated June 27, 1859. However, since then we have adopted the policy which I think is clearly outlined in President Grant's proclamation of 1870, in relation to the Franco-Prussian war.

Again Wharton says:

It is certainly no breach of neutrality to sell coal for use on a belligerent steamer visiting the port of sale casually under stress of weather. But it would plainly be a breach of neutrality to establish a coaling depot to supply all steamers of any particular belligerent.—Wharton's Commentaries on American Law, section 229.

Again:

The question how far it is a breach of neutrality to supply coal to a belligerent has been already incidentally considered (supra, section 389). It may be here stated, in connection with the present head, that it is not a breach of neutrality for a neutral state to permit the coaling of belligerent steamers in its ports to the same extent as it permits the coaling of other foreign steamers resorting to its ports casually and without settled stations established for them. Nor is it a breach of neutrality for a neutral state to permit the sale of coal to any extent to a belligerent. It would, however, be a breach of neutrality for a neutral to permit a permanent depot or magazine to be opened on its shores, on which a particular belligerent could depend for constant supplies.

To require a neutral to shut up its ports so as to exclude from coaling all belligerents would expose a nation with ports as numerous as those of the United States to an expense as great as would be imposed by actual belligerency. It is on the belligerent, who goes to war, not on the neutral, who desires to keep out of it, that should be thrown expenses so enormous, and constitutional strains so severe as those thus required. On the other hand, the breaking up of central depots or magazines for the constant supply of particular belligerents would be within easy range of ordinary national police. Nor can there be any charge of partiality made in allowing coaling with the limitation above stated, when the same privilege is granted to both belligerents.

Therefore, if Hawaii had declared herself a neutral, and allowed our ships and Spanish ships, if they came, to coal, there would have been no breach of neutrality. But it has been argued on this floor that it is a matter of great consideration and to be pointed to with pride that Hawaii has not declared herself a neutral. Let us see. Was it because she wanted to furnish us coal? Not at all. She had no such idea. She cared nothing about it. But the Government in Hawaii, the revolutionary government, the usurping missionary government, was set up in 1893 by the landing of the marines of the United States, by the overturning of the monarchy of Queen Liliuokalani, by the guns and arms of the United States, under the American flag; and from that day to this there never has been a minute that a war ship of the United States has not been in the harbor with shotted guns bearing directly upon the Government buildings and the Government offices, and within half a mile.

If Hawaii had declared herself a neutral, our ship of war, which supports and sustains and makes possible this usurping Government, would have to leave the port, and they did not dare to have it leave; and so they did not declare themselves neutral. That is all there is to it. It is a matter of self-preservation. They had to keep our ship of war there, or else their ship of state would have gone down.

Yet it is said that great credit is due to them. Senators parade it here as a matter of sublime credit to those fellows who have established a Government not sustained by the people of Hawaii, a revolutionary Government, set up by the Government of the United States, a Government that does not exist by the consent of the governed, a Government that would be overturned (if those people had a vote) by a vote of 9 to 1; and that Government, in order to preserve itself, could not declare neutrality in this war and have our ships leave the harbor for fear the outraged and indignant inhabitants of that country would overturn their despotism.

Wharton goes on further to say—quoting from Wharton's Criminal Law:

But the mere occasional supply of coal to a belligerent cruiser, not from a constant coaling base, or in such quantities as to greatly enhance the cruiser's capacity for destruction, is not of itself a breach of neutrality.

I have been unable to find any authority to the contrary. Wharton then cites President Grant's proclamation on this subject, extracts from which I have read, which seems to have become the settled law upon the question. Of course that law is known to the Navy Department and known to this Government, and therefore when they started their ships for Manila, why did they not start them over the shortest route? Four days longer they must travel and sail if they go by Hawaii than if they went from San Francisco straight across the Pacific. Why did they not do it? Simply because they wanted to find another argument to bolster up this Hawaiian sugar-planters' scheme of getting into the Union.

If that is not true, if it is not a fair and just criticism of their acts, let the advocates of annexation give a better reason. They sit here silent. They offer to the American people nothing as a justification for their course. I warn them that the American people will study this question. I believe they are opposed to imperialism and to conquest and to the acquisition of undesirable populations, incapable of self-government. You assume that, backed by the Administration, you have the brute force to put through this unconstitutional measure. It seems to me the American public are entitled to your reasons.

Here is a map of the northern Pacific, drawn as near as possible like a globe, showing the exact location of islands and countries and their relation to each other. Most maps we look at are drawn upon a plane, and parallels of longitude are the same at the equator as at the poles, giving a deceptive idea as to the location of countries upon the globe and their relation to each other. It will be seen by this map that leaving San Francisco a ship would never be nearer the Hawaiian Islands than it was when it started. If it went the shortest route it would go by the Aleutian chain, and would reach Manila, sailing over 500 miles shorter distance than if it went by Honolulu.

It would have to carry coal enough to sail, if it went to Yokohama, Japan, 4,500 miles. The distance from San Francisco to Yokohama is less by several hundred miles than the distance from Honolulu to Manila. If a vessel could not carry coal enough to go across from San Francisco to Yokohama, then it could not carry coal enough to go from Honolulu to Manila. Therefore, the claim that they had to send their boats there to coal falls to the ground, and its dishonesty is obvious to everyone. If a vessel wanted to reach Hongkong, then it could save 900 miles if it went straight to Hongkong rather than by way of Honolulu.

If it wanted to reach Yokohama, it could save 900 miles if it went direct to Yokohama, rather than going by way of Honolulu. It would come within sight of the Aleutian Islands, islands which we already own. If we must have a coaling station in the Pacific, we already have it if we will only use it. The Island of Kiska—here is a map of it—is owned by the United States. It is 25 miles in length. It has one of the grandest bays in any ocean—a bay that will hold all the ships in our Navy. Here are the soundings of this bay and its size: It is 80 feet deep up within a hundred feet of shore; it is 60 to 100 feet all the way out. It is absolutely landlocked. There are no islands and no shoals on this side of that island out to the open Pacific. It can be entered, no matter how hard the wind blows, no matter what the storm is, at any time of the year. That island is located at this point on the map. [Indicating.]

Kiska is 2,628 miles from San Francisco. It is 3,700 miles from Manila. Honolulu is 4,800 miles from Manila. Our own land, our own port, our own harbor, is 3,700 miles from Manila. Why do we not occupy this port of our own to command the coast of Asia? It is only 1,964 miles from Yokohama. It is only 3,400 miles from Hongkong. We own it; it is ours; it commands the coast of Asia. If we want a port to command the coast of Asia or to protect Alaska, why do we not occupy our own port? I should like to have the advocates of annexation answer that question. Why do we not use our own port instead of going 1,000 miles out of the way to use somebody's else?

From Vancouver, from Port Townsend, from Puget Sound, which we also own, the distance is 300 miles shorter than from San Francisco. A vessel can go from Vancouver to Yokohama by sailing 4,202 miles, and from Yokohama to Manila by sailing 1,752 miles, making 6,000 miles; while to go by way of San Francisco and the Hawaiian Islands it must sail 7,000 miles.

Kiska, this harbor, unsurpassed in the world, is within 3,700 miles of Manila. A vessel leaving this harbor for Manila can sail much faster than a vessel that has to sail 5,000 miles. As we all understand, there is great economy in the use of coal by sailing slow. If a vessel has to go 5,000 miles she must go very slow and economize coal, but if she has to go 3,700 miles she can make much greater speed. She can make more miles in a day if she has a shorter distance to sail than if she has a long distance to sail.

So where is there sense or reason in this argument that we must have a coaling station? What is there that justifies taking this measure up in time of war and dividing our people over a collateral contest? Why do we not finish the war? We are all united upon that question. Why do we not finish the war instead of bringing in this question that divides us? When we have fought the war out, let us fight out this great question of acquisition of empire. It seems to me that that is the patriotic duty of the Administration instead of bringing in questions of this sort that are unnecessary and trying to crowd them on our people when we are engaged in a contest with a foreign foe.

I should like to know how they answer this contention. Here is a harbor of our own that can be entered at any time, no matter what the weather may be, and can be departed from without one particle of difficulty.

Mr. BATE. Of what harbor is the Senator speaking?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The harbor of Kiska. It is argued, and that is the only argument, that this northern route, this straight line, this shortest distance, runs through an undesirable sea; that it is foggy; that it is full of rocks; that it is full of storms; that it is impassable. Melville says that the harbors are shoal, full of ice. I will read from Finlay's North Pacific Ocean and Japan Directory with regard to the harbor of Kiska:

Kiska Island—A hilly island, excepting its eastern part, which is low. Its length, NE. by E. and SW. by W., is 25 miles. The harbor of Kiska is a noble bay, perfectly protected from all winds, with good holding ground and a moderate depth of water. The entrance is wide enough to enable a sailing vessel to beat in or out at any time. There are no hidden dangers, and the depth of water is sufficient for any vessel.

As an additional recommendation, Kiska Harbor never has any ice in it. It is in the same latitude as the city of London. It is in the Japan current. It never freezes. No ice ever forms. There is a lake of fresh water right on the shore. Why do we not take our own harbors? Oh, you say, there was no coal there when the war broke out. It has been fifty days since the war broke out. We could have got coal there. By sailing 2,628 miles from San Francisco or 2,300 from Seattle we could have put coal there, plenty of it.

Now, let us see what the conditions are concerning the climate. I asked the Weather Bureau with regard to the harbor of Unalaska, which is east of Kiska and on the same line, right on the route to the Orient. This is their reply:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
WEATHER BUREAU,
Washington, D. C., June 10, 1898.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 9th instant, I beg to inclose herewith a manuscript copy of the monthly mean temperatures for each year during which observations were made, at St. Paul Island, Bering Sea, and Unalaska.

Unalaska is 2° north of Kiska, and the Pribilof Islands are 4° farther north.

Our reports indicate that the harbor of Unalaska is, on rare occasions, covered by floating ice, which in an unusually cold season may freeze over and become a permanent sheet. Ordinarily, however, the harbor would seem to be free from ice.

Very respectfully,

WILLIS L. MOORE,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. R. F. PETTIGREW,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The fact of the matter is that I talked on this subject with the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. He says that there never has been ice known in the harbor but once, and his ships have gone there for the last quarter of a century. That once was sufficient. I have seen New York Harbor full of ice, when it was not unnavigable or unusable. But the harbor of Kiska, which is 2° farther south than Unalaska, is in the Japan current, and from all the information I can secure there is never any ice within it.

Now, let us see about Unalaska. The Pribilof Islands are directly north of Unalaska. Here is their temperature during the winter, and we can judge for ourselves whether there is ice or not:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., June 10, 1898.

SIR: In reply to your letter of June 9, I beg leave to forward the following:
Temperature (Fahrenheit) at St. Paul, Pribilof Islands.

Date.	1873, mean.	1874, mean.	1875, mean.
January	15.7	20.9	24.9
February	18.0	33.5	35.3
March	12.6	31	29
April	23.9	34.5	28.9
May	30.5	30	34.2
June	37.5	44.4	43
July	43	49.1	47
August	46.5	50.8	47.9
September	43	47.3	40
October	37.8	40.2	41.7
November	32.4	37.8	34.9
December	29.9	33.3	26.2

In 1873 the minimum temperature observed was -12°.

It was never either hot or cold. It never reached the freezing point during the whole year. The lowest point the mercury reached in 1873 was in December, when it was above zero. In regard to the harbor of Unalaska, which Mr. Melville says in his statement is full of ice, I have the observations given here:

Temperature (Fahrenheit) at Itiulik Harbor, Unalaska Island.

Date.	1871-72, mean.	Date.	1871-72, mean.
January	29	July	49.3
February	29.2	August	42.5
March	33.4	September	38
April	40.7	October	33.5
May	40.6	November	33.5
June	47.2	December	33.5

The minimum observed in 1872 was 13° Fahrenheit.

Continued northers may fill the harbor with fragments of drift ice, but this is of rare occurrence. The small harbor is sometimes covered with skin ice. Further data may perhaps be obtained from the Chief of the Weather Bureau.

Respectfully, yours,

HENRY S. PRITCHETT,
Superintendent.

Hon. R. F. PETTIGREW,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WHITE. My attention is directed to a tabular statement contained on page 6607 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and also to a note written to Hon. HUGH A. DINSMORE, of the House of Representatives, on the previous page, which contains a statement as to the temperature at Kiska. I suggest in this connection that the Senator from South Dakota might put in the letter and also the tabular statement. It would be interesting to read them.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The note referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
WEATHER BUREAU,
Washington, D. C., June 9, 1898.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of even date in regard to the climate of certain of the Aleutian Islands.

I have pleasure in transmitting herewith a copy of the daily extremes of temperature at Kiska Island for November and December, 1885, January and February, 1886, the only time during which observations were made at this place. I also inclose a tabular statement of the lowest temperatures ever recorded at Unalaska during a period of seven years. At the latter point the lowest temperature ever recorded was 9° above zero. Westward the weather is not quite so cold.

Just as I said, Unalaska is 450 miles east of Kiska. Kiska is in the Japan current, which flows up between Kiska and the peninsula of Kamchatka into Bering Sea and through Bering Strait into the Arctic Ocean.

We have little data as regards the freedom of the harbor from ice. At Unalaska moving ice obstructed the harbor during a short period in the winter of 1872. We should say that interruptions to navigation due to ice at Kiska, to the westward, are not serious.

It is very serious that there was a little ice once, in 1872, at Unalaska. That condemns that as a harbor, I suppose. No ice since, according to this statement, for our ships visit Unalaska Harbor every month in the year.

The mean winter temperature at Atka Island, longitude 185° 45' W. from Greenwich, is 33°. The sea temperature is, of course, a few degrees higher.

Very respectfully,

WILLIS L. MOORE,
Chief of Bureau.

Mr. HUGH A. DINSMORE,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Then here are the tables of the temperatures at Kiska, given each day from January, 1886.

On the 1st day of January, 1886, the maximum temperature was 37°, the minimum 31° above zero; on the 2d, the maximum was 37°, the minimum 30°; on the 6th, the maximum was 36°, and the minimum 29° above zero; on the 11th of January the maximum was 37° and the minimum 28°; on the 12th the maximum was 36° and the minimum 20°. I am giving the last stages, when it was the coldest, selecting those, but will publish all the tables as a part of my remarks.

On the 21st of January the maximum was 36°, the minimum 29°; on the 27th the maximum was 37°, and the minimum 32°; on the 31st the maximum was 39°, and the minimum 35°; on the 1st day of February, 1886, the maximum was 36° above zero and the minimum 33°, only a difference of 5° night and day, and no freezing, of course; and on February 29, the last day of observation, the maximum was 36°, and the minimum 27°. In 1885 it runs just about the same. It never freezes. Therefore there is never ice, and the consequence is that here is one of the best harbors in the world, free from ice, and we own it, and it is only 3,700 miles from Manila; but Honolulu, that we are making such a fuss about, is 4,800 miles from Manila. Why do we not go up to our own harbor, the shortest way, and save the time and rescue our sailors in the Bay of Manila sooner than we can do it by this tropical foreign missionary port? I should like to have the friends of annexation answer that. I will publish all these other tables with regard to temperature, without stopping to read them.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Mr. PETTIGREW. But what is more, Mr. President, when you get the harbor of Honolulu, most of the ships in our Navy can not carry coal enough to get from there to Manila. There are several of them in this list. I sent to the Navy Department for information and on January 11, 1898, they sent me the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1898.

SIR: 1. Your letter of January 5, 1898, addressed to the Secretary of the Navy, requesting certain information as to the coal capacity and steaming radius of first-class battle ships and cruisers of the first rate, has been referred to this Bureau.

2. In reply the Bureau transmits the following table, which contains the information desired:

Name.	Type.	Coal-bunker capacity.	Steaming radius on this coal at most economic rate.	Steaming radius on this coal at maximum speed with forced draft.
Iowa	First-class battleship	Tons. 1,790	Knots. 6,000	Knots. 2,335
Indiana	do	1,550	4,805	2,671

Name.	Type.	Coal-bunker capacity.	Steaming radius on this coal at most economic rate.	Steaming radius on this coal at maximum speed with forced draft.
Massachusetts	First-class battle ship	Tons. 1,560	Knots. 4,737	Knots. 2,265
Oregon	do	1,540	5,235	2,448
Brooklyn	Armored cruiser	1,300	4,842	1,404
New York	do	1,200	4,486	1,344
Columbia	Protected cruiser	1,600	7,000	1,840
Minneapolis	do	1,520	6,824	1,565
Olympia	do	1,100	6,105	1,408

* Estimated.

† From official trial on basis of 2.4 pounds of coal per 1 horsepower.

‡ From official trial, actual figures.

Very respectfully,

GEO. W. MELVILLE,

Engineer in Chief, United States Navy, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. R. F. PETTIGREW,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Now we will take the Massachusetts. The Massachusetts, steaming at the most economical rate, can sail 4,797 miles. She can just get from Honolulu, by the shortest route, to Manila if nothing happens, and this distance that she can travel is from the official trial. She can not do it in practice. Everybody knows that the official trial is in excess of what these ships can accomplish at sea. And so that vessel, which can only carry coal enough to get 4,797 miles, according to the test at her official trial, can not carry coal enough to get quite to Manila. She would be 3 miles short with every favorable circumstance, with no adverse winds or storms. Yet that is a coaling station for Manila, and we are going to annex this undesirable people and their possessions for the purpose of getting a place where we can coal ships that can not carry coal enough to get to the place we want to get to, when we have a coaling station at our own harbor in the Aleutian Islands on the shortest route, within 3,700 miles of where we want to go.

There is not a vessel in the Navy that can not coal at Kiska and get to Manila. There is not a single vessel in the Navy but what could carry coal enough to take it from Kiska to Manila. There are several of them that can not travel from Honolulu to Manila, and yet we are determined right in the midst of war to change the policy of this country from a Republic to imperialism in order to secure a coaling station so as to send ships to Manila.

Now, let us see what there is further. The Brooklyn, an armored cruiser, if she sails with the most economic use of coal, can sail 4,342 miles, and she would be 500 miles away from Manila when she ran out of coal if she coaled at Honolulu. But if she coaled at Kiska she could reach Manila and have coal for 600 miles left in her bunkers.

And yet this Administration is bound to send them by this foreign island to stimulate the interests of the sugar planters. If this ship, the Brooklyn, the armored cruiser, sailed as fast as she can sail, she could only cover 1,404 miles, because with forced draft the consumption of coal is simply enormous. But, sailing by the most economical use of coal, sailing slowly, about 8 knots an hour, she can get within 500 miles of Manila. And yet you want Honolulu to coal ships for Manila, and so you force this thing here as a war measure.

The New York, another cruiser, can sail 4,486 miles, and then she is out of coal, and she is 400 miles from Manila if she coals at Honolulu.

If you are going to make the American people believe that this is a war measure and is necessary in order to rescue Dewey, answer these things; do not sit silent and refuse to debate this question, but give us something to justify abandoning the century-old policy of our country. If this ship, the New York, should sail as fast as she is able to sail under forced draft, she would only go 1,344 miles.

We have other vessels. The Iowa, a first-class battle ship, according to these figures, could sail 6,000 miles, but there is not a ship in the whole list that can travel under forced draft from Honolulu to San Francisco and have any coal left.

But it is said this route is obscured by fog. Mr. President, I crossed the ocean on this route, and I asked the sailing master of the ship, anticipating this debate, to give me a map of the ship's course and the number of miles it sailed each day and our exact location every noon. The sailing master made me out this map and gave me the route traveled, the distance we traveled every day, and the point we were at every noon. This was in August. We started from Vancouver. We sailed 4,200 miles to Yokohama. By this route from Vancouver, from our own port to Manila, it is 6,012 miles. It is a thousand miles shorter than from San Francisco via Honolulu to Manila.

We sailed the first day 309 miles; the next day 350 miles; the next day 347; the next day 348; the next day 352; the next day 345; and August 7, when we were exactly opposite Unalaska, we made the biggest day's run—we made 352 miles. August 8 we made 345 miles; August 9 we made 307 miles. We were then exactly south of the Island of Kiska and within 70 miles of it. We had been going along the Aleutian chain for three or four days. We had not seen the sun since we started. It was foggy, but not so foggy as to impede navigation; not so foggy as to do other than obscure the sun; not so foggy that you could not see for miles at sea.

I asked the sailing master and the captain of the ship if they traveled that route summer and winter. I was told that they did, and that in winter there was no fog; that the foggiest season was in the warmest weather, and that that never impeded their progress or was any impediment to navigation. That line of steamers, the Canadian Pacific Line, as fine a line of steamers as crosses any sea, follow that route summer and winter, and they have made the quickest trips that were ever made across the Pacific Ocean. One of their ships covered the entire distance in ten days, and could have gone from Vancouver to Manila, at the same speed, in less than fifteen days. Yet Senators seem determined to have a coaling station in the Tropics off from the line of travel. To the assumption that this route is covered with fog and obstructed by ice, that it has shoal water, is it not a complete answer that this line of steamships travel year in and year out along that line?

Mr. GRAY. Is that the great circle route?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is the great circle route. It is a straight line. It is called the great circle route.

Mr. GRAY. It is the shortest distance on the surface of the globe.

Mr. PETTIGREW. On the surface of the globe. This is practically the great circle. However, the great circle would carry a ship north of the Aleutian Islands. Of course they do not go north of the Aleutian Islands, because it is unnecessary for the slight advantage that would come in saving distance to go in and out between these islands when they have a plain, clear, open ocean by holding to a course south of the islands. The ocean within 30 miles of the Aleutian chain, on the south side, is 18,000 feet deep; there are no rocks and no shoal; it is absolutely an open sea, and there is no impediment and no obstruction whatever to navigation.

I notice some of the officials of the Navy Department insist upon claiming that this route is not a good one, and Mr. Melville—I never met him—tells us that we must have the Sandwich Islands in order to guard Alaska. The man who will make such a proposition must be suffering from softening of the brain.

The Committee on Foreign Relations have chosen to publish as an appendix to their report a statement by Melville that we must have the Islands of Hawaii in order to protect our possessions in Alaska. He proceeds to relate the story of a stream of commerce going to Alaska. Here is the statement of George W. Melville, Engineer in Chief of the United States Navy, on Alaskan commerce exposed to hostile fleets. He says:

In the event of conflict between the United States and a maritime power this throng of richly laden but helpless vessels will present to the enemy a noble field for attack by the "guerre de course," that "commerce destroying" which first formed a factor of naval war during the reign of Elizabeth of England, which was followed with such deadly effect by the Alabama and her consort, and which has at this time many strong advocates, notably in the United States and France.

HAWAII COMMANDS ALASKAN ROUTE.

Now, Hawaii commands fully this ocean route, at a distance from it of less than 2,500 miles—not five days' steaming for the cruiser Columbia.

If the Columbia covered the distance in five days, she would not have a pound of coal, because she would have to sail at her greatest speed, and her coal would be exhausted. What could she do in the way of attacking commerce after sailing a distance of 2,500 miles at the rate of 500 miles a day? She could only go 1,800 miles at that rate of speed when she would be out of coal, and yet the Chief Engineer of the Navy sends to the Committee on Foreign Relations this sort of stuff, and they retail it to us.

Then he tells us what a large commerce we will have with Alaska—how the ships will speed back and forth loaded with gold and men. How they would be protected from Honolulu I can not understand. Here is Honolulu [indicating on the map], here is San Francisco [indicating], and here is Alaska [indicating]. According to Mr. Melville, when we want to protect Alaska and the Aleutian chain we shall have our fleet at this point (San Francisco) and run down here to Honolulu, 2,100 miles directly away from Alaska. What is his opinion worth under these circumstances?

Who cares anything about the testimony of experts when they tell us such stuff as that? How will we protect the Aleutian chain, fortify Unalaska, fortify the harbors of the Aleutian chain, fortify the splendid ports that we have all along this chain? I do not think we ought to fortify them; I do not think it is necessary; but if we must have fortified places and ports in the Pacific, those are the ones to fortify. [Indicating.] Protect Alaska from here, from Kiska and Unalaska; and yet that is Melville's proposition. Here is Unalaska Bay [indicating]; here is Kiska [indicating], and here is Alaska [indicating], and he is going to protect it from this point. He starts from Honolulu, from two to three thousand miles from Alaska—farther from Alaska by a thousand miles than Seattle—goes down to within 20° of the equator to San Francisco to protect Alaska, which extends from 50° north latitude to the North Pole. That is the proposition of Mr. Melville, the Chief Engineer of the United States Navy. I have never met him and do not know how old he is, but he is certainly suffering from softening of the brain.

I read from a memorandum prepared for Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR, M. C., with respect to the question of the route from San Francisco to Yokohama:

Anyone at all familiar with the sea is aware that one of the greatest dangers to navigation is fog, and the sea about Unalaska is one of the foggiest regions in the whole world. Probably nearly everybody present has enjoyed reading the poems of Rudyard Kipling known as "The Seven Seas," which include a short one called "The Rhyme of the Three Sealers."

I think he has studied Rudyard Kipling more than he has geography or the weather—and he there depicts in most graphic style the density of the fog which is found in the neighborhood of this port which my friends have advertised as so desirable as a port of call. Of course I have not rested content with Mr.

Kipling's poem alone, but have taken pains to verify the statements there made by inquiring of naval officers and others who have spent considerable time near the Aleutian group, and they have told me that Mr. Kipling's picture is not overdrawn at all.

So he was never there himself; and that is what I supposed—There are times, however, in the winter when there is clear weather, but then this most attractive port is closed by the ice—

And yet there has been no ice in it since 1872—for, in spite of the Japan current, which corresponds to the Gulf Stream in the Atlantic, the region around Unalaska is blocked with floe ice—

This is more testimony from a man who is certainly suffering from softening of the brain, for our own Weather Bureau tells us that there has been no ice in Unalaska Harbor since 1872, and their record of temperature shows that ice can not form there; and yet this is what our Chief Engineer of the Navy sends to the House of Representatives—

There are, of course, openings in this ice, and vessels that make a business of arctic cruising might utilize them, but it can be readily appreciated that the fine passenger and freight steamers sailing from San Francisco are not going to run this risk.

Those openings extend from 1872 up to the present time; and yet there is no ice there, and those openings will continue until there is some ice, I suppose; and yet Mr. Melville says that vessels used to Arctic cruising can get through those holes in the ice, when there is no ice, and this statement is paraded to the country as an argument against a route over which all commerce travels, unless it is given an inducement to go out of its way. He then says:

Now let us compare with this region of ice and fog the earthly paradise which Hawaii will furnish us.

He then draws the comparison, and those can read it who choose to do so.

Another letter, which was used in the other House by Mr. GROSVENOR, was from John R. Bartlett, captain United States Navy, Chief Intelligence Officer, and former Hydrographer. He says:

On the accompanying chart, which is a copy of the pilot chart of the North Pacific Ocean, published by the Hydrographic Office, No. 1401, are shown the various routes between San Francisco and Manila which may be discussed.

The route B is the great circle route, and is the shortest. Its length is 6,254 miles. This route is best adapted for the eastward voyage at nearly all times of the year, and possibly the westward voyage in the summer months.

I took this very route in August over this very track, and the former Chief Hydrographer of the Navy Department, one of Mr. Melville's subordinates, who has been drawing these maps and charts and seems to have studied the subject, and even now would not take his information secondhand or in any other way, absolutely contradicts Melville's statement, and says:

The route "B" is the great circle route, and is the shortest. Its length is 6,254 miles. This route is best adapted for the eastward voyage at nearly all times of the year.

Why? Because by the eastern voyage you go with the Japan current, and possibly the western voyage in the summer months. I will publish a part of his letter as a part of my remarks.

The letter referred to is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF NAVAL INTELLIGENCE,
Washington, June 23, 1898.

SIR: Your letter of June 11, 1898, addressed to the honorable Secretary of the Navy, requesting data in regard to routes from San Francisco to Manila, has been referred to me.

I take pleasure in sending herewith the data requested. It is brief, but I think covers all the points which you wish. The only way for a steamer to go to Manila from San Francisco is by a rhumb or straight line during ten months in the year, which would take them quite near to the Sandwich Islands. But the most important point is the statement of the Bureau of Steam Engineering that we have not a ship in the service, except the Minneapolis and Columbia, which could make the voyage from San Francisco to Manila without recaling on the way.

I have the honor to be, respectfully,

JOHN R. BARTLETT,

Captain, U. S. N., Chief Intelligence Officer, and former Hydrographer.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR,
House of Representatives.

Routes from San Francisco to Manila, prepared in Office of Naval Intelligence, by John R. Bartlett, Chief Intelligence Officer, captain, United States Navy.

On the accompanying chart, which is a copy of the pilot chart of the North Pacific Ocean, published by the Hydrographic Office, No. 1401, are shown the various routes between San Francisco and Manila which may be discussed.

The route B is the great circle route, and is the shortest. Its length is 6,254 miles. This route is best adapted for the eastward voyage at nearly all times of the year, and possibly the westward voyage in the summer months.

DIFFERENT ROUTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO TO MANILA.

Great circle route B, 6,254 miles. Advantage, shortest distance. Disadvantage, rough weather; variable winds; adverse currents of about 1 mile an hour; fogs.

Rhumb line E, usual route, 6,800 miles. Advantages, generally favorable weather; favorable winds; little current.

Southern route via Honolulu, DD, distance, 6,900 miles. Disadvantage, longest route. Advantages, good weather; fair winds; favorable current of nearly 1 mile an hour, with good harbor for recaling and refitting at about one-third the distance across. Furthermore, the numerous islands along this course, which are not inhabited, would give additional anchorages for coaling, if necessary.

Returning by Honolulu the ship would run against this current, and therefore the shortest route is the only practical route, as you must have a route which is the quickest going and coming by way of the Aleutian Islands and Kiska. Going and coming either way a ship could, and they do, save several days' time either from San Francisco or Puget Sound.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Of course Kiska is south of the shortest line. The great circle route, the route ships sail, passes about 70 miles south of this island, instead of 300 miles. Ships take this route because they do not wish to pass in and out between the islands, and therefore it is a slight modification of the great circle route.

Let us see if what he says about currents, etc., is justified. If you have an adverse current going one way, you will have it in your favor going the other way; and the Canadian Pacific ships follow the route the year around both ways.

As I say, Mr. President, the route which we took in crossing from Vancouver to Yokohama, in Japan, went within 70 miles of the harbor of Kiska. We went within 30 miles of the Aleutian Islands. Ordinarily in winter vessels go within 4 or 5 miles of the Aleutian Islands. It is the route to the Orient and is along the shore of our own country to within 3,700 miles of Manila and to a point within 500 miles of the coast of Asia.

Mr. President, I will not finish my remarks upon this subject this afternoon. I intend to go into the question of the products of the Hawaiian Islands and also the question as to how the present Government came into existence; but having spoken as long as I feel able to do this afternoon, I will yield the floor to some other Senator.

Mr. MCENERY. Mr. President, in my opinion we are considering one of the most important questions which has ever been presented to the Senate; one of the most important which has ever confronted the American people. In its solution is involved the whole future of this Government, its social and its political destiny. There is threatened to be a change in the form of our Government if there is not a wrecking of our institutions.

Probably the most serious aspect of the case is the total disregard of constitutional obligations. When we weaken these and take from under us the sure props of the foundations of our Government, it can be only a question of time when the whole fabric will fall.

The constitutionality of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands has been learnedly discussed by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], and it seems to me his argument was strong and forceful enough to awaken the judicial conscience and to convince the judicial mind, but, unfortunately, we have reached that time in the history of our Government when constitutional questions are no longer considered or interpreted by just rules of interpretation, but they are solved and determined by methods of expediency and of party policy. Looking, however, at this question as a practical question, conceding that it is a constitutional method that we are pursuing, it seems as though we were making a unilateral contract, submitting in fact only a proposition, and the question is whether or not the party to whom the proposition is made has the right to accept it.

We treated with the Hawaiian Republic as an independent State, as a nation having an existence, a life, an organic being, one of the family of nations, and having all of the relations which one nation could have with the other nations of the earth. In their constitution the only authority that is given for that Republic to enter into a convention with the United States of America is that it shall have authority to enter into a treaty for political or commercial union between the Republic of Hawaii and the United States of America. In the amended treaty it was provided that that Republic was to come in as a Territory. There is no authority given in the constitution of that Republic for it to abrogate or to destroy its sovereignty, its political life, and put its people under the dominion of the United States, to be governed and controlled as a Territorial government.

Mr. President, nations have a life and an organic being. It is like the human life; it exists until it is destroyed in the course of nature, or until it is destroyed by violence. That is the history of the world, and we may look in vain for any account of a nation which has ever committed political suicide, which has ever by a decree dissolved its own existence. It is impossible for it to do so; and it can only be done when, in the course of its life, it has reached the period of its final existence, and you look for its history amid the colossal fragments of its architecture or in the faded inscriptions among the scattered stones of its buildings.

Here is a Republic that comes to the Government of the United States and says: "I destroy myself; I disorganize my society and put myself completely under your domination, and sell my people to you into slavery." What is the effect of such a contract as that? Is it binding upon the people of that island? Suppose this joint resolution passes and it goes back to those people, are they bound by it? Their constitution gives them no other authority than to enter into a treaty for commercial purposes or political union with the people of the United States of America. They can only come here as a State, just as Texas came here, with all of her sovereignty except that which she delegated to the General Government in consideration of its protecting power.

Suppose, for instance, in the many changes in the political condition of any country where a nation exists, but its sovereignty may be expressed in a different form of government, that in some revolutionary period a government should be called into existence, one in France, for instance, and they should apply to this country with an entire abrogation of its sovereignty by the destruction of all the rights of its people, with a total dissolution of its political society, and the Government of the United States should, through its Congress, pass a joint resolution accepting them as a Territory, what would prevent that nation, whose life has been destroyed, through another expression and another form of government, repudiating that transaction and assuming the normal condition of its life? That is just exactly what these people of Hawaii can do. The revolutionary government has tendered a surrender of the sovereignty of that people; another government can be called into existence and repudiate it.

Then what comes? You are obliged, then, to employ the force, the conquering power of this Government, and reduce it to your possession by conquest. That is the only way, except by purchase, that this Government can acquire territory and make it a part of the national domain.

Then you are confronted also, if you take possession of this republic, the territory of Hawaii, with the conventions that she has made with the other nations of the earth. You can not destroy them; you can not say, as this resolution does, that they are abrogated until this Government makes a new treaty with those people with whom the Hawaiian Republic entered into those conventions. The nation still exists, and those agreements are binding upon every government with whom it has entered into a contract; and this Government can not by accepting it as a Territory destroy a single line or a single word of any treaty that that Government has made with any foreign power. Nations have their appointed places marked and set apart as an abiding place for them by the Almighty.

It is marked by the lines of the ocean, the courses of the rivers, and the range of its mountains. Once a nation always a nation, unless, as I have said, it is destroyed by its own inherent decay or by violent hands being laid upon it. Its agreements survive as long as it survives.

We are treating with a power as an intellectual being on an equal footing with this Government. We have recognized it. We have received its President with distinguished honor.

We might as well attempt to reduce its sovereignty, to take away from those people their constitution, their laws, and their officers as for a man to enter into a contract with a sane man who in that contract should say, "I will abdicate the God-given gift of my personality and place myself under the charge of a curator." He might make such a contract with the expectation of having his sanity judicially inquired into and an order of interdiction issued to get rid of his contracts, but would any court for a moment entertain the idea that such a subterfuge could abrogate or annul any contract that that individual had entered into?

But the Republic of Hawaii comes here and says: "I will abrogate my sovereignty; I will destroy that period in my development when I have reached a nation's strength and vigor and have been recognized by the nations of the earth, and I will put myself under the charge of the Government of the United States as my curator, and I will annul all the contracts, treaties, conventions, and obligations I have made."

Suppose a political subdivision should, in an attempt to get rid of the obligations which it had entered into, go to the State government and surrender every privilege it had received from the State and ask to be made only a taxing district to aid and assist in the support of the State government. Is there a lawyer on this floor who would say that that municipality, that that political subdivision, could get rid of its obligations in such a way?

If Hawaii comes in as a Territory, if the joint resolution should unfortunately pass, it will necessarily, under our system, have to be controlled by a Territorial legislature. Are those people fit for such a government as that even? Are they competent to make decent, honest, capable legislators? Will there not be reenacted in that country the same history that we had in the Southern States during the era of reconstruction? Every adventurer, every man without culture and without character, every ambitious politician, will flock to that country, and an era of crime and debauchery will ensue that will again bring disgrace and discredit to American institutions, make a mockery of republican government, and threaten with destruction the few decent and honorable people who may seek that place for a home.

But it is the intention unquestionably, if it is erected into a Territory, to give it at no distant day power and authority to frame a constitution preparatory to admission into the Union of the United States. Mr. Thurston, the Hawaiian agent at Washington, says, speaking of the treaty:

It does not provide for Statehood. It will be a question for our successors, not for us to settle.

How long will that time be postponed? Not any longer than the political party which has power in this Government finds it necessary to admit it in order to get its political strength and to place Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States. A rotten borough, oriental, ignorant, diseased, corrupt people sending votes here to elect the President and Vice-President of the United States. This is not mere conjecture, for the history of this country proves that one of the dangers which must be avoided if possible is the readiness to admit any community for political purposes, without reference to intelligence or to numbers, that can send Representatives to Congress. The consummation of such a policy would be an absolute injustice to the other States of this Union. It would destroy that equality which ought to exist among all the States. To have 100,000 people, two-thirds of whom or more are Asiatics, represented on this floor upon the same equality with the other States of the Union would be such an inequality as was never contemplated in our form of Government.

We are, Mr. President, adopting a policy totally unsuited to our condition. The annexation of Hawaii is only a commencement. The Philippines will follow. Cuba, Puerto Rico, the Canaries, all the Spanish possessions; and having these, under this new policy we will soon find occasion to wrest the Azores and the Madeiras and Cape Verde from Portugal. We have a sufficient number of domestic questions to occupy our attention for the next two hundred years, and we should solve all political and social questions which are presented to us before we venture to other continents or midocean in search of other territory. We have a labor proposition which daily confronts us, and which will require the utmost patriotism and the best intellects of this country to solve. We have the question of labor and capital, which more than once, in my opinion, has threatened the stability of society and the existence of this Government.

We have in the South a different race from the intelligent race also occupying that section. We will have to solve the race problem, which is a most serious one, before we can go abroad and engage with new and perplexing ones. We have had to resort to every means and every method to prevent the ascendancy of that race in order to preserve the civilization of one-half of the territory of the United States. Those efforts are still to be continued and that problem will be an ever-present one to us for the next hundred years, and Southern men and Southern statesmen should direct their attention to its solution instead of aiding and assisting in the creation of others which will divert attention from the conditions existing there and which may weaken the efforts that have already been made to preserve our civilization, our character, and our honor.

Then, too, we have in this country representatives from all nations, a heterogeneous population, men of different races, speaking different tongues, and it requires, so I have been told, in the Western States, where large numbers of European immigrants have settled, the second or third generation before they become thorough American citizens. They keep coming among us. Welcome, I say—they ought to be—in order to build up the waste places in this country, but we need time in order to make this heterogeneous population homogeneous and mold them into one great American manhood.

Then we have economic questions which are unsettled and which will necessarily become more involved by the extension of our territory beyond its present limits. The question of tariff has never yet been settled, and this country has no settled policy as to the means of raising revenue. The monetary system is unsettled and will require many years of intelligent inquiry and earnest effort before we can formulate a policy that will be acceptable to all the people. All these questions, which ought to be settled definitely and for all time, will become more complex and more dangerous as we go beyond our territorial limits and annex new territory, with new questions coming back to us to make those which we have under solution the more confounding.

By this acquisition of territory we will necessarily become involved in entanglements with other nations. It can not be avoided. Already we are threatened with complications with foreign powers because of our presence in the Philippine Islands. What will be the consequence? This country will become an armed camp. Instead of 125,000 volunteers under arms at Chattanooga, New Orleans, and Tampa, there will not be a village in the country that will not be occupied by the Federal soldiery, waiting for an opportune time to be sent against a foreign foe, in order to protect our foreign possessions. It will become an armed camp with more power and probably with more dire consequences than are now inflicted upon Germany with its immense standing army, occupying every village and every hamlet in that Empire.

We have power enough if we will concentrate it. Our wealth is untold. We have a commerce increasing every year until it will overshadow that of all other nations combined. We have an internal commerce greater probably than that of any nation of the earth, greater probably than the foreign commerce of Great Britain. All this strength, this vigor, needs but concentration at home, the husbanding thereof, in order to make us invincible against the world. Dissipate this, destroy it, and transfer it to the sea, and we will become weak and puny and be exhausted by constant and continuous war, disturbing our social life, interrupting our commercial intercourse, and, worst of all, destroying the liberty of the citizen.

These colonial possessions are expensive. To keep Hawaii itself, because of the extravagance that will be transferred to that island, judging from the experience of the past, when adventurers have opportunity to fasten themselves upon a community, will involve an expense to us as great, I believe, as the maintenance of the government of the State of New York. It cost Louisiana under an alien government $19,000,000 a year. For that government, 2,100 miles from the shores of this country, the expense will sum up to the same amount. The necessary expense of keeping up an army and navy to protect the colonial possessions will bankrupt this country in the very incipency of its existence. It has hardly yet passed from its youth. It has but reached its manhood, and yet we are reaching out to impair the strength of this nation and destroy it in its young manhood.

I believe, Mr. President, it would be an interesting subject to study the colonial policies of the world and ascertain at what period the nations which adopted such a policy reached the zenith of their strength, and then note the hour of their decay. I believe it will be found coincident with the period of its apparent greatest wealth. No nation of the world that has ever passed its boundaries has not been driven back to them, and no nation has adopted a colonial policy that has not sown the seeds of its decay. Spain to-day is reaping the reward of her aggressive policy. Had she remained within her limits, with that magnificent manhood of the nation, with her wealth and her genius, she might have preserved intact in Europe the Empire of Charles V.

I believe to-day that England is weakened by her colonial policy. I believe her statesmen are aware of that fact. I do not believe they would attempt the acquisition of additional territory unless it were in defense of that which they already have or which should come to her by historical accident, pretty much the way in which all of her territorial acquisitions have been made.

I apprehend, Mr. President, that the foreign policy which is to be inaugurated will affect every material interest of this country. I believe by destroying home interests we will lose more than we possibly can gain by any foreign possession which we may acquire by treaty, by purchase, or by conquest.

I will read here in this connection an article from the Springfield (Mass.) Republican of December 12, 1897:

THE BETRAYAL OF THE HOME MARKET.

There exists in this country such an interest as sugar growing, and it is not confined to the cane plantations of Louisiana. It is spread out in keen and eager expectation, if not in fact as yet, over the vast territory of the middle and far West. Its investments are now comprehended in a few sections of land devoted to the growth of the sugar beet and in a few factories employed in grinding up the beets and extracting the sugar. But it sees from these beginnings the early development of a mighty home industry, employing millions of capital and a great body of factory and farm labor.

This industry in esse and in posse is now marshaling its influence and power against the annexation of Hawaii. The reasons for its opposition are obvious. There exists on the islands a large and growing sugar-producing industry favored by a soil of unapproachable richness and by an unlimited supply of cool and contract labor of oriental and native origin, the cheapest in the world. And against the untaxed competition of this soil and labor, under the exploitation of the American sugar-refining monopoly, the beet-sugar interests of the West feel that they must struggle in vain. They are consequently appearing at Washington with petitions and arguments and appeals opposed to annexation, and with this point in particular, drawn from the last national Republican platform:

"Resolved, We condemn the present Democratic Administration for not keeping faith with the sugar producers of this country. The Republican party favors such protection as will lead to the production on American soil of all of the sugar which the American people use, and for which they pay other countries more than $100,000,000 annually."

And what either President McKinley or the Republican majority in the Senate and House can have to say in reply to this, we should like to hear.

This pledge of the party is little heard of now. The President has evidently forgotten it, and the Congressional majority of the party appear to have forgotten it. But it is distinctly stated and can not be mistaken. It means, if it is not a false promise, that the Republican party favors and will impose, if given the power, protective duties on all imported sugars, and not alone those from Cuba and continental Europe, to the end that the $100,000,000 now sent abroad annually for the sugar supply of the nation may be kept at home and turned in a mighty stream to the employment of home labor and the partial diversion of agricultural effort from its present congested employments. We use the language commonly employed to set forth the claims of the protective policy. And if ever that policy had justification, it is in this case of an industry no doubt capable of domestication and possessing the possibilities of an immense and enriching development.

But instead of heeding this promise President McKinley and the party in Congress urge a policy which shall subject the domestic sugar-growing industry forever to the free competition of the Hawaiian monopoly and its great force of degraded Asiatic contract labor. They are quick to heed the claims to protection of industries that have grown to a mature and independent age, and that have no use for a tariff except to protect themselves in forming extortionate trust combinations, but the claims of a really infant industry of great promise are passed by unheeded in respect to the cheapest and worst competition it has to encounter. What has become of those fine theories and sayings of Mr. McKinley respecting the possession of the home market for home labor and home profit? What has become of that championship of the tariff as the special patron of infant industries? All quite, quite prostrate beneath the ruthless tread of ambitions for territorial enlargement.

It is a sad relapse from the protective virtues for which Mr. McKinley so lately stood as the grand embodiment of all. But we may hope that the beet-sugar interests now assembling at Washington will be able to bring the Administration and the party in Congress to some realizing sense of their free trade and pauper-labor degradation in this Hawaiian business. There, too, stands the party-platform pledge preferring charges of treachery against those who had promised its fulfillment. What a situation! The home market is being betrayed in the home of its friends, and the Home-Market Club of Boston is silent.

Mr. President, the proposed annexation of Hawaii has attracted already the attention of farmers' organizations throughout the country. Some of these, in a letter written to Hon. J. W. WADSWORTH, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, write as follows:

HAWAII AND THE AMERICAN FARMERS.

Hon. J. W. WADSWORTH,

Chairman House Committee on Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In the name of the farmers of America, nearly 1,000,000 of whom are our clients, we solemnly protest against the policy of colonization which it is proposed to inaugurate by annexing Hawaii. That policy would at once expose us to embolism with other nations. It would vastly magnify the power and expense of our Army and Navy. It would perpetuate increased taxes. It would inaugurate an era of corruption in our foreign possessions, a debasement of the blood, that could not fail to in time affect the physical and mental stamina of our people at home.

It would be un-American, unwise, unconstitutional, and in results unworthy of the effort. On still higher grounds a colonial policy is objectionable. It would degenerate the holiest war ever waged for humanity into a campaign of conquest. This would lower the United States before the world, but its moral effect upon our own people would be still worse. Again, the more our people are led to indorse the policy of expansion, the more will domestic interests be neglected. Under such a policy, no expense will be spared on Army and Navy, but how about those home interests that vitally concern everybody every day? Better roads and improved waterways, more mails and free delivery, a better banking system, better education, reform of existing abuses, protection against monopoly and corporate extortion—all these and many other things will be neglected. Monopoly in various forms and other enemies of social progress would hold high carnival at home while national and State legislatures were concerned about our colonies abroad.

It will be bad for the American farmer should Uncle Sam ever decide to embark upon an era of "imperial colonization." The cool labor of these tropical colonies, directed by capable overseers, and their products manipulated by world-wide trusts, would close up every beet-sugar proposition and cane-sugar mill in the United States. The growing and manufacture of smoking tobacco and cigars, one of the large interests of the United States, would be annihilated, and the heavy leaf industry also injured. Rice, cotton, hemp, and all fiber crops would be so cheaply produced and worked in the East and West Indies as to sound the death knell of these industries in the United States or perpetuate the low prices which have for a year past brought only disaster to the cotton planter, factor, manufacturer, or operative. Please bring this promptly to official attention of the House before vote is taken.

Respectfully submitted in the farmers' behalf.

HERBERT MYRICK,

President Orange Judd Company,

Editor American Agriculturist, of New York,

Editor Orange Judd Farmer, of Chicago,

Editor New England Homestead, of Springfield.

It has no less attracted the attention of the labor organizations. They believe that it will be the means of bringing the labor of the United States into discredit. I read a letter from the president of the American Federation of Labor:

HAWAII AND AMERICAN LABOR.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,

Washington, D. C., June 11, 1898.

DEAR SIR: Inasmuch as the House of Representatives has now under consideration a bill for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States, and since there are a number of features involving principles affecting the working people of our country in the proposition to annex these islands, I beg to address you, and through you the honorable the House of Representatives, as briefly as possible, summarizing a few of the objections which prompted the delegates to the convention of the American Federation of Labor, held at Nashville, Tenn., December 15 to 21, 1897, to protest against the annexation of Hawaii to the United States.

Of a population estimated at about 100,000, Hawaii contains about 50,000 contract slave laborers, made up as follows:

About 80 per cent Chinese and Japanese.

About 20 per cent Portuguese from Azore Islands, and South Sea Islanders.

Some of the features of the contracts under which these 50,000 laborers work in Hawaii may be briefly stated here:

1. The term of the contract usually run for seven years.
2. That the laborers have no right to change their employers or leave their employment.
3. That the contract to labor is specifically enforceable by the laws of Hawaii.

4. That any time a laborer may serve in prison for desertion from labor is added to the term of the life of the contract to labor.

The laborers are corralled in gangs of from twelve to sixteen, each gang having an overseer on horseback, armed with a whip, with which diligence to labor is enforced.

The overwhelming number of contract slave laborers in Hawaii is employed in the sugar industry, and the master employers have always insisted that the sugar industry can not be successfully conducted without this species of slave labor in those islands.

Though this point contested, yet if Hawaii should become annexed to the United States, the status of the laborers may not be changed; and if the Sandwich Islands as a part of the United States are permitted to continue a species of labor repugnant to the free institutions of our country, there is no safeguard against the extension of the same species of contract slave labor to the sugar industry in Louisiana and the cotton fields of the Southern States.

It required more than twenty years of constant organization, agitation, and education to legislatively close the gates of our country to the Chinese. The wisdom of that legislation has been demonstrated, until there are few, if any, who now advocate its repeal.

The annexation of Hawaii would, with one stroke of the pen, obliterate that beneficent legislation and open wide our gates, which would threaten an inundation of Mongolians to overwhelm the free laborers of our country.

The annexation of Hawaii to the United States would be the admission of a slave State side by side with the free States of America, and, in the language of the statesmen of our own and all other countries, "We can not be part free and part slaves; we will either have to be all free or all slaves."

Though the number in Hawaii is small in comparison to the people of the United States, yet the dangers and the possibilities are such as to make the workers apprehensive.

In the war in which the people of our country are engaged the workers are gladly volunteering their lives and their all upon the altar of the honor and the interests of our country, but we submit that in the effort to make Cuba free and independent we should not hazard the loss of our own liberty. The foregoing is submitted in the name and by the authority of the American Federation of Labor.

Very respectfully,

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President.

Hon. THOMAS B. REED,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. JONES of Nevada. Will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. MCENERY. Certainly.

TIMBER SEIZURES IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. JONES of Nevada. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report back favorably, and I ask for the present consideration of, the resolution submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. JONES of Arkansas was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, by full committee or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it hereby is, authorized and directed to investigate the conduct of Special Agent C. A. M. Schlierholz in the seizure of timber in Arkansas; that said committee or subcommittee shall, as its discretion, visit the State of Arkansas or other locality necessary for a thorough investigation of the subject, and is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and employ a stenographer, and the necessary expenses incurred shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think the resolution ought to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. It is a matter of very great importance, and the Committee on Public Lands should consider the question as to whether it is proper to make this investigation. Then, if it thinks it is a proper investigation to make, it will bring the resolution back to the Senate and let the Senate pass upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I object.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator from North Dakota will allow me to make a suggestion, I do not think he will object. This resolution simply authorizes the Committee on Public Lands to act in this matter. I have no doubt the discretion will be in the committee. They are not compelled to take action in the matter unless there is such a condition of things shown as to make it necessary.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It practically directs the committee to make the investigation. I submit that the committee should take it under consideration.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am perfectly willing that the committee shall take it under consideration, and I should like to have it adopted with the distinct understanding in the Senate that the committee shall take it under consideration and do what in its wisdom ought to be done under all the circumstances. That is all I ask.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. But the resolution directs the Committee on Public Lands to make the investigation. As the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON] suggests to me, I do not believe the Committee on Contingent Expenses has the authority to direct the Committee on Public Lands or any other committee to make an investigation of any given subject.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is nothing of the sort proposed, Mr. President.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is practically a direction to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is nothing of the kind. The law requires that whenever there is a proposition made for an investigation of this kind, or for anything proposing to make an expenditure from the contingent fund of the Senate, it must go first to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to consider that feature of the case. That is all.

Mr. JONES of Nevada. That is all.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think the rule does not require that such a resolution shall go first to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It does. The law requires it, not the rule.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think the proper course would be for the resolution to go to the committee having those matters in charge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that, whatever the proper construction of the rule may be, the resolution did go to that committee and it is reported back. The committee does not direct the investigation, but the Senate directs it if it passes the resolution. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I want to object unless it is thoroughly understood as to whether, if the Senate passes the resolution, the Committee on Public Lands is thereby directed to make the investigation. If that is the effect of the passage of the resolution, I demand that the resolution shall be sent to the Committee on Public Lands before it is brought before the Senate for final action.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The matter will be subject to the discretion of the Committee on Public Lands. I so understand it, and so mean it. That is my wish in the matter, and I have no doubt that the Committee on Public Lands will do what ought to be done.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suggest to the Senator that he permit the resolution to go to the Committee on Public Lands first. We shall have a meeting of the committee on Monday, and the resolution will be reported back either favorably or unfavorably.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest, if the intent of the resolution is as indicated by the Senator from Arkansas, that it in terms should prescribe that the Committee on Public Lands may, in its discretion, make the investigation. If that is the real meaning and intent and purport of the resolution, let it be so expressed.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection to that modification.

Mr. CARTER. Let the resolution be so amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be modified according to the suggestion of the Senator from Montana. The resolution as modified will be read.

The SECRETARY. If amended, the resolution would read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands may, in its discretion, by full committee or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it hereby is, authorized and directed to investigate the conduct of Special Agent C. A. M. Schlierholz, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. What was the modification? I did not catch the exact change.

Mr. BERRY. The words "in its discretion" are inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from North Dakota that the modification was the insertion of the words "in its discretion."

Mr. McBRIDE. I suggest that the words "and directed" be stricken out.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask the Secretary to read the resolution once more.

The SECRETARY. The resolution as now modified reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands may, in its discretion, by full committee or any subcommittee thereof, investigate the conduct of Special Agent C. A. M. Schlierholz, etc.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have no objection to the resolution in that form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

AGREEMENT WITH SEMINOLE NATION OF INDIANS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask leave to submit a conference report on a Senate bill, which I should like to have disposed of. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. DAVIS. Will it lead to any debate?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think it will lead to no debate. I think the report can be disposed of in a minute.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3396) to ratify the agreement between the Dawes Commission and the Seminole Nation of Indians, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from all its amendments.

R. F. PETTIGREW,
JAMES K. JONES,

O. H. PLATT,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN F. LACEY,

HORACE G. SNOVER,

WM. T. ZENOR,

Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HAWLEY. If there is no further legislative business to be transacted this afternoon, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 24, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 23, 1898.

SUPERVISING INSPECTOR OF STEAM VESSELS.

John W. Oast, of Virginia, to be supervising inspector of steam vessels for the third district, to succeed W. H. Murdaugh, removed.

REGISTER OF LAND OFFICE.

Walter J. Reed, of Cle Elum, Wash., to be register of the land office at North Yakima, Wash., vice Andrew F. Snelling, term expired.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 23, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev.
HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10290. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims, and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, and the act amendatory thereto, approved
February 21, 1893.

XXXI—393

H. R. 8541. An act to define the rights of purchasers of the Belt
Railway, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10209. An act to amend an act of Congress approved March 2, 1893, entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," and for other purposes;

H. R. 1037. An act to provide for the construction of a bridge across Niagara River;

H. Res. 251. Joint resolution relating to the purchase of law books, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers for the military information division, Adjutant-General's Office;

H. R. 10606. An act to amend section 10 of an act approved April 22, 1898, entitled "An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes;" and

H. R. 6149. An act to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldier's Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, and the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

S. 2916. An act relating to the Washington, Woodside and Forest
Glen Railway and Power Company, of Montgomery County, Md.;

S. 3871. An act to authorize the Montgomery-Elmore Bridge and Improvement Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River near the city of Montgomery, Ala.;

S. 2785. An act for the relief of Blanche T. Hunton;

S. 1895. An act for the relief of the heirs of Thomas J. Chace and Thomas J. Chace, jr., late of Monticello, Fla.

S. R. 175. Joint resolution providing for the printing of additional copies of certain volumes of decisions of the Department of the Interior relating to public lands for sale and distribution.

S. R. 169. Joint resolution to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to refund and return to the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company $15,335.76, in accordance with the decision of the Secretary of the Interior dated March 3, 1898;

S. 4750. An act granting right of way through the Pike's Peak
Timber Land Reserve and the public lands to the Cripple Creek District Railway Company;

S. 2678. An act for the relief of Lizzie Hagny, as administratrix of the estate of Frank B. Smith, deceased;

S. 4759. An act to authorize the Missouri, Kansas and Texas
Railway Company to straighten and restore the channel of the South Canadian River, in the Indian Territory, at the crossing of said railroad;

S. 1726. An act concerning attorneys and marshals of the United States; and

S. 4738. An act to authorize the Kansas, Oklahoma and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Chillico Indian Reservation, Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION, CAYUGA ISLAND, 1901.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 141.

The joint resolution (S. R. 141) regarding the holding of a pan-American exposition in the year 1901 upon Cayuga Island, between the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls, in the State of New York, to illustrate the development of the Western Hemisphere during the nineteenth century, was read, with the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is this bill before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEX-ANDER] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution just read.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr.
BAILEY]—

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am about to offer an amendment which will obviate the objection which was made by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will hear the amendment read. The gentleman from Texas was sick yesterday evening, and is not here this morning.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment, the right to object being reserved.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 2; number section 3 as section 2 and section 4 as section 3.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The objection which the gentleman from Texas had to this bill was based entirely upon section 2. I learned upon consultation with him that if that section was stricken out he would not object to the passage of the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Section 2 is the one which provided for invitations to foreign governments?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes, sir. The gentleman from Texas, when this matter was up before, suggested that the Secretary of State would be authorized in any event to extend such invitations; and subsequently, upon interview with the Secretary of State, it was learned that such was the case and that section 2 was not necessary.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand the gentleman to say that the gentleman from Texas, upon the assurance that section 2 would be stricken out, agreed to withdraw his objection?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAY. I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] ought to be here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] objects.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. LOUIS RIVER NEAR FOND DU LAC.

Mr. MORRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10477) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the county of St. Louis, in the State of Minnesota, to build, or authorize the building of, a foot and wagon bridge across the St. Louis River between Minnesota and Wisconsin, at a point near Fond du Lac, in said State of Minnesota," approved June 11, 1890.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 6 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the county of St. Louis, in the State of Minnesota, to build, or authorize the building of, a foot and wagon bridge across the St. Louis River between Minnesota and Wisconsin, at a point near Fond du Lac, in said State of Minnesota," approved June 11, 1890, be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 6. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within three years and completed within five years from the date hereof."

Mr. MORRIS. The sole object of this bill is to extend for one year from the 11th of the present month the time for beginning the construction of this bridge.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MORRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS COLUMBIA RIVER.

Mr. WANGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5387) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River, between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post road."

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That "An act to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River, between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post road," approved March 24, 1890, be, and the same is hereby, extended, revived, and declared to be in full force and effect from and after March 24, 1892. Section 12 of said act, which provides that said act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge therein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within four years from the date of the approval thereof, shall be, and the same is hereby, so amended that the time within which said bridge is required to be commenced shall be within two years from June 24, 1897, and the time within which it is required that said bridge be completed shall be within four years from the 24th day of June, 1897.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce were read, as follows:

In line 16 strike out "two years" and in place thereof insert "one year;" also strike out the word "from" in the same line.

Strike out all of line 17 except the word "and" at the end of the line.

In line 19 strike out the word "four" and in place thereof insert the word "three;" also strike out the last three words, "twenty-fourth day," in same line.

Strike out all of line 20 and in place thereof insert the words "date of approval of this act."

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WANGER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, YANKTON, S. DAK.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3368) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Yankton, S. Dak.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act of June 22, 1892, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Yankton, S. Dak.," and the act of May 23, 1894, amendatory thereof, are hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 6. That this act shall be null and void if the bridge herein authorized is not completed within two years from the 22d day of June, 1898."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say to the gentleman that this bill does not seem to have been reported by the House committee.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Speaker, it has not been reported; but I spoke to the chairman of the committee, and he agreed to make a statement on the floor that there was no reason why it should not be reported and passed. He said that there would be no further meeting of the committee at this session, and we are very anxious to have it passed.

The SPEAKER. Who is the chairman?

Mr. KNOWLES. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. I do not see him here, but that was the statement he made to me.

This is simply an extension of the time for the construction of the bridge already authorized by law.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, it was passed.

BUSINESS OF THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent again to fix next Tuesday for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and I will be very glad to read the numbers of the bills and have them placed in the RECORD, so that all members may know what they are and what the committee proposes to call up at that time. They are reported from the Committee on Military Affairs and are mainly for the better administration of the Army during present conditions; they are recommended by the Secretary of War and are necessary for the successful prosecution of the business of the war. Their passage is imperatively demanded in the interest of both efficiency and economy.

One of them is for the increase of the Ordnance Department; this is a permanent increase. The report sets out exactly the nature of the increase, and I will say that, in the judgment of the Secretary of War and the Committee on Military Affairs, this increase is made necessary by reason of the increased work in the Ordnance Department which is entirely independent of the prosecution of the present war.

Another is for an increase in the Engineer Department, and I think every member of the House will recognize that this is necessary on an examination of the facts.

Another is for a temporary increase in the Inspector-General's Department, making an addition of three officers for the war only. Another is for an increase of the Quartermaster-General's Department, and affects the service only during the present war or for one year thereafter.

Another is for granting permission for any sect or religious denomination, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, to build a chapel at West Point. That is not a war measure. I am instructed by the committee, however, to ask that it be taken up for present consideration.

Another is a proposition fixing the rank and allowances of volunteer chaplains in the Army. The law only provides for salary for such officials in the Regular Army where they are not mounted. The general law provides salaries for post chaplains, who do not have horses.

Another is a proposition to revive the grade of military storekeeper for the present time only.

Now, I ask unanimous consent that next Tuesday be set apart for the consideration of these bills and others, the numbers and titles of which I will insert in the RECORD with my remarks.

Mr. HANDY. Does that include the Inspector-General's bill?

Mr. HULL. It does.

Mr. SULZER. These bills, I understand, are reported unanimously from the committee, are they not?

Mr. HULL. No; I think the gentleman from Virginia was opposed to the bill making a permanent increase in the Ordnance and Engineer Departments. But my understanding is that the others are reported unanimously.

Mr. MAHON. If the gentleman will exclude the sectarian bill there will be no objection. We do not want to waste a day on fruitless discussion of a bill of that kind at this time.

Mr. SULZER. Which bill is that?

Mr. MAHON. For providing a post chaplain at West Point, or rather allowing any religious denominations to build a chapel there.

Mr. SULZER. Are you opposed to that?

Mr. MAHON. No matter whether I am opposed to it or not. Why should you bring it in in this way?

Mr. SULZER. That bill was unanimously reported from the committee and should pass at once. There should be no objection to it when it is understood there will be no opposition to it.

Mr. HULL. I am willing to withdraw that bill because of the fact that it can be called up under the call of committees. The others would not have that privilege. But it is not a post chapel.

Mr. SULZER. I trust the gentleman will not do that. The committee has instructed the gentleman, as chairman of the committee, to call up this bill. It ought to pass now.

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs unanimously, and in view of the fact that many more or less eminent Republican gentlemen the other day rushed with officious zeal to the defense of the Methodist Episcopal Church in a matter not half as important to that denomination as this measure is to the communicants of another faith, I will object to the request of the gentleman from Iowa if the West Point bill is excluded.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has withdrawn his objection. Now I hope no one else will object. The request of the chairman of the Military Committee is a fair one and ought to be granted. We can take up and pass all these bills next Tuesday.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman from New York that that is the only bill in the list that we can take up when the committee is called.

Mr. MAHANY. Yes, but the chairman of the Military Committee understands very well that the prospect for a call of the committee is very remote at this late stage of the session.

Mr. HULL. We came within a very short distance of reaching it the other day. But I will withdraw none of the bills the committee instructed me to call up. They can all stand or fall together.

Mr. HAY. I think there will be no objection on this side of the House to the consideration of any of these bills which have for their object the increasing of the necessary force of the Army during the war, but I ask the gentleman to eliminate from his request any bill which is of a permanent character and which permanently increases any branch of the service. I think that ought to be done hereafter. If that will be done as a temporary matter, I do not think any objection will be made; but if he wants to bring in anything that increases any department permanently, then I think that ought to be in the future. I do not think any objection will be made on this side of the House to any bill which is reported for the purpose of meeting the emergencies which now arise.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Which are the bills in this list that permanently increase the Army?

Mr. HAY. The ordnance bill.

Mr. MAHANY. Do I understand that the objection of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] is withdrawn?

Mr. HAY. I made no objection.

Mr. MAHANY. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] object?

Mr. MAHON. I make no objection.

Mr. MAHANY. Then I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that Tuesday, after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of the bills which he has stated to the House?

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withdraw—

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] is a member of the committee, and he knows that I am simply obeying the instructions of the committee, and that I have no right to withdraw any of the bills which I have been instructed by the committee to bring forward. The gentleman from Virginia was the only member of the committee who voted against the instructions.

Mr. HAY. I was.

Mr. HULL. I am simply obeying the orders of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAY. I shall not object myself, but I have just made this statement.

Mr. BERRY. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa if these appointments are to be made from civil life?

Mr. HULL. No, sir; they are not made from civil life. They are made in the Ordnance Department on competitive examination and go in as first lieutenants from the line of the Army. They are made in the Engineer Department from those who graduated the highest at West Point, and none of them are made from civil life.

Mr. BERRY. When you appoint these men, does that create vacancies in the Army to be filled from civil life?

Mr. HULL. It makes some promotions. It does not increase the number of officers or do anything except in the way of making additional promotions to enter this corps.

Mr. BERRY. I live in a very warlike part of this country. In the distribution of lieutenants I understand that the State of New York has got fifty or sixty and I have only seen three in my own section of the country. I should like a little of the distribution of the pap that is to come through the Army if we are to have any more of these appointments.

Mr. GAINES. And have some Democrats and Populites put in, too.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope there will be no objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa, and in expressing that hope I do not commit myself to all the bills that are to be considered, simply because I am not familiar with the provisions of some of the bills.

Mr. HULL. Let me interrupt the gentleman to say—

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). But I want to say to the House that it is obvious that at this period of the session no objectionable legislation can pass if any gentleman strenuously insists upon opposition, under the rules. I believe that most, and perhaps all, of the bills are meritorious, qualifying my statement only because I have no information as to one or two of the bills. I hope there will be no objection to the order requested. Gentlemen will have ample opportunity, as I have stated, to defeat objectionable legislation, if there be any.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], I understand from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] that the ordnance bill does permanently increase the Army.

Mr. HULL. It increases the Ordnance Corps.

Mr. HAY. It increases what is known as the Ordnance Corps, and in that respect it does increase the Army permanently.

Mr. HULL. It increases the Ordnance Corps, but not the officers of the Army.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Outside of that bill, I should like the gentleman to explain what this military-store bill is. Does that inaugurate the old system of sutlers?

Mr. HULL. It provides one military storekeeper at Washington that we had during the civil war. The bill is urged by the President and by the Department. Of course, as has been stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], it will be very difficult to pass any objectionable legislation with the slim House that we are sure to have, and there will be an opportunity for a full discussion of the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that the position that this side of the House has taken, not all gentlemen by any means, but that some of us have taken, and I believe in it thoroughly, is that we ought to appropriate every dollar and pass every bill necessary for the men in the field; but when they come here to this House to increase the bombproof positions in Washington, and put large expenses upon the people of this country that are not necessary for the Army in the field, and to organize these departments permanently, in the face of this war excitement, I do not think they ought to pass; but, as far as I am concerned, after what the gentleman has stated about the inspectors' bill, the quartermasters' bill, the West Point bill, the chaplain bill, and the military-store bill, as they do not permanently make this increase, I am willing to give consent, if the gentleman will ask for them separately.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that the Ordnance and Engineer Departments are absolutely overwhelmed with work, and it requires special skill. So far as the Ordnance Department is concerned, that is the only corps that is filled in the line of the Army by competitive examination, taking the highest character of talent that can be found in the service. It has charge of the coast defense, the ordnance, and the manufacture of guns, and the work of the department is conducted the same as it was in time of peace, on the basis that it was twenty-three years ago, and it can not possibly be expected to fully measure up to the present requirements.

Now, if it was increasing officers in the Army, my friend's position would be right; but it is simply taking them from the line and transferring them to the ordnance. There is an additional promotion, but the promotion comes in the transfer and afterwards. All enter there as second lieutenants. They are examined as second lieutenants, promoted to first lieutenants, and after fourteen years' service become captains, regardless of any vacancy.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Iowa does not understand the position I take, which is that during war excitement matters like these are brought—

Mr. STEELE. If we can have an agreement, that is all right; but I do object to taking the forenoon in order to find out whether anybody is going to object. It becomes a very puerile business.

Mr. HAY. I want to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Iowa, if the gentleman will permit me. My suggestion is this—

Mr. FARIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. We can not hear.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bills named by the gentleman from Iowa on Tuesday, after the reading of the Journal?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If we can not come to an agreement with the gentleman from Iowa, I will object.

Mr. HULL. I can not take those bills out, because I am informed, and the whole investigation made shows, that these two corps of the Army need the increase badly now, and would need it badly if the war should close to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman guarantee that he will give us ample opportunity on Tuesday to debate the bills and offer amendments?

Mr. HENDERSON. That ought to be done. There ought to be the fullest opportunity for discussion.

Mr. HULL. Of course; I will do that.

Mr. MAHANY. I would like the chairman to state what he means by "ample time for discussion." Is there not a likelihood that under this arrangement some of these bills may be debated to such an extent that the others will not be reached?

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

Mr. DOCKERY. I assume that the gentleman will give opportunity for full discussion.

Mr. STEELE. I withdraw the call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CODDING and Mr. BAIRD objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made on both sides.

Mr. DOCKERY. Who objected?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CODDING] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BAIRD].

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a privileged motion. I move that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

DEEP CREEK, VIRGINIA.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution No. 18.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to prepare and submit an estimate of the cost of widening and deepening Deep Creek, Virginia, from the South Branch of the Elizabeth River to the new lock at the Dismal Swamp Canal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. BARTLETT. I object.

Mr. WISE. I will say to the gentleman who objected to the bill that it was introduced by a gentleman on your side, and I am asking to take it up by request.

Mr. BARTLETT. I object to the request of the gentleman from Virginia.

FRANK DUNN.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 2419. I want to say to the House that I have asked but very little of the House, and I would be very glad to have this relief for a Federal soldier. I want to get him right on the record, so if he wants to go to the war, he can go into action again in the right way.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2419) for the relief of Frank Dunn.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to Corp. Frank Dunn, a noncommissioned officer of the Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, a certificate of honorable discharge as of the date of his dishonorable discharge from the Army, and all disabilities imposed upon him by reason of said dishonorable discharge and of the sentences of the general court-martial by which he was tried, and the same are hereby, removed.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported unanimously by the committee, and I ask that it do pass.

Mr. STEELE. I ask to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2419) for the relief of Frank Dunn, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to submit the following report:

It is shown by official documents, hereto attached, that the beneficiary of this bill enlisted as a private May 15, 1861, under the name of Frank Henry, and served faithfully until mustered out of service with his company May 24, 1863; also, that he again enlisted May 19, 1864, to serve three years, in Company C, Third Pennsylvania Cavalry, and that he was transferred to Company B, Battalion Third Pennsylvania Cavalry, which company, by consolidation, afterwards became Company L, Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry; that he served faithfully therein, having attained the rank of sergeant, until dishonorably discharged the service for "disobedience of orders," September 15, 1865.

It appears that this soldier, with many other noncommissioned officers and privates of the Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, when stationed near Richmond, after the close of the war, refused to drill as ordered on July 13, 1865, claiming that they were overworked and had not been paid for six months. It does not appear that this soldier, or the others, refused at any time to perform other duties. The sentence of the court-martial was that Frank Dunn, alias Charles Simpson, and those found guilty with him, were—

"To be dishonorably discharged the service of the United States; to forfeit to the United States all pay and allowances after the 30th day of April, 1865, and to be confined at hard labor at the Dry Tortugas, or such other place as the general commanding may direct, for a period of eighteen months."

It appears that this sentence, which was certainly severe enough under the circumstances, was carried out, except a portion of the period of imprisonment, which was remitted by President Andrew Johnson.

In view of the facts that this soldier had an excellent record throughout the war and up to the date of the offense for which he has suffered so long and so severely, that the war was over at the time, and that citizen soldiers who enlisted for a specific purpose could not be expected, after the consummation of the object of their enlistment, to appreciate the same necessity for maintaining discipline under all conditions which obtains with professional soldiers, and that it is the opinion of your committee that said soldier has certainly suffered enough for this single offense, they recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Case of Frank Henry, late of the Fourteenth New York Infantry Volunteers, and Charles Simpson, late of the Third Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE,
War Department, March 17, 1896.

It appears from the records of this office that Frank Henry was enrolled and mustered into service May 17, 1861, as a private in Company E, Fourteenth New York Infantry, to serve two years, and that he served faithfully until May 24, 1863, when he was mustered out of service, as a corporal, with the company.

It also appears that Charles Simpson was enrolled May 19, 1864, to serve three years, and assigned to Company C, Third Pennsylvania Cavalry; and that he was transferred to Company B, Battalion Third Pennsylvania Cavalry, in orders dated July 27, 1864, which company became, in June, 1865, (New) Company L, Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry.

He was arraigned and tried before a general court-martial, the proceedings of which were promulgated in General Court-Martial Orders, No. 521, dated September 15, 1865, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, a copy of which is hereto attached.

A report in the case of John M. Query and other former members of the Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, including the soldier in question, was furnished the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, July 17, 1890, on H. R. bill No. 1021, Fifty-first Congress, first session.

Since the date of that report it has been determined by this Department that Sergeant Charles Simpson was dishonorably discharged from service as of Company L, Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry, to date September 15, 1865.

Respectfully submitted,

F. C. AINSWORTH,

Colonel, United States Army, Chief Record and Pension Office.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR FOR THE WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 15, 1896.

The claim of Frank Dunn, as private and corporal, Company E, Fourteenth New York Infantry, and sergeant, Company L, Fifth Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, for pay and bounty, has been examined and disallowed.

Soldier was enrolled April 24, 1861, mustered in for two years (under the alias of Frank Henry), and mustered out May 24, 1863; again enrolled (under the alias of Charles Simpson) May 18, 1864, for three years, received $25 advance bounty at muster in, was tried by general court-martial, found guilty, sentenced to forfeit all pay and allowances after April 30, 1865, and to be dishonorably discharged the service, and was dishonorably discharged to date September 15, 1865. He received arrears of pay for first service, including settlement of clothing account, together with $100 bounty, act of July 22, 1861, but having been mustered out at place of enlistment, travel allowances were not due. He received arrears of pay in second service to December, 1864.

Having enlisted in second service after April 2, 1864 (and become entitled to a greater bounty than $100), discharged before serving two years for a cause other than wounds received in line of duty, expiration of term of service, close of war, or sickness incurred since last enlistment, and as his discharge was a dishonorable one, he is not entitled to veteran bounty under joint resolution January 13, 1864, additional bounty under act of July 23, 1865, nor to bounty under any act of Congress. As he received at final discharge transportation in kind to his home, and as his indebtedness to the United States for $25 advance bounty not deducted, clothing drawn, and for pistol charged against him is in excess of pay (and clothing allowance) from date of last payment, December, 1864, to date of forfeiture, April 30, 1865, and as he was enrolled, discharged, and paid as aforesaid, he is not entitled to pay or bounty.

Respectfully, yours,

T. STOBO FARROW, Auditor.

No discharge certificate filed.

Mr. STEELE (during the reading of the report). I withdraw the request for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HENRY of Mississippi, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF OWNERS OF MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4439) to relieve owners of mining claims who enlist in the military service of the United States for duty in the war with Spain from performing assessment work during such term of service.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 224 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which require that on each claim located after the 10th day of May, 1872, and until patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year, shall not apply to claims owned by persons who may enlist in the Volunteer Army of the United States for service in a war between this country and Spain, so that no mining claim owned by such person which has been regularly located and recorded as required by the local laws and mining regulations shall be subject to forfeiture for nonperformance of the annual assessments during the time such owner is in the military service of the Government as aforesaid.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Insert, in line 9, after the word "claims," the words "or parts of claims." Insert, after the word "Army," in the tenth line of the said bill, the words "or Navy."

Insert, after the word "claim," in the twelfth line thereof, the words "or any part thereof."

Strike out all the balance of said section after the word "recorded," in the thirteenth line of the first page of said bill, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "shall be subject to forfeiture for nonperformance of the annual assessments until six months after said owner is mustered out of service, or, if he should not survive the war, then six months after his death in the service."

Also by inserting a new section, to be numbered 2, to read as follows:

"That those desiring to take advantage of this act shall file or cause to be filed a notice in the clerk's office where the location certificate of said mine is recorded, before the expiration of the assessment year, giving notice of his enlistment and of his desire to hold said claim under this act."

Also by inserting a new section, to be numbered 3, to read as follows:

"That if any such enlisted soldier or sailor has a co-owner or co-owners in any mining claim, and who are not in the Army or Navy, and such co-owner or co-owners fail to do such a proportion of one hundred dollars' worth of work per annum as the interest of such nonenlisted person or persons bears to the whole claim, then such interest shall be open to relocation by any other qualified person or persons by their doing the necessary work thereon, and filing an affidavit of labor showing the forfeiture, and that the relocators had done the annual work required of such nonenlisted persons and succeeded therein in right under this act, which work may be done at any time after the expiration of the assessment year and before the former owners resume work thereon. The work and affidavit aforesaid shall operate as a transfer of said forfeited interest from the former owners to said relocators."

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time; and being read the third time, it was passed.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the title ought to be amended by adding the word "naval," so it will read "to enlist in the military and naval service of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the proposed amendment will be made.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MISSOURI AND KANSAS TELEPHONE COMPANY.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 10509.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Missouri and Kansas Telephone Company is hereby authorized and empowered to construct and maintain telephone lines and offices for general business purposes in the Ponca, Otoe, and Missouri Reservations in the Territory of Oklahoma upon the terms and conditions hereinafter prescribed.

SEC. 2. That said company shall pay to the nation or tribe through which it extends its telephone lines, in whole or in part, annually, $5 for each 10 miles of said line so constructed and maintained.

SEC. 3. That before said telephone line shall be constructed under the provisions of this act consent shall be obtained from all persons in the lawful possession of improvements authorizing said construction upon such improvements; and if the right to construct any such line can not be obtained by agreement, then the amount of damages shall be determined by arbitration, one arbitrator to be selected by the company and one by the owner of the improvements, and if they fail to agree they shall select a third person, and the award so made shall be binding upon the parties thereto: Provided, That either party dissatisfied with such award may appeal therefrom, within twenty days, to the United States court exercising jurisdiction over the tribe or nation in which such improvements are situated by filing an original petition in said court exhibiting the findings of said board, and upon the final hearing of said petition the court or jury trying the same shall assess the actual damage caused by the construction of said line. The company shall not begin the construction of said telephone line upon the improvements of another without his consent, or until the board of arbitrators herein provided for shall have made an award of the damages and the company shall have paid or tendered in payment the amount of such award.

SEC. 4. That nothing herein shall be construed as exempting said telephone lines from the payment of any tax which may be lawfully assessed against such company; and Congress hereby expressly reserves the right to regulate the tolls or charges of any lines constructed under the provisions of this act.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, do I understand from the reading of the bill that it is the purpose to take private property for public use, by the owners of property appointing one arbitrator, and the company appointing another arbitrator, and those two arbitrators choosing a third?

Mr. COWHERD. This bill is in the identical terms of the general bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs for any telegraph or telephone line seeking a right of way through the Indian Territory, except that their bill covered the whole Territory, while this covers only two or three reservations in Oklahoma.

Mr. PAYNE. But is that the purpose and terms of the bill?

Mr. COWHERD. The property is not owned by anyone there. They call it improvements. They settle on the land, while the title remains in the tribe or nation. It is proposed when they can not agree with the owner as to the damage to the improvement that it shall be arbitrated.

Mr. PAYNE. But the improvement is private property.

Mr. COWHERD. No; the only property in the party is the right of possession; that is the only thing injured by the setting of the poles. Of course, it is practically very little injury, anyway.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, it is a new way of taking private property for public use.

Mr. KING. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Is an opportunity afforded for ultimate adjudication in the courts if either party is dissatisfied? Is there a tribunal to which resort can be had if either party is dissatisfied with the award?

Mr. COWHERD. Well, I copied it from the general bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs. As I remember, it is provided that upon filing a petition in court either party dissatisfied with the award may appeal to the court.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Suppose one party declined to enter into arbitration. How do you get the property?

Mr. COWHERD. I suppose it would have to be left to the court.

Mr. NORTHWAY. You can not leave it to the court until after the arbitrators have agreed. If there is no power to compel them to arbitrate, how do you get it into court?

Mr. COWHERD. Well, that question I can not answer. I suppose the court would appoint arbitrators, anyway.

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve an objection. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] if he would not accept an amendment in these words:

Provided, That if any bonds be issued in excess of the cost of construction and equipment pursuant to the provisions of the bill, all such bonds shall be null and void.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman means the bonds of these particular lines constructed in this reservation.

Mr. McEWAN. I mean that the company shall not be allowed to use this franchise that we are now giving them for the purpose of issuing bonds in excess of the cost of construction and equipment.

Mr. COWHERD. If the gentleman will make that refer to the line in this reservation, I have no objection.

Mr. NORTHWAY. But suppose the bonds are sold to innocent purchasers, are they afterwards to be declared void?

Mr. COWHERD. I confess I do not think it is a good amendment.

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, I have a bill already before the House making it a general law that companies shall not issue bonds in excess of the cost of construction and equipment. I believe a great deal of the evil and hard times of this country comes from the fact that there has been an overissue of bonds. We know it is the case with the Philadelphia and Reading, the Baltimore and Ohio, the New England, and the Union Pacific; and we do know that thousands of millions of dollars of bonds have been issued in excess of the cost of construction on roads, and it has in a great degree caused the hard times. Now, as far as I can, I have made up my mind that I will prevent the overissue of bonds in the future.

Mr. KING. Does that refer to Government bonds as well?

Mr. McEWAN. I thank the gentleman for that suggestion. I have been against the issue of Government bonds, except when it was necessary, and I do not think the last issue of $400,000,000 was necessary. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COWHERD. I hope the gentleman from New Jersey will not get that issue into this little bill of mine. If the gentleman will pardon me and let me explain this matter—

Mr. McEWAN. I do not believe the $400,000,000 was necessary, for $200,000,000 would have carried us over to December.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment? The Missouri and Kansas Telephone Company is a great company, whose operations extend over nearly all of western Missouri, nearly all of eastern Kansas, and nearly all of Oklahoma. They have connecting lines extending from Kansas City to Chicago, St. Louis, and other large cities. These are very small reservations down in Oklahoma which this company wants to cross in order to connect Kansas City with some of the cities and towns in Oklahoma. No bonds will be issued upon the lines crossing these reservations, because the cost of putting up the lines will be very small.

Mr. McEWAN. I want to do what is perfectly fair, and I do not think my amendment can be objectionable.

Mr. COWHERD. I think the amendment is an eminently proper one, but I do not think it should be put upon this bill.

Let me make another suggestion. Several telegraph and telephone companies, I am informed, have extended their lines across these reservations without any authority from Congress or from the Department. They could not get it from the Department. But this company, when it started to build a little extension of its line across there, found it necessary to have this authority.

I understand from the gentleman from New Jersey that he now modifies his amendment, and rather than have an objection interposed I will agree to the amendment. I do not think it amounts to anything in the present case, because there will be no bonds issued for the construction of this extension.

Mr. LOUD. I do not see how the bill can be amended when it is not yet before the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McEWAN. Have I not the right to amend?

The SPEAKER. Not until the bill is before the House.

Mr. McEWAN. I have reserved an objection for the purpose of offering this amendment; and the gentleman accepts it.

Mr. COWHERD. Rather than have the gentleman object.

Mr. McEWAN. The amendment as accepted is as follows:

And be it further provided, That if any bonds are issued in excess of the cost of construction and equipment pursuant to the provisions of this bill, all such bonds shall be null and void.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. NORTHWAY. The gentleman from Missouri ought not to accept that amendment; and it ought not to be adopted without some further provision. This company may go forward and issue bonds, if they can find anybody foolish enough to buy them, with this provision under which purchasers could not know whether the bonds were void or not; but if the bonds should be sold, void bonds might perhaps pass into the hands of innocent holders; and the amendment makes no provision that in such case the company shall refund the money received for the bonds or that the holders of the bonds shall have a lien on the company's property until reimbursement is made. Thus this amendment in its present form would legislate against innocent people. There ought to be some provision that if any bonds should be void the company shall be responsible for them, and that the void bonds shall be a lien on their property.

Mr. McEWAN. The answer to the gentleman's point is that the amendment makes the issue of bonds beyond the cost of construction a criminal offense; and those who issued them would be liable civilly for damages and criminally to imprisonment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. McEWAN, The SPEAKER. The yeas appear to have it.

Mr. McEWAN. I thought my amendment was accepted.

The SPEAKER. The House has not agreed to the amendment.

Mr. McEWAN. Well, I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 6, noes 33.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question being taken on the amendments reported by the committee, they were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COWHERD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BENJAMIN S. BARNES.

Mr. MOODY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 369) for the relief of Benjamin S. Barnes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Benjamin S. Barnes, of Boxford, Mass., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,273, in full compensation for damages to the land, building, and appurtenances of the said Benjamin S. Barnes, at Boxford, Mass., by the encampment thereon and the resulting damages by United States volunteers in 1862.

Mr. SIMS. Does this bill come from the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. MOODY. Yes, sir; it has been unanimously reported. It proposes to carry out the judgment of a military court.

Mr. SIMS. Why should not this bill take its chances with other war claims?

Mr. MOODY. Because very many bills of this class have not taken their chances. This bill was not put on the general bill for which we all voted, although it properly belonged there.

Mr. SIMS. I have a bill of this kind which has been unanimously reported and which I should be glad to have passed.

Mr. MOODY. I should be very glad to help the gentleman on his bill.

Mr. SIMS. I have no objection, if we can take these bills up together.

Mr. MOODY. If the gentleman will let this bill go through, we will help him out on the other, if it is a just bill.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, I should like to hear a statement as to how these damages occurred.

Mr. MOODY. I will very gladly make a statement.

The man for whose relief this bill is intended, and who is 84 years of age, was and is now the owner of a farm at Boxford, Mass.—far away, of course, from the theater of the war. His farm was taken for an encampment for a brigade of infantry. During the time that it was occupied as an encampment the walls and fences were used by order of the post commandant, and wood to a considerable quantity was cut off the farm and used for fuel, and his barn was burned by the negligence of the troops.

The owner of the property made claim at once—immediately at the time—and the Quartermaster-General of the United States organized a court of inquiry, constituted it in the ordinary and regular form, and the original of the order is now in the War Department, making Capt. E. M. Morris, then an officer of the Regular Army, one of the members of the court, and the two county commissioners of the county in which the farm of this old man was situated the other members, the court thus constituted being directed to inquire into the circumstances and determine, first, whether the United States owed anything to the claimant, and, in the second place, if anything was due, how much.

The court met on the 21st and 22d of October, immediately after the damage had been done. They met again on the 25th of November, and again on the 8th and 16th of December, and after consideration and the hearing of evidence filed a written report awarding the sum of $1,273 as rightfully due him for the destruction of the property. The claim was immediately forwarded to the War Department, together with the claim for rent, which latter claim was paid.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. How much was allowed on the rental?

Mr. MOODY. Some $500, I think. I forget exactly the amount, but it was a comparatively small sum. And, Mr. Speaker, the only ground on which these damages claimed were not paid at the time was that the awards required an appropriation to be made by Congress.

The owner of the property was an old man, quite along in years, and he has never taken particular care of the claim, believing that the Government, having awarded it to him, would some day or other seek him out and pay him what was justly his due.

Now, the claim was so old when I introduced the bill for the relief of the claimant that I was not content with the facts appearing of record here, where committees had repeatedly reported the bill favorably, but I went myself to the War Department and looked up every paper relating to it from beginning to end, and in consultation with the officer in charge of these matters. I was convinced of the justice of the claim. The official of the War Department with whom I consulted told me, which substantiated my own investigation, that it was a just and long-delayed claim; that it was rightfully due by the United States, and should have been paid years ago.

Now, I trust under the circumstances that nobody will object to the present consideration of the bill for its settlement. This claimant is an old man, he needs the money, it is justly due to him, and there is no necessity whatever, and no reason and no justice, in withholding payment any longer.

Mr. BRUCKER. What is the amount of the claim?

Mr. MOODY. One thousand two hundred and seventy-three dollars.

Mr. LOUD. I would ask the gentleman who presents this matter if the committee make any report regarding recent investigations into the question? Is there any communication from the War Department relating to it?

Mr. MOODY. I only speak from hearsay when I say that the papers in the War Department have been carefully investigated, not only by myself, but by somebody representing the Committee on Claims of the House. After I had looked over them and satisfied myself of the justice—the unquestionable justice—of the claim somebody on behalf of the Committee on Claims went and looked through them again, going through the same process of investigation, and it was not until after both of us had looked them over and come to the same conclusion with reference to the justice of the claim that the report was made to the House.

Mr. LOUD. I do not want to doubt, of course, the gentleman's word, and I do not mean to imply such a thing. But he knows, and other members know, that such a thing as paying claims twice has occurred.

Now, in view of that fact there should be something in the report, it seems to me, or something should appear from the Department, an official communication printed with the report from the Department, showing that this claim has not been paid. Otherwise the House, in dealing with these matters, and the committee could never be entirely satisfied that a settlement had not previously been made. And I make this suggestion in view of what we recognize as the action of these committees heretofore.

Some Committees on Claims report these claims back favorably, because somebody once before reported a similar case, or perhaps somebody made the report covering the same ground fifteen or twenty or thirty years ago. It is not, in my judgment, a proper way to deal with matters of this kind.

The gentleman can readily see that a case of this character should bear the imprint, and it should be embodied in the report, of the Department itself, certifying to the correctness of the claim, and that it has not been paid and is worthy of consideration. In other words, that it is a meritorious case.

Mr. MOODY. I will say to the gentleman from California that while I recognize the justice of his suggestion, still this report has been carefully considered and carefully prepared. We have found on an investigation that the claimant has not been paid, and the evidence accompanying the report shows that fact conclusively. The officer in charge of the matter tells me that there is no possible doubt about it. It could not possibly have been paid without some record in the War Department establishing that fact. No such record appears, and, on the contrary, there is every evidence to show that it has not been paid, although the award has been made.

Mr. LOUD. But the gentleman sees the difficulty.

Mr. MOODY. I see the difficulty.

Mr. LOUD. We have the personal word of the gentleman, which no one here, I think, would question, but it comes down wholly to the personal statement of an individual member.

Mr. MOODY. I quite agree with what the gentleman says, but I trust that he will not object to one more violation of the rule which he would like to see enforced.

Mr. LOUD. Of course I would not question the gentleman's word.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MOODY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. Res. 321) for improvement of San Joaquin River and Stockton and Mormon channels, California.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2773. An act for the relief of Virginia I. Mullan, of Annapolis, Md.; and

S. R. 170. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to invite, through the proper channels, the Governments of England, France, Germany, Austria, Russia, Belgium, Switzerland, Mexico, and Venezuela to send details of troops to this country to participate in a jubilee to be given in New York by the trustees of the Red Cross Society of New York.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8581) for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Public Printer be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to print, for distribution by the Department of State, 5,000 copies of Commercial Relations, 1896 and 1897, and (in separate form) 10,000 copies of the Review of the World's Commerce, etc., being part of said Commercial Relations.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 2778. An act for the relief of Virginia I. Mullan, of Annapolis, Md.—to the Committee on Claims.

MOSES PENDERGRASS.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 242) for the relief of Moses Pendergrass, of Missouri.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, is hereby authorized and directed to settle and audit the accounts and claim of Moses Pendergrass, as contractor in carrying the mails on route No. 23630, in the State of Missouri, from July 1, 1887, to May 6, 1888, upon the basis and amount of $317 per annum as his bid for such service, under the advertisement of September 15, 1886, and of the orders of the Post-Office Department increasing the service thereon, and to pay him for such service an amount not exceeding $379.56, in full satisfaction therefor; and the said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the report read, reserving the right to object. I believe it is a short report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls for the reading of the report.

Mr. ROBB. The report was made by the Committee on Claims on Tuesday. I desire to make this statement: A House bill was introduced for the same purpose and went before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and that committee agreed to report the bill favorably. The Senate bill which I now present was referred to the Committee on Claims, and that committee unanimously reported it favorably. The facts are briefly these: There was a contract for carrying the mails awarded to Mr. Pendergrass, the bid being made out for $4 instead of for $400. The contractor had some one else do the writing for him.

The contract was for carrying the mail 15 miles, and six trips a week had to be made. The contractor completed his contract for one year, carried the mails 15 miles, making the six trips a week, and only received $4 as pay. His bid was intended to be for $400; but by mistake it was written $4; so the Department could only pay the $4. I will say that this bill is recommended by the Department upon the basis of the lowest bid, which was $317. That is what the bill asks for.

Mr. LOUD. I think I understand this case. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have reported upon it, as I think the gentleman will find. I only wanted to bring out the facts as to the merits of the case. There was plainly a mistake on the part of the bidder. I am familiar with the circumstances.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ROBB, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

INVENTORY OF DOCUMENTS IN FOLDING ROOM.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the superintendent of the House folding room is hereby authorized to take a correct inventory of all books, pamphlets, and maps credited to members of the Fifty-fifth Congress on the books of his office, and that a correct inventory be taken of all books, pamphlets, and maps stored in the folding room at the Capitol and in the annex folding room: that the work shall be performed during the recess and a report made to the House at the beginning of the third session of the Fifty-fifth Congress.

Mr. HEMENWAY. There will be no additional expense, no additional employees, and this will result in a saving to the Government of about $1,800 a year for rent.

Mr. LOUD. If this is done, we shall have to pay for it, you can bet on that.

The SPEAKER. Will this continue during the vacation temporary employees who otherwise would not be employed after the adjournment?

Mr. HEMENWAY. No, sir; there will be no additional expense in any way. Those who are on the annual roll will perform this duty during the vacation.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman has an assurance of that, I suppose?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have it here from the superintendent of the folding room, saying there will be no additional expense.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has the gentleman a letter to that effect?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have it here.

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish you would put it in the RECORD. It seems to be a proper proceeding, but we should have some assurance that there will be no expense involved. Let the letter be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The letter can either be read or printed in the RECORD. This is only for the convenience of all the members, so that each member can secure the documents credited to him.

Mr. LOUD. Why could not this be done without any resolution?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, the superintendent of the folding room thinks it is necessary that the resolution should be passed. The gentleman knows that down in the basement we have millions of documents which have lain there for years. The object is to separate them, so that those who are entitled to them can get them.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman knows very well that the superintendent of the document room can use his force, if he has sufficient force, to do the work without any direction of the House. It looks a little suspicious.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not know that he can.

Mr. LOUD. Let us have the letter read, and see what the superintendent says.

The letter was read, as follows:

OFFICE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE FOLDING ROOM,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., June 22, 1893.

DEAR SIR: I beg leave to call your attention to the present condition of the House folding room with regard to the large accumulation which is rapidly filling all vaults and archives in connection with said department.

There are at present in stock in the House folding room over 1,500,000 volumes, and with the rapid accumulation something must necessarily be done to provide more space, so that the work in connection with the department can be properly and speedily performed.

I would respectfully request the passage of the resolution reported to the House, that a full and accurate invoice of stock be taken and compared with the accounts of members, and in this way all the old publications can be located and without doubt some disposition made of them by the House, thus giving more room for the proper conduct of work in hand.

Very respectfully, yours,

F. B. LYON.

Superintendent Folding Room, House of Representatives.

Hon. J. A. HEMENWAY,
House of Representatives.

Mr. LOUD. There is no statement of that kind in there.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Here is another statement, not signed, by the superintendent of document room.

Mr. LOUD. I ask the gentleman to let this lie over until the Committee on Accounts can look into it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I would ask the gentleman to let this statement be read which says no extra force would be required to do the work.

Mr. LOUD. But that, Mr. Speaker, may be a temporary force now employed. I hope the gentleman will let it go over until the Committee on Accounts can look into the matter.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ALEXANDER L. POLLOCK.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 153.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 153) for the relief of Verona E. Pollock.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mrs. Verona E. Pollock, widow of Alexander L. Pollock, late consul of the United States at San Salvador, Salvador, Central America, the sum of $13,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as compensation for losses from the destruction of property and otherwise by reason of the sickness and death of her said husband, while at his post of duty as such consul, during a scourge of yellow fever in said country.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I think we had better have the report read in that case.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. I will state to the gentleman from California that the report is very voluminous, but I can state the facts.

Mr. LOUD. Well, I will listen to the statement of the gentleman first, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Alexander L. Pollock was appointed consul-general to the Republic of San Salvador in 1893. Immediately after assuming the duties of his office a revolution broke out in that country, and by reason of that the lives of American citizens were greatly jeopardized. The minister from this country was not in that Republic at that time, and Mr. Pollock was compelled to perform not only the duties of consul-general, but also the duties which pertained to the office of minister.

During the progress of the revolution, as stated here by numerous affidavits and also by the statements of Mr. Lewis Baker, who was our minister, and Charles M. Thomas, who was commander of the American ship Bennington, and who was there at the time, it is shown that the consul-general performed valuable services in protecting the lives and property of American citizens. He was warned to flee for his life, but refused to leave his post. While so engaged, and while the revolution was in progress, the yellow fever broke out; but Mr. Pollock remained at his post of duty, and owing to the onerous character of his services he became enervated and liable to disease, and finally contracted this dreaded disease, from which he died. His wife and children, who were with him, became victims of the same malady. They remained there for a number of months, being isolated and driven into the woods for safety.

All the property which they had was destroyed. Efforts were made, as will appear by letters from Mr. Rockhill, Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Richard Olney, Secretary of State, and other representatives of the Government, to secure this property; but apparently through the fault of a representative of the Government it was not recovered. The wife of the deceased and her children, after enduring untold hardships, at last succeeded in reaching the United States.

Mr. LOVE. What kind of property was this? Personal property?

Mr. KING. It was personal property. Mr. Pollock died soon after assuming the duties of the office. It has been the custom of the Government from time immemorial, when public officers of this kind die in the performance of their duty, to appropriate one year's salary, and to this has frequently been added the fees and allowances which were receivable for the same period. The Senate allowed the salary and the fees and also an amount covering a portion of the value of the personal property lost and destroyed. It was reported unanimously by the Senate committee and thereafter it passed the Senate. A bill was introduced in the House similar to that which passed the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Claims. The Senate bill was referred to the same committee, and after consideration had been given the subject the bill was amended by reducing the amount appropriated from $13,000 to $6,840 and reported back to the House unanimously.

Mr. LOUD. What would he have received as salary?

Mr. KING. His salary and fees, as I am told, would amount to something like $7,000.

Mr. LOUD. A year?

Mr. KING. A year.

Mr. LOUD. As consul-general?

Mr. KING. As consul-general.

Mr. DALZELL. The fees go into the Treasury.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman from Utah must be mistaken about that.

Mr. KING. I am told that the salary and allowances at that time would aggregate $7,000.

Mr. STEELE. Sometimes consuls-general received $25,000.

Mr. LOUD. Not at San Salvador.

Mr. KING. The testimony submitted by the committee in its report is voluminous, and consists of letters and affidavits, including a communication from the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Rockhill, bearing date February 4, 1897. I think this brief statement covers the question asked by the gentleman from California.

Mr. DALZELL. What committee reported this bill?

Mr. KING. The Committee on Claims reported it unanimously.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word or two to the gentleman from Utah, for I know he has the interest of good government as much at heart as I have. While it has been the custom, it is true, in days gone by to allow our ministers a year's salary or six months' salary, never yet has it been held that it was a claim against the Government, but has always come substantially as a gift in a deficiency bill. Now, this comes up here in the shape of a claim. If an American citizen has suffered the loss of any property in that country, then that party has a claim against that Government; and if the claim has any validity whatever or even equity, surely this Government is strong enough to enforce the claim against that feeble Government and recover, as it has in many other instances.

I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this claim coming up here, as it does, from the Committee on Claims, is establishing a precedent that even he, on mature deliberation, as applicable to other cases, can not afford to establish on the American Continent. Since I have been a member of the House I never heard a case of this character. It is true that we have allowed foreign ministers a year's salary, or allowed it to their widows, but this is put on a different ground. It is put on two grounds, if you please; but if it be on the ground of donating a year's salary to the widow, then it should come in a different manner, on a deficiency bill; but if it is a claim for the destruction of property of an American citizen by a foreign Government, then, if it has any equity, it must go through the State Department and let that Government be compelled to pay the claim.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that when a claim is both equitable and just, as this is, it is rather hypertechnical to take the ground which is assumed by my friend from California. If the Government ought to pay it, it seems to me that it is entirely immaterial whether it comes up in this form or is attached to a deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman must not misunderstand me. I question whether the claim should be paid at all, or whether there is any claim that this Government should pay; but if this Congress, through the appropriate committee from which comes such a proposition as this, think it advisable and in accordance with the custom to give the widow of this consul one year's salary, well and good; but this is put on the basis of the destruction of property, which, I say, the Government to which he was accredited should be compelled to pay if there is any such claim.

Mr. KING. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether the House committee predicated their allowance as reported in the bill as amended upon the destruction of the property or for the services rendered by Mr. Pollock, or simply followed the usual custom in such cases.

Mr. LOUD. Well, we should know upon what ground it is based.

Mr. KING. The Senate allowed over $13,000, taking into account, as I understand, both the salary and the destruction of the property. and the House committee allowed only $6,840.

Mr. LOUD. I think the gentleman will see that it is dangerous to establish a precedent of this sort.

Mr. KING. There is evidence here to show that the destruction of the property resulted largely from our own fault, from the negligence of our own Government, rather than from the fault of the Government of San Salvador.

Mr. LOUD. Possibly that may be developed from the reading of the report, which I called for at first, but it does not appear from the statement of the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. KING. It is in the report that through some lack of attention the property was not recovered, and the inference is clearly deducible from the statement made by the State Department that if due attention had been given to the matter by our own Government, the property could have been recovered.

Mr. LOUD. It is not too late for this Government to lodge a claim against that Government and recover.

Mr. KING. I presume that is true; but here is the case of an old soldier, a man who met his death while in the discharge of his official calling and by his devotion to duty while at a post of danger. His wife and children suffered untold hardships and were at last brought to this country shattered in health, impoverished, houseless, and helpless, without clothing, except that which they had on their backs. For years they have not only suffered from the terrible tragedy through which they passed, but, being deprived of a husband's and father's care, have been dependent to a large extent upon the kindness of friends. It does seem to me that the least this Government can do is to give them this modicum of relief provided in the amended bill.

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this bill passed the Senate for $15,000 and came to the Committee on Claims in the House, and that committee cut it down to about equal his salary in fees for one year.

Mr. LOVE. How much had he drawn of his salary before he died?

Mr. KING. None, as I am advised.

Mr. MINOR. He had just arrived there when he died.

Mr. KING. It is the custom to give them a year's salary, as the report shows.

Mr. LOUD. If it was put on that ground and came up in the regular way, while I deprecate that Congress has ever established that precedent, I should not object. But you propose in this report to establish a precedent which it would be very dangerous for Congress to establish. In view of my duty, as I regard it, as a member of this House, I do not see how I can permit the establishment of a precedent of this kind.

Mr. KING. How does the gentleman suggest that this claim be provided for?

Mr. LOUD. If the claim has any merit, I have no doubt in the world that it will commend itself to the Appropriations Committee of the Senate. Let it be put on the deficiency bill, where these things have gone heretofore and where they properly belong, if they belong anywhere. And let the claim be put in the shape of one year's salary.

Mr. MINOR. If we undertook to provide for the claim in the way the gentleman suggests, it would probably be loaded down with other matters and would never get through.

Mr. LOUD. I do not care about that. I am not responsible for the actions of any other individual in this House or any member of the other House.

Mr. KING. There are precedents which justify the action asked here. For instance, in 1882 a joint resolution was passed by which Mrs. Hurlbut, widow of General Hurlbut, minister to Peru, was allowed one year's salary and legal allowances. And there are other precedents.

Mr. LOUD. You do not put this matter even in that shape. You put it in the shape of a claim for loss of property, for a year's salary, and for some other things, lumping them all together.

Mr. KING. This comes from the committee as a claim merely for salary. I say there are numerous cases where claims of this kind have not been appended to the deficiency bill, but have been initiated and passed in the House as original bills.

Mr. MINOR. Would the gentleman from Utah [Mr. KING] accept an amendment to allow one year's salary and fees, the whole amount not to exceed $6,000?

Mr. KING. It seems to me that in the form in which the proposition comes from the committee it meets the case properly. There are precedents for legislation of this kind.

Mr. LOUD. I question that. The very one which the gentleman has read covers simply a year's salary.

Mr. KING. A joint resolution approved August 1, 1882, gave to Mrs. Garnet, widow of Rev. Henry Highland Garnet, who died while minister to Liberia, one year's salary and legal allowances.

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman will put this in that shape, I will say that, while I do not think it ought to pass, I am too weak in the back to object to a bill of that character.

Mr. KING. I do not quite understand the amendment which the gentleman suggests.

Mr. MINOR. Let the bill provide for paying an amount equal to one year's salary and allowances, but not to exceed $6,000.

There is something in the objection of the gentleman from California.

Mr. KING. Pursuant to the suggestion, I offer the following amendment:

Strike out all of lines 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 and insert the following: "A sum equal to one year's salary and all legal allowances, not exceeding the sum of $6,840."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents his bill as amended. Is there objection to its present consideration?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOUD. I ask that the bill as the gentleman from Utah proposes to amend it be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. LOUD. I shall not object to that.

The question being taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. KING, it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KING, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RELIEF FOR OWNERS OF SHIP ACHILLES.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4629) for the relief of the owners of the ship Achilles. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay the owners of the British ship Achilles $1,543, for expenses incurred in rescuing, provisioning, and landing at Montevideo the crew of the wrecked American ship Arabia, in June, 1895.

Mr. DOCKERY. This bill has been up twice and has been fully considered. I think it is an entirely just measure, and I understand there is no objection to it.

Mr. TERRY. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] whether there is any precedent for action of this kind?

Mr. DINGLEY. Oh, yes, sir. A general law provides for paying the expense of returning to this country shipwrecked American seamen, wherever they may have been shipwrecked.

The only difficulty about the matter is that this British ship, the Achilles, fell in with the wrecked and water-logged American vessel Arabia off Cape Horn on June 1, 1895, and rescued 28 American seamen from the wrecked vessel. Now, under the law she would be entitled to a certain amount for taking these seamen to the port for which she was bound, which was the German port of Hamburg. That would have been ample in that particular case, and would have been all that was required by maritime usage. Although, even then, this Government would have also been obliged to pay the expenses of bringing these seamen from Hamburg to this country, and both amounts would have far exceeded the amount provided by this bill.

But it so happened that this British vessel did not have provisions enough on board to carry her own crew, together with the rescued seamen, to this German port, and inasmuch as if she had proceeded on her voyage as originally contemplated it would have been carrying these seamen farther and farther from their own country, as a matter of humanity as well as of necessity, under the circumstances she deviated from her course and went into the harbor of Montevideo—instead of continuing on her way to Hamburg—which delay resulted in considerable loss to the vessel and its owners not only in time, but in money.

Mr. TERRY. As I understand the gentleman from Maine, this vessel would have had provisions enough for its own crew?

Mr. DINGLEY. It had.

This, Mr. Speaker, is not only in accordance with the general law, but it is in strict accordance with international usage and comity; and there would be no question, ordinarily, with reference to this payment, if it were not for the fact that the law simply confines these payments to the distance traveled in transporting wrecked seamen.

Mr. TERRY. I had always supposed, Mr. Speaker, that this was a matter of comity amongst sailors themselves, a matter of reciprocity, and that there was no charge for it.

Mr. DINGLEY. The United States Government pays in every case, and so do other civilized Governments, the expenses of the return of its shipwrecked seamen from any port or part of the world; and it would have done so in this case if it had been an ordinary case. But this case is a peculiar one, although it is exactly in accordance with what comity requires, and is especially appropriate at this time, in view of our relations with Great Britain. If the case were reversed, there is no question but that the amount would be paid by the British Government without question.

Mr. TERRY. I have no objection whatever, after the explanation of the gentleman from Maine.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was considered, and was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DINGLEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report on the bill H. R. 8428—the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The conference report will be read.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the conference report, and in lieu thereof let the statement of the conferees be read, which explains fully the modifications made in the bill in conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreement of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses submit the following written statement in explanation of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report on said amendments, namely:

On Nos. 15, 16, and 17: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $37,350 for the marine hospital at Chicago and $8,000 for the marine hospital at Cleveland, Ohio, and strikes out the appropriation of $18,625 proposed by the Senate for the marine hospital at San Francisco.

On Nos. 18 and 20: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $2,700 additional for the Delaware Breakwater Quarantine Station, and $1,000 additional for the San Diego, Cal., Quarantine Station.

On Nos. 64 and 65: Strikes out the appropriations proposed by the Senate of $85,000 for a light-house tender for the Third district and $85,000 for a light-house tender for the Great Lakes.

On No. 73: Authorizes, as proposed by the Senate, the appointment of a constructor for the Revenue-Cutter Service and the creation of a clothing fund for said service.

On Nos. 74, 75, and 76: Strikes out the appropriations proposed by the Senate for revenue cutters, for service at Philadelphia, Boston, the Gulf of Mexico, the Atlantic coast, to take the place of the revenue steamer Cofax, and on the Pacific coast, in the vicinity of the Columbia River Bar, Oregon.

On Nos. 97 and 98: Strikes out the appropriation proposed by the Senate of $15,000 for a fish-cultural station in North Carolina, and appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $15,000 for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in Georgia.

On No. 101: Appropriates $13,458.75 to pay S. Bolton's Sons for revenue stamps paid for but never delivered to them.

On Nos. 122, 123, 124, 125, and 126: Authorizes, as proposed by the House, the appointment of special agents of the Interior Department for the protection of public lands and administration of the forest reserves by the Secretary of the Interior, and appropriates $75,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $50,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the protection and administration of forest reserves.

On No. 37: Strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate, suspending the Executive orders setting apart and reserving certain lands on forest reservations, and inserts the provision proposed by the Senate, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant permits to citizens of Idaho and Wyoming to cut timber in Wyoming west of the continental divide.

On No. 149: Authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to investigate alleged outrages perpetrated on certain Seminole Indians, and, if he finds the United States liable therefor under treaties with said Indians, to pay the parties injured or their legal heirs and representatives not exceeding $20,000.

On No. 180: Appropriates $35,000 instead of $40,000, as proposed by the Senate, for additional land for the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park.

On Nos. 182, 183, and 187: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $125,000 for improving Providence River and Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island; modifies, as proposed by the Senate, the provision in the last river and harbor act concerning the construction of a bridge in Bridgeport Harbor, Connecticut, and also modifies the provisions of said river and harbor act relating to the harbor at Coos Bay, Oregon.

On No. 224: Strikes out the appropriation of $15,000 proposed by the Senate for the relief of the heirs and representatives of those who were killed by an explosion at the torpedo station at Newport, R. I., in 1893.

On No. 230: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate in the appropriation for pay of bailiffs and criers, with reference to expenses of district judges holding courts outside their districts.

On No. 247, relating to the Paris Exposition: Authorizes the appointment of a commissioner-general, at $8,000 per annum; an assistant commissioner-general, at $6,000 per annum; a secretary, at $4,500 per annum; twelve commissioners, to serve during 1900, at $3,000 each; limits the cost of the representation of the United States at said exposition to not exceeding $450,000, and appropriates $200,000 under said limit.

On No. 271: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $225,000 for acquiring an additional site for the Government Printing Office.

On No. 272: Strikes from the bill the provision proposed by the House, taking from the circuit and district courts jurisdiction of cases brought to recover fees, salary, or compensation for official services of officers of the United States, and also strikes out the amendment proposed by the Senate relating to the appeal in such cases to circuit courts of appeals.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree upon the following amendments, namely:

On No. 13: Appropriating $120,000 for a public building at Annapolis, Md.;

On No. 14: Appropriating $50,000 for a public building at Butte, Mont.;

On No. 188: Appropriating $100,000 for improving Yaquina Bay, Oregon.

On Nos. 221 and 222: Appropriating $50,000 for a branch soldiers' home for a sanitarium in South Dakota.

On No. 233: Relating to the United States attorney for the District of Columbia.

The conference report also recommends that the sum of $473,151.25, to pay the Bering Sea awards, be stricken from the bill, the same having been provided for by a special act.

J. G. CANNON,

WM. A. STONE,

JOSEPH D. SAYERS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. TONGUE. I ask a separate vote on amendment No. 190.

Mr. CANNON. That comes afterwards.

The SPEAKER. There can not be a separate vote at this time. Mr. CANNON. The amendment the gentleman refers to is in the report.

The SPEAKER. That would come up later.

The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was adopted.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, as set forth in the statement of the House conferees, and ask a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes.

Mr. MUDD. On amendment No. 13 I desire to submit a motion. I believe that amendment is first in order?

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman desire to make a motion?

Mr. MUDD. Yes; I desire to move that the House recede from its disagreement and agree to amendment No. 13 with an amendment, which motion I believe I have a right to make. I understand that motion takes precedence, Mr. Speaker. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to this amendment and concur therein with an amendment which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other of the amendments disagreed to in the conference committee?

Mr. TONGUE. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment 186 and agree to it.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote on any other amendment asked? [After a pause.] If no other separate vote is demanded, the Chair will submit the question to the House on insisting on its disagreement to the Senate amendments, excepting Nos. 13 and 186.

The motion that the House further insist on its disagreement and ask a conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the thirteenth amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For post-office at Annapolis, Md.: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to select, designate, and procure, by purchase or otherwise, a suitable site, and to commence the construction of a fireproof post-office building thereon, in the city of Annapolis, Md., said site to contain at least 16,000 square feet of ground, and to leave an open space around the building to be erected thereon, including streets and alleys, of 40 feet, $120,000.

Mr. MUDD. I move to concur with an amendment which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves to recede and concur with an amendment which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "to commence the construction of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to construct." Strike out all after the word "Maryland" to the end of the paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred thousand dollars." Strike out the word "post-office" in line 2, and the words "post-office building," in line 12, and insert in lieu thereof the words "public building for post-office and custom-house."

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for just a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. CANNON. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, this is a proposition which has been before the House on a former occasion, and to which I think the House hardly gave that deliberate consideration to which it is entitled. In the Senate a proposition for the appropriation of $120,000 was put on the sundry civil bill for the commencement of a post-office building at Annapolis. My amendment provides $100,000 for the completion of a post-office building at Annapolis.

Now, I do not wish to discuss this at any length, because I do not think there is any necessity for so doing. I want to call attention, however, to this fact, that Annapolis is the only capital in the United States, with one or two exceptions in the case of States recently admitted into the Union, that has not a public building. I do not feel that the State of Maryland ought to be discriminated against in this fashion.

I am willing to concede, Mr. Speaker, that the comparative population of cities is and ought to be the primary and principal test as to the propriety of appropriations for public buildings, but it is not and ought not to be the only one. I think in appropriating public moneys in this way there ought to be some effort to have a reasonable equity in the distribution of the money among the various States and sections. My views upon this are analogous to those upon improvements made for this city. I believe, as I stated yesterday, that one section or portion of this city should not be built up liberally and luxuriously to the detriment and utter neglect of other portions, and I do not believe that any section of this country should be built up and liberally aided by way of appropriations from the public Treasury for public buildings to the utter neglect of any other State or section.

Mr. BURKE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MUDD. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE. What are the postal receipts of Annapolis?

Mr. MUDD. I am frank to say that I can not state them.

Mr. BURKE. It was stated here a week or so ago that they amount to about $7,000 a year.

Mr. MUDD. I think the amount was stated as $10,000 a year.

Mr. BURKE. And it was also stated that while Annapolis is a port of entry, there had not been one copper cent collected from that source during the last fiscal year. Is that true?

Mr. MUDD. I do not know.

Mr. BURKE. That was stated upon the floor of the House the other day. Now, one other question: Are the United States circuit and district courts held at Annapolis?

Mr. MUDD. They are not.

Mr. BURKE. Then you have postal receipts of about seven or eight thousand dollars, not a copper received by way of impost duties, and no Federal court held there.

Mr. MUDD. The amount of postal receipts was stated to be $10,000. There is no Federal court held there, and I admit that the custom-house receipts are not very large. Some gentleman on the floor, on looking the matter up, found one isolated year in which it was stated that there were no customs receipts at all. I do not know about that. I know the Government maintains a custom-house there, and it rents a building, or portion of a building, for that purpose. You might omit any reference to the custom-house, for that matter, and I still think that the capital city of the State of Maryland is entitled to have a public building for the purpose of furnishing proper post-office facilities.

I am frank to admit that Annapolis is not a very large city. It is an old and historic city in an old and historic State, and I say, as I have said before on this floor, that the residents of the city, with the people in the rural sections contiguous to Annapolis and the transient population of the Naval Academy and the colleges and seminaries located in that city, furnish a population larger than that of many cities which have had considerable amounts appropriated for public buildings, cities that are not the capitals of their States. Every capital city in the United States except Annapolis has a public building of some kind, constructed at some cost. It may be that a hundred thousand dollars may be thought to be more than sufficient.

Mr. BURKE. Has not the Government just appropriated a million dollars for the Naval Academy?

Mr. MUDD. No; it appropriated $500,000; and, Mr. Speaker, because the United States has its great Naval University at Annapolis, that is no reason why the State of Maryland should receive no further consideration at the hands of Congress.

Mr. BURKE. I agree to that.

Mr. MUDD. On a parity of reasoning, the great State of New York should not receive any public money for public buildings, because the great Military University at West Point is located in that State, and it has received a hundred times as much money as Annapolis ever has. I apprehend gentlemen representing the State of New York would not agree with any such line of argument as that.

Mr. STEELE. Baltimore has a few things.

Mr. MUDD. I know she has, and so has Indiana.

Mr. STEELE. Indiana is all the time growing, and you can not say that of Maryland.

Mr. MUDD. With some of the inflections that there are evidences before us that Indiana has to bear she ought to have some alleviation of her troubles and some help.

Mr. STEELE. Maryland can not help it.

Mr. MUDD. It is apparent to my mind that there are members from Indiana, one of them, at least, who can not help it. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe it is necessary to make much further argument upon this matter. I do not believe that $100,000 is more money than is necessary to erect a suitable building. I do not think there is any economy in putting up such structures as to be worthless, as we have seen at the Naval Academy, where they have had to be repaired and rebuilt and reappropriated for in ten or fifteen years. If it is proper that the Government should have that building at all, it ought to have a decent and becoming one, and $100,000—the Senate made it $120,000—is not beyond reason.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MUDD. I ask two minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. MUDD. A hundred thousand dollars is not beyond reason for the capital city of Maryland. I want to say this further: No gentleman seems thus far to have made any argument against the merit of this proposition. The objection seems to have been that other cities were not given public buildings at this session. I do not think the House ought to begrudge our State the benefit of this measure, if it is a meritorious one. If we get this appropriation six months ahead of the time when other gentlemen expect to get theirs; if it be six months ahead of the time when we might expect to get it through the regular channels, it is six times six years behind the time when we ought to have gotten it.

A bill for this purpose has been favorably reported, unanimously reported, by the appropriate committee at almost every session for the last ten or fifteen years, except for two or three years past. The bill passed both Houses once and was vetoed by the President, who gave utterance to the ironic and sententious expression, upon the occasion of a veto of a public-building bill of an obnoxious member, that there was "an Allentown for every Sowden." Reading this in the light of the then political situation in Maryland and the disposition of this same President to mete out punishment of what he seemed to view as political incorrigibility, it might not inaptly have been said that there was an "Annapolis for every Gorman."

It was for reasons such as this that the city of Annapolis has been denied this public building up to the present time. I do not believe we should follow in the wake of any such spirit as that at the present day. I believe that we are entitled to have this building, and to have it now, and I hope we will get it at the hands of this House.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Maryland is not a very strong one. In fact, the proposition is so weak that the gentleman from Maryland has not even introduced a bill at this session of Congress to provide for the erection of a public building at Annapolis.

Mr. MUDD. Because I knew you would not consider it.

Mr. MERCER. It is so weak that he was obliged to have it inserted in this appropriation bill in the Senate, knowing that it would fail if standing alone. For a city which has 10,000 people—and I believe they claim there is a population of 10,000 at Annapolis—it presents only one argument in its favor, to wit, that it is the capital of Maryland. In time this argument may be availing, but that time has not yet arrived. I do not blame the gentleman from Maryland for making an energetic fight, and his people should give him credit for making a splendid fight for this proposition; but when he says that his State is the only one in which the capital has no public building, he is in error, because the State of Washington, with Olympia as its capital, has no public building.

Mr. MUDD. I said with the exception of two or three States which had been recently admitted.

Mr. MERCER. The State of Utah, with Salt Lake City as its capital, has no public building. The State of Oregon, with Salem as its capital, has no public building. These public buildings will come in due time, and will come to Annapolis if it is entitled to it. Why, one of the arguments used by various gentlemen actively insisting upon the erection of public buildings in their respective localities is the large postal receipts of the town or city to be favored, and the fact that the circuit and district courts meet there. But the city of Annapolis has no postal receipts worth speaking of. Its customs receipts amount to almost nothing, and the United States courts do not meet at Annapolis. I might mention a very large number of cities in the United States more entitled to a public building than Annapolis, but it is unnecessary to consume time in so doing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of this Congress it was our intention to be just as economical as possible, and in keeping with that idea the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds decided not to report any bills for public buildings. Later in the session, owing to improved conditions in the country, a more liberal policy might have been adopted had it not been for the war. When war was begun we felt that we must exercise economy with reference to public buildings, and we have done so. We are organizing and equipping our Army and Navy for the purpose of defeating Spain; and I say it is not necessary to provide public buildings at this session, and much less necessary to authorize one which is of so little importance as that called for by this amendment. I do not think members of this House will be inclined to pass a proposition of this kind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAYNE). The question is on receding and agreeing with an amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. MUDD. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 31.

So the motion to recede with an amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask, Mr. Speaker, if it is necessary, I did not notice, that the House further insist on its disagreement with reference to the Annapolis amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the amendment upon which the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE] asks a separate vote.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Yaquina Bay, Oregon: For continuing improvement, $100,000.

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Speaker, I would like the careful attention of the House for a short time to explain this amendment. Permit me to say for the benefit of those who may not have been present at the previous discussion that Oregon has about 400 miles of seacoast, and Yaquina Bay furnishes the only ocean harbor of general importance to the State of Oregon. There are others, but only of local importance. The most of the counties must ship their produce to the city of Portland, which is on the Willamette River, near the northern boundary of the State.

Yaquina Bay is situated very nearly central between the northern and southern boundaries of the State. It is reached by a railroad that crosses the Willamette Valley, one of the most beautiful valleys in the civilized world. There are 150 miles of railroad constructed from this harbor eastward through the Willamette Valley and in the direction of eastern Oregon. But its further construction is delayed waiting for these improvements at Yaquina Bay. If these improvements are completed so that this railroad can be available for the use of the farming district, it means more to the people of Oregon every year than the entire cost of this improvement. So much as to the commercial importance.

The improvements to this harbor were commenced in about 1880. Appropriations were made from Congress to Congress, as well by those in the control of Democrats as those in the control of the Republicans, for the improvement of this harbor. These moneys were expended several years under Captain Symons, the engineer in charge. Until 1895 there was no word of objection raised by Captain Symons as to the advisability of this improvement or as to the prospect of success. From year to year he made his annual report to the Chief of Engineers, speaking in complimentary terms of the work that had been done and the efficiency of the improvements that had been made.

I will not weary the House by reading the report, except that of 1894, because that was the last annual report made prior to one in 1895, which has been cited by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY]. In 1894 Captain Symons used this language:

The work of improvement has been successful in giving a good depth of 12 to 14 feet at low water on the bar at the entrance to the bay, but, as stated in my last annual report, an inner bar has formed, which threatens to become a serious detriment. This inner bar forms during the winter and spring, and gradually disappears during the summer and autumn.

It was on account of the known existence of this inner bar and a contemplation of the complications which might arise therefrom, necessitating changes in the project and increased expenditure, that in my last annual report I recommended an appropriation of $120,000, the balance of the estimated cost of the project.

The inner bar having reappeared during the past winter and spring, and the matter having been carefully studied, I, on the 5th of March last, submitted a report advocating a change in the existing project, which I believe would do away with the inner bar.

Now, I would like to call the attention of my friend from Missouri to this recommendation. This was in 1894, when Captain Symons recommended a further appropriation of $120,000. Subsequent to that, in a special report made on January, 1895, Captain Symons makes this report:

It is my opinion that Yaquina Bay Harbor is not worthy of further improvement by the General Government for the following reasons.

But previous to setting forth why it was not worthy of further improvement, he admits that—

The work has been eminently successful, and the improvement of the bar has been all or more than the board hoped would be accomplished.

Now, one moment before I proceed further. Captain Symons seems to have had some theory of his own with reference to the current that existed at the mouth of Yaquina Bay. This report was entirely based on the question whether his views were accurate in that regard or not. When he made this report, based on his supposition of the existence of this current, people who were as well and better acquainted with it than Captain Symons immediately wrote to Senator Mitchell and pointed out the error into which Captain Symons had fallen, and insisted that he was mistaken. Congress in 1895 authorized the appointment of a commission—and, by the way, that Congress was composed of a majority of Democrats—they authorized the constitution of a board to ascertain the correctness of Captain Symons's theories. Colonel Stickney and Major Post and Major Sears were appointed for the purpose of ascertaining whether the theories and views of Captain Symons were correct or incorrect.

That was the object of the constitution and appointment of this board. It was the very work entailed upon it. It was the very purpose for which it was sent out. It went on in the discharge of that duty, and there was a lapse of five months from the time of the meeting of the board until it finally made its report. It met May 9, 1895, and it made its final report October 9, 1895. It was deliberate in its work. It had observations made for several months. It had borings made at different localities in that bay. It had observations made of the effect of the winds and the drift of the currents. And it came to the deliberate conclusion that Captain Symons was mistaken in his theory and that Yaquina Bay could be further improved.

I want now to read a moment from that report. I will not read the whole of it. In reciting the object for which they were appointed these officers state, it is true, that they were not authorized to give an opinion as to the importance of the improvement. Nevertheless they make this statement:

The result of the work of improvement has been a net gain of 7 feet in depth of water across the bar over what it was before the work began.

They say further:

From the information obtained by the recent surveys, which corroborates the statements of persons who have for a long time observed the action of the sea and the directions of the currents, there seems to be no doubt that there is a well-defined littoral current, constant in direction, moving to the south, between the main shore and the outer reef, and it has also been noticed that the direction of the swells of the ocean is constantly from northwest to southeast, independent of the direction of the winds.

A careful study of the current sheet and the tracing showing the scour and fill that have taken place since the jetties were extended to their present length, indicates clearly the action of these forces, and an additional extension of the jetties would further restrict the area through which the resultant of these forces acts and cause further scour, which would be nearer the outer reef of rocks.

They say further:

The boring survey shows that the sand can be scoured away to 18 or 19 feet below mean low water before uncovering the bed rock.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TONGUE. I should like five minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. I yield the gentleman that time.

Mr. TONGUE. Here is the deliberate opinion of this board, consisting of three eminent engineers, appointed for the very purpose of ascertaining the correctness of Captain Symons's theory. We have here the distinct statement that a further extension of these jetties will produce an increased depth of water; that there can be secured an increased depth of from 18 to 19 feet at low-water mark.

Captain Symons, while this board was acting—when perhaps he began to realize that his theories would be overthrown by the facts—when observations were being conducted under his own direction leading to this result, when he makes his annual report in 1895, says not one word to the effect that this harbor can not be improved; on the contrary, his report contains this commendation of the improvement:

The practical completion of this work in accordance with the existing project seems a proper occasion to state that it has been eminently successful, and has fully carried out the hopes and wishes of its projectors. From an uncertain bar channel of 6 and 7 feet depth, shifting over a great range, a bar channel has been developed by the works constructed of 12 to 15 feet depth at the mean of the lower low waters, and with a permanent location.

He mentions the existence of the board and that observations are being made at their request.

Now, the Engineering Department, ever since the report of this board, has assumed the correctness of the conclusions and judgment of the board of engineers. In making the annual report in 1896 the Engineering Department, after setting forth the amount of money that has been expended, says:

Amount that can be profitably expended in fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, $400,000.

The Engineer Department of this Government has acted upon the assumption that the report of the board of engineers appointed in 1895 had made a correct statement of the condition of affairs.

General Wilson in his report of 1897 refers to the recommendations of the board of engineers for the continuation of this work and the extension of the jetties and the removal of sunken rocks. During the last Administration Secretary Lamont sent to the Senate of the United States a report from General Craighill, the Chief of Engineers, in response to a resolution of inquiry from the Senate, which report contains the following:

Capt. W. L. Flak, Corps of Engineers, the officer in local charge, presents within a project for this work in accordance with the plans of the board.

The project as presented is approved by Colonel Suter, division engineer, and, being in accordance with law, is approved by me.

There is no engineering reason why this work should not proceed, and it is therefore recommended that the project presented be approved, and that contracts be entered into for the completion of the work in accordance with the law and the regulations of the Department.

That is the report from General Craighill to Secretary Lamont; and without one word of objection, Secretary Lamont further reports that "the apparent delay in the preparation of the project by the local engineer may be attributed to the necessary careful consideration of the engineering features of the proposed improvement."

So that, up to the closing of the last Administration (this was January 4, 1895), Colonel Lamont and his Engineering Department were acting on the assumption that the board of engineers appointed under the law of 1895 had rendered a correct report.

General Wilson, April 23, 1897, in response to a letter of inquiry from the Secretary of War, makes a statement, of which the following is a quotation:

The project of Captain Flak for carrying out the intent of Congress as expressed in the act of 1896 was submitted to the Secretary of War by indorsement of the Chief of Engineers of December 20, 1896, but the paper was received back from the Secretary of War without action by him. I have now to inclose the project previously submitted, and in again presenting this question for consideration I have the honor to renew the recommendation of my predecessor, General Craighill, that a continuing contract for this work be entered into under provisions of the act of 1896, as there are no engineering reasons requiring further delay.

After that the Secretary of War acted, and on February 24, 1898, the War Department sends through the proper channel, the Secretary of the Treasury, the following statement to the House:

SIR: In accordance with your instructions, I have the honor to submit the accompanying supplemental estimate for work of river and harbor improvement for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, covering an item of $150,000 for improving Yaquina Bay, Oregon.

This was transmitted by General Wilson to the Secretary of War, by the Secretary of War to the Secretary of the Treasury, and by him to the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TONGUE. I ask five minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. I yield it to the gentleman.

Mr. TONGUE. So, Mr. Speaker, the objection raised by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKERY] is based upon a single report made by Captain Symons in 1895, a report that has been discredited and disapproved by every engineer officer in the service of the Government of the United States from that day to this in every single investigation made since that time. Captain Symons probably was honest in his views, and was perhaps honestly mistaken; but there is no question that he was mistaken, and that his opinion should not be considered as a guide in determining the matter.

The board of engineers took several months to examine the question, and reported to the contrary. General Craighill, after an investigation of the matter, makes a contrary report, and General Wilson has reached a different view from that submitted by Captain Symons; and the War Department, after a full investigation, concurs in the views of the board. These gentlemen were appointed to examine and report upon the theory of Captain Symons, and I have submitted to you what their report is.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter meaning more to the people of the State of Oregon than every other piece of legislation pending before Congress, and it is all to be held up on the strength of a report made by Captain Symons, a report that is disagreed to and nonconcurrent in by every engineer officer of the United States who has been directed to examine and report upon it.

My friend has said something about my making an "attack on the engineers" in this report. I deny having any such purpose. I am not attacking anybody. I am merely stating facts as they have occurred. I insist that there has been a mistake in the report of Captain Symons, and that mistake was pointed out by all of the engineer officers who have investigated the matter since that time. I have only said that Captain Symons was mistaken, doubtless honestly mistaken; but in the report he has brought in there is evidently an error, which has been pointed out by these officers to whom I have referred.

His reports differ from the judgment of every engineer officer who has examined the work up to the present time. His was a single report, and it is the only time, out of a half dozen different reports, where such a state of facts is alleged to exist that would not justify the improvement of this bay. And I sincerely hope that the House will do a fair measure of justice to the farming people of the State of Oregon. This is not a measure benefiting corporations or people of wealth, but it is a matter of serious interest to the producing classes of that State, a measure which will benefit people who are now compelled to sell their wheat at 17 cents less per bushel than the California farmers sell theirs in the city of San Francisco.

This condition of affairs is continued because of the delay in completing these harbor improvements. All this delay has resulted in serious loss to our people, and in the meantime the uncompleted jetties have been deteriorating and the Government plant for conducting the improvements in the harbor has been going to ruin at the same time. The Government is losing money every day by reason of the delay. Captain Symons himself, in 1891, complained of the loss incurred by the Government in the delay of the appropriations, and yet we are holding back the amount necessary and inflicting on the Government unnecessary loss, while we are at the same time binding the people of Oregon to the chariot wheels of corporations that have a monopoly of ocean and inland transportation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the amount of the appropriation involved?

Mr. TONGUE. I ask one moment to answer the question of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CANNON. I yield a moment.

Mr. TONGUE. The gentleman asks me what is the amount of the appropriation involved. It is $100,000, or $50,000 less than the request of the engineers and the Department.

Mr. CANNON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKERY].

Mr. DICKERY. Mr. Speaker, the amount involved in the project urged by the gentleman from Oregon is $1,025,000 instead of $100,000, as suggested by him. It is true that $100,000 of direct appropriation only is carried by this bill. But the estimate of the cost of the project is $1,025,000, and we will enter upon that expenditure if we adopt his amendment.

I want to apologize to the House, at the outstart of my remarks, for any further reference to this claim. And yet I may say the apology is not due from me. I have listened to the gentleman from Oregon during the twenty minutes he has addressed himself to the Senate amendment, and the query suggests itself to me, "How long, O Lord," how long will it take to kill this job? [Laughter.]

In February, after three hours' debate, with a quorum present, the House by 40 majority rejected this project. Only a few days ago, with a quorum present, the House by 45 majority refused their consent to the project. And yet it again appears to-day on the sundry civil bill, because of the persistent advocacy of the gentleman from Oregon.

I have no criticism to make of the gentleman for his pertinacity. I suggest, however, that the time has come when every local interest should give way to the public interest in respect to these great appropriation bills. Many hours were occupied in exhaustive debate, as I have already said, when this matter was under consideration in February last. Quite a time was occupied but a few days since, and it was again overwhelmingly rejected, because civil engineers said that it was not within the power of man, by the expenditure of any amount of money, to deepen the bar channel leading to Yaquina Bay.

The House rejected it because a great many Representatives knew the circumstances under which it first appeared in this House; rejected it because the best advised members of the River and Harbor Committee are opposed to this scheme; rejected it because they heard the conclusive testimony of the engineer officers of the United States quoted against the scheme over and over again in the first debate and also in the later debate.

How long is this to go on? How frequently is a great appropriation bill to be held up that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE], with his eloquence and ability, shall further plead the cause of this scheme? I do not intend to ask the attention of the House to-day to details. If there is any gentleman who does not understand the amendments, I shall be glad to answer any questions, but I assume the House is fully advised.

Mr. DOLLIVER. You have referred to it as a job.

Mr. DICKERY. Well, that is not a correct characterization, if I used that word. It is not a "job." That is, I do not mean to say that any gentleman connected with it has employed any improper influences in its advocacy; but it is an improvident expenditure of money. That would be the proper characterization of it. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE] and his predecessor are honest, and all the engineer officers are honest, but it is a useless, extravagant, unnecessary waste of public money, according to the testimony of the engineer officers. If I used the word "job," I desire to withdraw it. I used it in no offensive sense. If there is any gentleman here who does not understand this amendment, I will now yield for a question.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I should like to know why the bar channel can not be deepened?

Mr. DICKERY. The reasons are set out in the report of Captain Symons, the local engineer. It is a report of great length, which gives certain scientific reasons why you can not deepen the bar channel leading to that bay. That report was approved by the division engineer, Colonel Mendell. Then it came to the War Department and was approved by General Casey, the Chief of Engineers. The reasons given are scientific ones; and if the gentleman desires, I will send to the committee room and get the report. The reasons are set out in great detail.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That would seem to be conclusive of the matter.

Mr. TONGUE. I shall be glad to furnish a copy of the report to the gentleman.

Mr. DICKERY. The reasons given are scientific. I perhaps do not understand all of them myself.

Mr. TONGUE. The engineer bases it entirely upon a theory that he had as to the existence of certain currents, which a later report proved to be incorrect.

Mr. DICKERY. Here is the report, if the gentleman from Iowa desires it. The reasons given are scientific reasons. I do not fully understand them. I simply know that this is the report of the engineer officer of the United States appointed in charge of that work; that his report was reviewed by the division engineer; that his report in turn was reviewed by that capable officer, General Casey, and that the judgment of these three engineers concur.

A MEMBER. How much commerce is there there?

Mr. DICKERY. There is practically no commerce there.

Mr. TONGUE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DICKERY. Certainly.

Mr. TONGUE. Does the gentleman from Missouri contend that either the division engineer or General Casey had any knowledge of this outside of the report of Captain Symons, which they assumed to be correct?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not know whether General Casey was ever there himself. I simply know that he pronounced it unworthy of improvement.

Mr. TONGUE. I have just sent the gentleman a copy of the report.

Mr. DOCKERY. I mean General Casey's report.

Mr. TONGUE. It is right there in that pamphlet.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, the House understands it. The local engineer denounced it and said it was not possible to deepen the water; the division engineer approved his report; General Casey approved the reports of both of them; and from that opinion of those distinguished army officers and engineer officers the House, on two separate votes, a quorum being present, decided by about 50 majority that it would not appeal. If I had to defend the report of the local engineer, I could not do it, because he deals with scientific questions and states in his report why you can not deepen the bar channel. I do not know whether his reasons are good or not. I only know that he was placed by the Government of my country in charge of that work, and that he is supposed to be capable, and that he reported as I have stated.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Speaker, I should like five minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Speaker, I merely want to say, in response to the question of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], as to how long it will take to kill this project, that it was begun in 1880. It has been indorsed by Congress from that time to this by nearly every Congress except this; indorsed by Congresses controlled by Democrats and by Republicans. The work has been proceeding until $700,000 has been expended under the direction of the officers of this Government, and this project will not be killed until the people of Oregon have justice in this matter.

So long as I am in Congress and have a voice to speak for this, I shall continue to persist that this improvement go on. This question is one of great practical benefit to the farmers of the State. There are a number of counties in the State of Oregon that are capable of raising thousands of bushels of wheat that can not send a single bushel to market because these improvements are held up and transportation facilities are not furnished.

Now, one further word. The gentleman says that this matter depends upon my persistence. It is not my persistence alone; it is the persistence of the Engineer Department of the Government, the persistence of the Senate of the United States, the persistence of the conference committee and eminent men of both political parties, who insist upon this matter.

Now, one word with reference to the River and Harbor Committee. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is hardly a proper thing for the gentleman from Missouri to make this vicious attack upon the River and Harbor Committee of the last House and this House, containing as it does eminent gentlemen of both political parties. I repudiate the suggestion that these men have been sanctioning a job. Democratic Congresses, as they were, that were in existence between 1880 and 1895, were not sanctioning "jobs." The Democratic Congress that passed the Wilson bill, providing for the constitution of this Board of Engineers, were not passing "jobs." Such officers of the Army as constituted that board—Colonel Stickney, Major Sears, and Major Post—were not putting up any "jobs" for the State of Oregon, and the Congress of the United States in 1896 were not putting up "jobs" when they passed on this improvement, and gentlemen ought not to speak of this as a "job."

Now, the gentleman says he does not know anything about Captain Symons's report. He knows as much as I know about it. Captain Symons had theories upon scientific questions; but the board of engineers appointed for the special purpose of investigating the correctness of the theories that Captain Symons had spent five months in that investigation and made a report consisting of twenty-six pages, a large portion of which is in exceedingly fine print, and containing all the maps and details, found that Captain Symons was mistaken and that this harbor could be improved and given 18 to 19 feet of water at low-water mark. The Engineer Department has discredited Captain Symons's theory and report. General Craighill acted upon the report of that board, the last Congress acted upon it, and General Wilson is acting upon it. Secretary Alger has acted upon it, and so have the Senate; and for these reasons I think the House ought to act upon it.

Now, one word as to the vote that has been given. The last vote seems to have been very largely partisan, and that after this side had helped Delaware improvements and Kentucky improvements. Every provision placed in this bill by the Senate for river and harbor improvements has been agreed to by the House except this one. I can not understand the motives behind this attack, and I do not, I confess, understand the vigor with which the gentleman from Missouri seems to pursue this particular improvement. I appeal for justice.

Mr. DOCKERY. Just a word, Mr. Speaker. I think the House understands why they are pursuing the policy they are with respect to this. They simply believe in the statements of the officials—nonpartisan; and therefore the House voted this matter down, and I have no doubt they will vote it down again.

Mr. TONGUE. Why did they not read the report of the other engineers, but only that of Captain Symons's?

Mr. DOCKERY. They understand it.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask for a vote now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. TONGUE. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 17, yeas 62.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS. I move that the Senate be asked for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The following conferees on the part of the House were announced: Mr. CANNON, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, and Mr. SAYERS.

REPRINT.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill (H. R. 8581) for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, as agreed to in conference.

Mr. McRAE. I suggest that the order ought not to be made in that shape. Have it printed in document form, like the order of the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. This is like the order by the Senate, and we want to get copies of it in that way.

Mr. McRAE. That shows the bill as finally agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. That is what we ask for.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the request of the gentleman from Kansas will be granted.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS BLACK RIVER, ARKANSAS.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2063) to authorize the White and Black River Valley Railway Company to build a bridge across the Black River in Arkansas.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act to authorize the White and Black River Valley Railway Company to build a bridge across the Black River in Arkansas.

Be it enacted, etc., That the White and Black River Valley Railway Company, a corporation created and existing under the laws of the State of Arkansas, be, and is hereby, authorized to erect and maintain a bridge across the Black River, in township 12 north, range 3 west, or at such point near said township as shall be selected by said railway company for crossing said river with their railway line, the said bridge to have a drawspan, so as not to interfere with the navigation of said river: Provided, That any bridge constructed under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure and shall be known and recognized as a post route; and the same is hereby declared to be a post route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transportation over the same of the mails, the troops, and munitions of war of the United States or for through passengers or freight passing over said bridge than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the railroads leading to the said bridge; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies; and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal-telegraph purposes.

SEC. 2. That the plan and location of said bridge, with a detailed map of the river at the proposed site of the bridge and near thereto, exhibiting the depths and currents, shall be submitted to the Secretary of War for his approval; and until he approves the plans and location of said bridge it shall not be built; but upon the approval of said plan by the Secretary of War the said company or corporation may proceed to the erection of said bridge in conformity with said approved plan, and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of the work thereon such change shall be subject likewise to the approval of the Secretary of War. And there shall be displayed on said bridge from sunset to sunrise such lights or other signals as may be prescribed by the Light-House Board.

SEC. 3. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time; and if at any time navigation of said river shall in any manner be obstructed or impaired by the said bridge the Secretary of War shall have authority, and it shall be his duty, to require the said railway company to alter and change the said bridge, at its own expense, and in such manner as may be proper to secure free and complete navigation without impediment; and if upon reasonable notice to the said railway company to make such changes or improvements the said company fails to do so all the rights conferred by this act shall be forfeited.

SEC. 4. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railroad trains or cars over the same, and over the approaches to the same, upon the payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon the rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

SEC. 5. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date hereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. McCULLOCH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GLADSTONE, MICH., A SUBPORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. SHELDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4456) to designate Gladstone, Mich., a subport of entry.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Gladstone, in the State of Michigan, be, and the same hereby is, designated a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Superior, and that the privileges of immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, as defined by the act of June 10, 1890, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, extended to said subport.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would like to ask the gentleman if this creates any new offices?

Mr. SHELDEN. No, sir.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and being read the third time, it was passed.

On motion of Mr. SHELDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOSEPH W. WHAM.

Mr. BAKER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4237) to enable the President to restore Maj. Joseph W. Wham, paymaster in the United States Army, to duty, his former rank, and status in the United States Army.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to set aside, annul, or expunge the proceedings of a court-martial as promulgated in General Order No. 20, dated Washington, D. C., April 8, 1895, and to restore Maj. Joseph W. Wham, paymaster, United States Army, to duty, previous rank, and status in the United States Army.

Sec. 2. That the proper disbursing officer of the United States Army is hereby directed to pay to the aforesaid officer, from the appropriations for the pay of the Army, the pay and allowances (the latter to be commuted) which have been withheld under the operation of the sentence of the aforesaid court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I object unless the names of the members of the court-martial are included.

Mr. HAY. What is the force of the gentleman's objection? Why does he want to know the names of the court-martial?

Mr. SIMS. This same bill was brought up before by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY], and he made grave reflections upon the court-martial, in which he said that the sentence was brought about in order to make room for another man. With such motives as that ascribed to the court-martial, we have a right to know who these men were. I do not want to know the names particularly myself, but I want them inserted in the RECORD. I understand that the matter was reviewed and modified by President Harrison, and I think it is bad practice to pass a measure here which reflects upon the court-martial and not name the gentlemen who compose the court.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. The question now is on the consideration of the bill, and if he insists this knocks out the bill. Perhaps the gentleman from Illinois can not state the names now.

Mr. SIMS. I gave notice before that they must put the names in the RECORD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] brought the names to me at the time, so that they have the names in their possession now.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then they can be put in the RECORD, if the gentleman has them.

Mr. SIMS. That is all that I require.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I think it is an injustice to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BAKER], because he may not have the names with him.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Ask him if he will insert the names.

Mr. SIMS. That is all I require, that the names shall be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. BAKER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this bill was up for consideration two weeks ago last Friday. I understood that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] objected to the consideration of the bill on the ground that he was not furnished with the names of the members of the court-martial. I understood that subsequently he was furnished with the names. I do not know the names and I can not furnish them now. As to having them printed in the RECORD, that is a question which I am not prepared to decide without reflection.

All that I know about this case is what is set out as the unanimous report of the committee, and I can state the substance of that in a very few words. That report shows that Major Wham was a soldier of exceptional excellence, a very distinguished soldier; that during his time of service as paymaster millions passed through his hands and there never was a word of reproach. It shows further that in a private transaction, having nothing to do with his official character, he was accused of misapplying $1,000 sent from Peoria, Ill., to some point, I think, in Idaho, to a gentleman by the name of Otto Gram, president of a Western company, who was to deliver it to Major Wham. Otto Gram testifies that no such transaction took place; that he never received the $1,000 and consequently could not have handed it to Major Wham. The secretary of the company swears to the same effect, that no such transaction could have taken place, or it would have been within the cognizance of his official information. Further, Major Wham swears that he never received the money. When we look further at the character of the evidence, we find that it must have been sent by express, in which case the records of the express company would prove it; or it must have been sent by registered letter, in which case the proper records of the Post-Office Department would establish that fact; or, third, it might have been sent by draft or check, in which case there would have been bank proof of it.

None of these proofs were presented. Here is a brave officer, a very distinguished officer, recognized as such in a signal manner, holding the position of paymaster for years, millions passing through his hands without reproach, and now in a private matter is charged with receiving and misappropriating $1,000. All that was supported by one affidavit, and that witness is contradicted squarely by Major Wham, by Mr. Gram, and by the secretary of the company. It is a case in which that justice which is present in the hearts of the people and equally present in the hearts of their representatives here should be extended without a moment's hesitation on the record as presented by the report in this case.

The list of names which I hold in my hand has been given to me as the names of the members of the court-martial, and I will make them a part of my remarks.

[The names as read to the House appear later in the proceedings.]

I am quite aware that the President of the United States can set aside the remaining part of the judgment of the court-martial, but I am equally aware that this case demands more. The executive government itself, through its appropriate organ, General Alger, has said in his report on the case that although the President could set aside the remaining part of the sentence, it would not be full justice to Major Wham; and he recommends that full justice, rather than partial justice, be done to this brave officer and upright man.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SIMS. If the names of the members of the court-martial are read, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the paper sent to the desk by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BAKER].

The Clerk read as follows:

General Otis, Colonel Anderson, Lieutenant-Colonel Theaker, Lieutenant-Colonel Wolverton, Lieutenant-Colonel Bacon, Major Marshall, Major Post, Major McCauley, Major Wilson, Major Cox, Major French, Major McCrea, Major Nash.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Before consent is given, I should like to hear the report read. If I understood correctly the reading of the bill, it proposes that if this paymaster be restored, full pay be allowed him for the time he has not been serving. Is that the case?

Mr. DOCKERY. That is the fact.

Mr. SIMS. It was admitted in the debate here that such would be the effect of the bill if passed.

Mr. DINGLEY. It seems to me that if this paymaster be restored to the Army and given his original position, he ought not to be paid for the time during which he has been performing no service.

Mr. SULZER. If he was unjustly discharged, does not the gentleman think he ought to be paid for the time he has been out?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That point, I think, is covered by the recommendation of the Secretary of War as contained in the report.

Mr. HAY. I suggest to the gentleman from Maine that after we agree to the consideration of the bill that question can be raised.

Mr. DINGLEY. I should like to hear read that portion of the bill proposing to give this man full pay for the time he was not in the service.

The bill was again read.

Mr. DINGLEY. The bill seems to grant pay to this man for the time he has not been serving. It seems to me that his restoration to the Army, if the facts justify it, should be sufficient, without giving him pay for the time during which he has not been performing any service.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I suggest to the gentleman from Maine that that question can be considered by the House after the bill is taken up. I urge further the injustice to which this man has been subjected in having been discharged in this way after long service, simply because a certain debt was not paid.

Mr. DINGLEY. As I understand, he has had half pay during all this time; and the proposition is to give him full pay. It seems to me that if while performing no service at all he has been enjoying half pay, we should not, if we now restore him to his former position, give him full pay unless there are some strong reasons to the contrary.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Is he not entitled to special consideration from the fact that his honor was impugned by the unjust action of this court-martial?

Mr. DINGLEY. It seems to me that in this case we are asked to go a little further than we have been accustomed to go.

Mr. SULZER. Let that question come up when the bill is considered.

Mr. CANNON. I hope there will be no objection to the consideration of the bill. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that this is a pretty hard case.

Mr. SULZER. I think it is an outrageous case.

Mr. CANNON. I believe the House ought to have a chance to pass upon the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill, but I should like to hear what may be said on the point I have suggested.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. DINGLEY. It seems to me that as this officer has performed no duty for a period of years, during which he has been receiving half pay, we ought not now to allow him to receive full pay for that period in addition to restoring him to his former rank. I should like to hear some reason for the action here proposed.

Mr. BAKER of Illinois. In reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine, I ask the Clerk to read from the desk the concluding sentence of General Alger's report on this case—only one sentence, which sums up that officer's view on the very point presented by the gentleman from Maine.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is true that the unexpired portion of the sentence could be remitted by the President and he could be restored to duty. But in my opinion this would not be a full measure of relief to him, and I therefore recommend legislation for his relief.

Mr. DINGLEY. But, Mr. Speaker, that is no suggestion that he shall have full pay during this period. It seems to me that the restoration of the officer to his former position, allowing him to receive the half pay which he has been receiving during the period of his retirement, and when he was rendering no service, would cover the case.

However, I am ready to hear any suggestions on that point.

Mr. BELL. That is what the Secretary of War has stated—

Mr. DINGLEY. That he received full pay?

Mr. BELL. No; but that the President should restore him.

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes; I understand that; but the question here is whether he can receive full pay after having received half pay during the period that he was not in the service.

Mr. BAKER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, there can be no remedy except by restoring this man to his full right. He should be restored to his full right as completely as the law could restore such right, so that his status would be the same as if this great and vital mistake had not been made.

Now, I have no accusation whatever to bring against the court-martial that formulated this sentence. I know human nature, just as every member of this House knows it, sufficiently well to know that great mistakes, unaccountable mistakes, and unquestionable mistakes are sometimes made by honorable, sincere, conscientious, and worthy men. This seems to me to be a case in point. It is clearly such a case of mistake.

I am informed, and believe it to be true, that since this injustice, this mistake, was inflicted on Major Wham he has not been able to do a particle of business. He has been under a cloud, so to speak, the sentence of the court-martial operating as a blight, a blast, a mildew, a scourge, and a curse upon him; and I can see that that sense of manly honor which finds so strong a place in the heart of the nation, as I believe it has in the hearts of its Representatives, will do justice in this case, and that a man such as Major Wham, who is great as a soldier and honorable as an officer, who has been made the victim of a grave mistake which has blighted his career, will be vindicated by according to him, not a mincing, but a full and manly measure of justice.

I ask a vote.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, if this were a proceeding under a contract between parties—a suit for a breach of contract in writing—the law fixes the measure of damages that could be recovered, and every lawyer on the floor of the House knows what that measure of damages is. In brief, it is the difference between the contract (that would be his salary in this case) as stipulated to be paid by the United States Government to him and what he has received since this court-martial, or what he might have received by the exercise of ordinary diligence in his endeavors to secure employment. That is fixed, and I agree fully with the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

I am perfectly willing to vote for the bill, but I am emphatically opposed to a proposition which allows to this gentleman the full salary which would have been ordinarily due to him since the court-martial proceedings took effect.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, a single word.

There is a consensus of opinion in the minds of members of the House upon the report of the committee that this legislation should be enacted; and the only difference between the members of this body seems to be whether or not from the time the court-martial went into effect, during which this man has received only half pay, he should have added thereto by this legislation the other half to which he would otherwise have been entitled.

I have sympathy with what the gentleman who has just addressed the House has said and what the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has said, and I recognize the rule touching the estimation of damages as between private individuals to be substantially as the gentleman has stated it.

Mr. RAY of New York. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman from Texas did not state the rule in this case correctly. It is not what the injured party might have earned. It is not the amount that he might have earned in other business which reduces the damages, but what he might have earned in the same character of business in which he was engaged at the time the court-martial proceedings took place. The rule stated by the gentleman from Texas has no application whatever here. This man was a paymaster, and by this wrongful act and sentence of the court-martial he was prohibited from serving in that character or from being engaged at all in the Army or Navy. If wrongly removed, he was not under obligations to engage in private business, and thereby reduce the damages he sustained by reason of this unlawful proceeding. If a professional man is lawfully hired to do professional work and wrongfully discharged by his employer, he is under no obligation whatever to shovel dirt or engage as a hod carrier in order to reduce the damages he is entitled to by reason of such wrongful breach of contract.

Mr. BURKE. Let me ask the gentleman from New York if there was anything in the sentence which would prevent him in any other of the avenues of life from making a living?

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, well, he might have gone out hoeing potatoes, or plowing, or chopping wood. But under the rule of law requiring a man anywhere wrongfully discharged to reduce his damages so far as possible he is only required to seek and engage in the same class of business he was engaged in at the time the wrongful discharge is alleged to have occurred and damages were sustained by reason thereof. If a minister is engaged to preach and wrongfully dismissed, he is not under obligation to go to hoeing corn or chopping wood so as to reduce the damages he sustains by the wrong.

Mr. BURKE. I do not agree with the views of the gentleman from New York on that proposition. It is not sustained by authority throughout the country in our courts of justice.

Mr. CANNON. Well, let that be as it may.

Mr. SULZER. Lawyers, as well as doctors, disagree.

Mr. CANNON. I will take it either that the gentleman from New York is correct or that the gentleman from Texas is correct, or that both are correct.

A MEMBER. - Or neither.

Mr. CANNON. So far as my remarks are concerned, I do not care who is correct. When I was trying years ago to make an honest living by the practice of the law in a country circuit, I used to have an idea that by my hustling and by my practice of the law I could make a fair living; but that was a quarter of a century ago, so that I do not know now.

But what I wanted to say was this: Here is a man who, when a young man, enlisted in the Army in the late war. He did good service. He attracted the attention of his regiment, and the attention of the people of his State, and, to a certain extent, the attention of the people of the country. He attracted the attention of the great Silent Commander, by whom he was appointed paymaster on account of his fitness for the position and his magnificent service in the late war. Now, it seems that he was court-martialed. Everybody agrees that the sentence of that court-martial should be annulled by legislation. Take a man almost old enough to be retired, who, during all these years has been engaged in the performance of this duty, who is broken in fortune, under a cloud—

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In debt.

Mr. CANNON. In debt, spoiling shoe leather, as, smarting under the sense of injustice, he comes to Washington and goes here and goes there begging and imploring for a hearing that justice may be done. Now, whatever the rule of law may be, we all understand that under those conditions he could not have earned anything. It seems to me that if this judgment ought to be wiped out, as I believe it ought to be, with it ought to come even-handed and full justice. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Let us have a vote.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BAKER of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. RAY of New York. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HAY. I wish to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the regular order, and the gentleman from Virginia states that he has a privileged report.

CIVILIANS IN THE VOLUNTEER ARMY.

Mr. HAY. I ask for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish for the information of the House the names of all civilians appointed to positions in the Volunteer Army since the 24th day of April, 1898, together with the names of States from which said civilians were appointed.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is that resolution reported by a committee?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. It is reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the regular order. The Clerk will report the first bill.

ALMON SPRINGSTEEN.

The first bill on the Calendar of Unfinished Business was the bill (H. R. 2656) removing the charge of desertion standing against Almon Springsteen, reported from the Committee of the Whole on June 17, 1898, with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

The bill was ordered to lie on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, does the Chair hold that the consideration of these bills is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The previous question was ordered on these bills, the Chair understands.

Mr. RAY of New York. The previous question was ordered on the bills and amendments to their final passage.

Mr. LOUD. If so, Mr. Speaker, then it seems to me that when the regular order has been called heretofore this should have been the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would have been the regular order, but the attention of the Chair was not called to the fact.

Mr. LOUD. The House has gone to the call of committees when the regular order has been demanded during the week. I shall not offer any factions objection to this, but I want to call the attention of the Chair to the condition that has prevailed heretofore, and I think the Chair, after due investigation of this subject, will find that perhaps rulings made heretofore by the Chair have been erroneous, in that they have led to a condition that never was contemplated by the rule. Of course the rules contemplate the orderly and good government of the House. Under those rules Friday night is set aside for a certain character of business. Some few years ago—how long I can not say—the Chair determined that measures coming over from Friday night were the regular order on the succeeding Friday.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire—

Mr. LOUD. Just let me finish my statement.

Mr. RAY of New York. I desire to inquire whether or not lecturing the Chair—the Speaker—is now the regular order, or the consideration of the bills before the House, the unfinished business on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from California raises the question of whether this would be the regular order, and that is a point of order on which the Chair is very glad to hear the gentleman from California. If any error has been made in any ruling as to the business of the House, the sooner it is corrected the better.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, as I was about to say, that ruling was made some two or three years ago—that business coming over from Friday night was the regular order on the succeeding Friday. While that involved but a few cases from the Friday night session, of course attention was only partly drawn to the matter; but I think when the Chair comes to contemplate that a specific number of hours on Friday night are set aside exclusively for a certain character of business, that at least we are going on dangerous ground, as demonstrated now, when the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions pass seventy or eighty cases of a night, and that they have not only taken the time the House has given them under our rules, but have brought over business enough to give them consideration for substantially a full day in the House. I think the original intent of the rules was simply to give to the Committees on Pensions and Invalid Pensions, and to the Committee on Military Affairs for the removal of charges of desertion, Friday night from 8 until 10.30 to dispose of the business upon that Calendar.

Now, let us see what we shall get to. Had we followed up the course pursued to consider bills on Friday night within this privilege of going to the Calendar for two and a half hours on Friday night, we would have left business enough on hand, as they have, to consume the full time of the House on the succeeding Friday, which time is given under the rules of our House as privileged over other matters, to go into Committee of the Whole House to consider business upon the Private Calendar. While I shall not offer any objection now, and shall not, Mr. Speaker, insist upon the point of order, it seems to me that the rulings in the past have been such as to lead us away from the original intent of the rule; and I have always assumed that in making the rules, and in the definition of the rules, and the decisions given upon them, we simply take into consideration that ordinary common sense that governs every person, and simply agreed to each rule and the intent that was given to that rule at that time.

While I withdraw the point, I hope, when we are thirty-three years away from the close of the war, and pass pension bills to the extent of over seventy a night, and another department is grinding out $150,000,000 a year for pensions, and when the House has set aside two and a half hours a week, that the Committee on Pensions and Invalid Pensions will confine themselves to Friday night. I will not insist upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires, before the matter is withdrawn—

Mr. SIMS. I renew the point, in order that the Chair may pass upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say, before the matter passes from the House, that the proceeding is entirely in accordance with the language of the rules. It is not in regard to pension cases only, but in regard to all others—that when the previous question had been ordered upon a bill to the passage it then becomes the order of the House, and supersedes almost everything. But, of course, the rule actually contemplated that this should be done in regard to a single bill. Now, it seems to have been done with regard to seventy in a lump. The only way in which that could have been done was by the unanimous consent of all the members present, and there was no way by which this business could have been brought before the House at this time if a single man had objected.

Mr. MAXWELL. That was the case.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that was the case. Nevertheless, the practice is not by any means a desirable one. The business of the House ought not to be forestalled by consent given in that way. The Chair knows no way to prevent it, except by some member being present and insisting upon a proper course of action. If the proper course of action had been taken, there could have been but a single bill with the previous question ordered beforehand.

As to this matter not having been taken up before, the Chair can only say that he was not aware that these bills were in this condition until now.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, is not this the first time that pension bills have come up, or have been sought to be brought up, at any other time than Friday?

The SPEAKER. It is the first time in this Congress that the previous question has been ordered in this way. They would come up as unfinished business if the previous question was not ordered; but whenever the previous question is ordered, it is equivalent to a direction to lay aside all business and proceed to the consideration of these special bills, and it could only be done by unanimous consent. Whether the practice is undesirable or not is for the members of the House to determine.

Mr. LOUD. I have no doubt but that technically the Chair is right, but it seems to be leading up to the original intent.

The SPEAKER. It is accomplishing what was not the original intent, but it is difficult to see how any other ruling could be made. The Clerk will proceed with the first bill.

The following bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, were severally considered, and the House bills ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed; and the Senate bills ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

Mr. RAY of New York. I ask unanimous consent to enter a motion to reconsider the vote on the passage of these various bills, and that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that order will be made. There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. TODD, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. LINNEY, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. STROWD of North Carolina, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. TAWNEY, indefinitely, on account of important business. To Mr. LANHAM, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Peter Ramodanovitch, Fifty-fourth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

EXTENSION OF LEAVE TO PRINT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request:

Mr. TODD requests an extension of ten days within which to print remarks on the annexation of Hawaii.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think that extension ought to be granted. I object.

Several MEMBERS (to Mr. PAYNE). Do not object.

Mr. PAYNE. Is this a request simply for the gentleman himself?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection; and leave is granted.

SYLVESTER F. HILDEBRAND.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8607) to correct the military record of Sylvester F. Hildebrand.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That special order No. 233, issued by the War Department under paragraph 1371, referring to restrictions and penalties, be, and the same is hereby, set aside, and that Sylvester F. Hildebrand be given an honorable discharge, by reason of expiration of service as a private in Company E, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, instead of the discharge issued to him June 7, 1865, under said special order.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Insert after the word "discharge," in line 7, the words "as of date June 7, 1865."

Add at end of line 11 the words "and that he be paid all pay and allowances retained from him on his discharge by reason of the forfeiture specified in paragraph 1371, Revised Army Regulations of 1863."

Mr. DAVENPORT. I ask for the reading of the report in this case. [A pause.] If nobody objects, I will withdraw the request that the report be read.

Mr. LOUD. I think the report ought to be read, especially in view of the amendment proposed. I reserve the right to object, pending the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. BROWNLOW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8607) to correct the military record of Sylvester F. Hildebrand, do report that the same do pass with the following amendments, to wit:

Insert after the word "discharge," in line 7, the words "as of date June 7, 1865."

Add at end of line 11 the words "and that he be paid all pay and allowances retained from him on his discharge by reason of the forfeiture specified in paragraph 1371, Revised Army Regulations of 1863."

This is a case of particular merit. Sylvester F. Hildebrand enlisted by volunteering into the service of the United States, and was enrolled August 20, 1862, into Company E, One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, for three years or during the war. He was at the time of said enlistment 15 years and 4 months old, but was readily accepted by the recruiting officers and sworn into service.

He served faithfully until after the war was over and was in the grand review at Washington City, Tuesday, May 23, 1865. During his service he was in every battle from second Bull Run to Appomattox in which his regiment was engaged. He never missed a day's duty; never answered a sick call.

Soon after his enlistment his mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Kelly, of Apollo, Pa., made application for the discharge of her son on the ground that he was a minor. Her efforts in this direction seem to have reached the Department October 27, 1864, and was returned to her because "lacking in certain essential particulars."

On January 17, 1865, she again applied, and the Department took up the matter of the record and character of Sylvester F. Hildebrand with the officers of Company E, One hundred and thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry; this occupied until May 20, 1865. All of this was unknown to the soldier, who was at the front fighting with his command, and who supposed that his mother had ceased her efforts on being written to by him that he intended to serve out his term of enlistment. However, the case was submitted to the Secretary of War May 20, 1865, and on May 23, 1865, he directed that Hildebrand be discharged, under paragraph 1371 of Revised Army Regulations, which reads as follows:

"Every enlisted man discharged as a minor, or for other cause involving fraud on his part in the enlistment, or discharged by the civil authority, shall forfeit all pay and allowances due at the time of the discharge, and shall not receive any final statement."

Under this severe regulation Sylvester F. Hildebrand, after almost three years' faithful service at the front, after the war was over, and after marching in the grand review at Washington, was discharged, all pay and allowance cut off, and left without sufficient money to pay his way back home to Apollo, Pa.

The military record, after stating that his services were faithful and that he was discharged under the above paragraph of the Army Regulations, graciously adds:

"It is deemed proper to remark that his officers gave Hildebrand an excellent character as a soldier."

It is time that this soldier, who in the enthusiasm of youth enlisted, and whose only crime was perhaps a misrepresentation of his age, at which both the recruiting and his commanding officers in service of the United States winked, should be dealt with justly by correcting his military record to correspond with the facts, and granting him the allowances so unjustly cut off from him.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Military Affairs were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DAVENPORT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HIRAM JOHNSON AND OTHERS.

Mr. SIMS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7695) for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. STEELE (before the reading was concluded). I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to adjourn, which is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. SIMS. I should like to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. STEELE. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] wants to make a statement, and I will withdraw my motion until he does so.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state the purpose of this bill and the facts upon which it is based. I hope members will give me their attention. Of course I am satisfied the bill is not going to be considered at the present time; but perhaps the House will do better by it in the future, when there is more time. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Is not that equivalent to an objection?

Mr. SIMS. It is not so intended.

During the war, at a place called Henderson, west of the Tennessee River on the Mobile and Ohio road, there was a small force of Federal soldiers. The country was completely in possession of the Federals at that time. East of the Tennessee River Col. N. N. Cox, my distinguished colleague in this House, was commander of a Confederate regiment. He made a raid at night into Henderson from the east side of the river, captured the small Union force which was there, destroyed $1,900 worth of cotton belonging to the United States, together with camp equipage and property belonging to the Army; in all, $5,080.

They also destroyed about $18,000 worth of cotton belonging to cotton speculators and the depot and water tank. The commander of that division, Colonel Haney, made an order for an assessment upon rebel sympathizers sufficient to reimburse the United States Government for the losses which it had sustained. An appraisal was made; but the officers, through mistake, misunderstanding this general order, collected enough money to reimburse the Government and also to pay for all the property of private citizens that was lost at the same time.

The money was collected and paid over to the Government officer, but General Grant refused to appropriate a larger amount than was necessary to reimburse the Government, together with the sum of $500 paid to a Union woman for extinguishing a fire on a bridge which was sought to be destroyed by some guerrillas. The total amount collected was $26,751.36; but the committee report shows that only $5,080 was required by the United States Government to reimburse it for actual losses.

This amount is proved by the facts of record in the case. The balance, less $500 paid to a lady who saved a burning bridge, was turned over to Provost-Marshal-General Hillyer, of the Department of Tennessee. It was not for payment of property destroyed or damaged or anything of that sort, but it is a fund which is held there and which should be appropriated to pay to these citizens the money that, through a misapprehension of the order of the commanding officer, was collected and paid over to the proper officer of the United States. That is the whole of it. That is the shape the matter is in at this time.

Now, this claim is unanimously reported by the Committee on War Claims. It has been pending before Congress for some twenty years and has passed both Houses over and over again, but at different terms, there not having been concurrent action upon it in both Houses during any one session, as shown by the report. It is in proof that General Grant and General Sullivan, in command of the forces of the Federal Government at that place at the time, have stated that this money should be paid back to these people, as it was collected under a misapprehension. It is also in proof that the parties from whom the money was taken were all loyal to the Government of the United States.

They were loyal people, not rebel sympathizers, but were at home attending to their own business affairs, and the money was collected from them through a misapprehension or misconception of the orders of General Grant, and he himself said it was a misunderstanding of its construction; and this bill, in view of that fact, seeks only to return the money taken erroneously from them which is now in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. DALZELL. And return it to them without interest?

Mr. SIMS. Yes, sir; without any interest whatever.

Mr. ELLIS. Is the money in the Treasury, to which the gentleman refers, a sum which was collected from the Confederates to reimburse the Government and the Union men who had lost it?

Mr. SIMS. No, sir; the order was to assess and collect a certain sum of money from rebel sympathizers to reimburse the Government for the loss of army property, including cotton burned by the Confederates in that particular raid and at that particular time owned by the United States.

Mr. ELLIS. And that money is now in the Treasury?

Mr. SIMS. It is, sir.

Mr. ELLIS. From whom was it collected?

Mr. SIMS. From the parties whose names are mentioned in the bill, and to whom the report shows that it is due.

Mr. ELLIS. Were they rebel sympathizers?

Mr. SIMS. No, sir; the report shows that they were Union men, and Colonel Hurst, who commanded the Sixth Regiment of Tennessee Cavalry of the United States Army, who was an intensely loyal man and raised a regiment in that locality, devoting himself to the cause of the Union, certified that he knew each one and all of them, and that they were loyal to the Government of the United States during the war. But the orders were misunderstood, and this money was collected from individuals and not from the community, as was intended. It has been withheld from these people and has been lying in the Treasury of the United States for some thirty-five years.

This is no uncertain claim. It is for money actually collected and paid under a misapprehension of General Grant's order, and that is admitted by himself, and here is his own statement as well as that of General Sullivan and other Federal commanders, showing that the money was improperly collected and ought to be returned.

Mr. ELLIS. Then they only seek to have returned to them the money actually taken under what the gentleman says was a misapprehension of the orders?

Mr. SIMS. That is correct. That is all that is asked, and I hope the House at some convenient season in the future will consider the matter and that there will be no objection to its passage.

I thank the gentleman from Indiana for his courtesy. I know the motion he has made for adjournment takes precedence of any request that I may make, and I can only thank him now for his indulgence and express a hope that the House will favorably consider this bill at some proper time.

Mr. STEELE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew the motion to adjourn.

Mr. PAYNE. I was rather in hopes the gentleman from Tennessee would withdraw his objection to the consideration of the bill. [Laughter.]

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. STEELE, the House divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 31.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next at 13 o'clock m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 24, 1898.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Attorney-General submitting an estimate of appropriation for inclusion in the general deficiency bill for payment of accounts of United States district attorneys for services as special counsel in the circuit court of appeals by direction of the Attorney-General, prior to July 1, 1896, $20,000; which, on motion of Mr. HALE, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Commissary-General of Subsistence, together with draft of a bill relating to details of commissary sergeants, and of regimental commissary sergeants during the period of the existing war; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for "Fees and expenses of examining surgeons for pension," for the fiscal year 1898, $250,000; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the War Department for the service of the first six months of the fiscal year 1899; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL CADETS.

Mr. HALE. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report a bill, and I ask for its present consideration.

The bill (S. 4808) authorizing the President to appoint additional cadets at large at the United States Naval Academy was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to appoint during the next fiscal year five cadets at large at the United States Naval Academy, to be in addition to the number heretofore authorized by law, said appointments to be subject to the conditions and requirements of existing laws and regulations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BATE. I think it ought to lie over. It is an increase of power, something that Congress has refused to grant heretofore, at least as far as West Point is concerned, if not Annapolis.

Mr. COCKRELL. It applies merely to the Navy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BATE. Let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to state the reason for the bill before he makes his objection?

Mr. BATE. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The occasion for it is the application of young Gridley, the son of Captain Gridley, who commanded the Olympia, and who died soon after the battle of Manila. His son, who is a very bright young fellow, desirous of entering the service, has made application to the President; but the President has no authority, as all the appointments at large are filled. The matter has been considered in the House committee and, so far as possible, here. It was thought better, instead of making the bill simply cover one case, that it should apply to five cases wherein emergencies may arise like this one. Of course the bill can only go through at this time by unanimous consent.

Mr. GEAR. Will the Senator allow me—

Mr. BATE. I think it will not hurt it to lie over at least until to-morrow.

Mr. GEAR. I will state that the case of Oscar Deignan will also be covered by the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. BATE. The President has power to appoint—

Mr. HALE. There is so much confusion I can not hear what the Senator says.

Mr. BATE. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. HALE. Certainly, the Senator has the floor.

Mr. BATE. I was simply going to say that the President has power to appoint ten cadets at large for West Point, and I believe ten at large for Annapolis. That is the law as it now is. We have heretofore upon two or three occasions at least refused to increase the authority of the President in this matter. It has been invariably defeated; at least it has been legislated upon heretofore adversely. I do not think the bill ought to be rushed through in the morning hour without any thought about it, and in a hurried manner. So I suggest that the bill lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. Of course a single objection will carry it over, and the Senator knows the difficulty of getting up a bill of this kind from the Calendar. This is an emergency matter, undoubtedly. It applies for only one year. It does not increase the permanent cadets, but only authorizes during the next year these appointments in order to reward special cases, like that of Captain Gridley's son.

Mr. BATE. I do not want to throw anything in the way of the appointment of Captain Gridley's son. Neither do I believe in special legislation. This is a species of that kind of legislation, although it says five instead of one. Yet I can not see that Captain Gridley's son or anyone else will lose anything by the bill going over until to-morrow. I do not think there will be any trouble in getting it up.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator may see his way to let the bill be put upon its passage. I do not know that I can get it up if it goes to the Calendar.

Mr. BATE. Let it go over.

Mr. GEAR. I should like to state, in addition to the reasons given by the Senator from Maine, that young Deignan, of Stuart, Iowa, one of the volunteers who sank the Merrimac, has been recommended for appointment by the people of his county and by the governor of my State, and the President can not appoint him for lack of authority.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

THE QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. COCKRELL. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report an original bill as a substitute for one that I shall ask to have indefinitely postponed.

The bill (S. 4800) to increase the efficiency of the Quartermaster's Department of the Army was read the first time by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a very short bill and a very important one, and I ask for its present consideration. It will take only a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information. The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the existing war, and for a period not exceeding one year thereafter, the Secretary of War may make such distribution of the duties and labors of his Department as may be deemed for the best interests of the service, and may assign a suitable officer in charge of each of such divisions, and may assign to duty as special inspectors of the Quartermaster's Department not exceeding four officers, to be selected from the regular and volunteer officers of the Department; and such officers and the quartermaster on the staff of the Commanding General of the Army, while so acting, shall have the rank next above that held by them and not above colonel.

SEC. 2. That the President may nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may appoint twenty assistant quartermasters of volunteers with the rank of captain in the Quartermaster's Department.

The Secretary of War may assign such of the volunteer quartermasters with the rank of captain as may be deemed necessary to duty as assistants in the office of the Quartermaster-General, at the various supply depots or on other important and special work, and may continue such assignments for a period not exceeding one year after the close of the war, then to be discharged.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4737) to provide for the better organization of the Quartermaster's Department, with a view to the proper transaction of the large volume of additional work placed upon such department by the sudden increase of the regular and volunteer forces of the Army, to report it adversely. I move its indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

THE CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg the indulgence of the Senate. I should like very much to call up a similar bill relating to the Corps of Engineers, which I reported this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4713) relative to the Corps of Engineers of the Army.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is a short bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Corps of Engineers of the Army shall hereafter consist of one Chief of Engineers, with the rank of brigadier-general, 7 colonels, 14 lieutenant-colonels, 23 majors, 35 captains, 30 first lieutenants, 12 second lieutenants, and the Battalion of Engineers: Provided, That the vacancies created by this act in all grades above second lieutenant shall be filled by the promotion by seniority of the officers now in the Corps of Engineers; And provided further, That the number of officers in any grade above second lieutenant shall not be increased beyond the number heretofore established by law by the promotion of any officer to fill an original vacancy created by this act until such officer shall have served at least three years in the grade from which he is promoted and the captains and lieutenants shall have satisfactorily passed the examinations required by existing laws.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CARTER. By direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I report a bill and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The bill (S. 4810) to increase the efficiency of the Subsistence Department of the Army was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the existing war and for not exceeding one year thereafter, each commissary of subsistence who may be assigned to the duty of purchasing and shipping subsistence supplies at important depots, and the two commissaries of subsistence who may be assigned as assistants to the Commissary-General of Subsistence, and the commissary on the staff of the Commanding General of the Army shall, while so acting, have the rank next above that held by him and not above the rank of colonel. And the President may nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may appoint twenty assistant commissaries of subsistence of volunteers with the rank of captain, to be discharged within one year after the close of the war.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CARTER. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4795) to increase the efficiency of the Subsistence Department of the Army, to report it adversely. I move its indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 4811) granting a pension to Royal J. Freeman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced a bill (S. 4812) to pay J. and W. Seligman & Co. the sum of $1,794.56 for certain coupons detached from United States bonds, which said coupons were lost on the Cunard steamship Oregon, sunk at sea March 14, 1896; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 4813) to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Kansas and Southeastern Railroad Company for the purpose of constructing a railway, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 4814) referring the claim of Robert W. Dunbar to the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 4815) for the relief of the owners of the ship Achilles; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 4816) regulating the fees of attorneys in pension claims; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will accompany the bill by two letters, one from the Secretary of the Interior and the other from the Commissioner of Pensions, very warmly urging the passage of the bill. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut introduced a bill (S. 4817) for the relief of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 177) to correct an omission relative to signal officers on the staff of corps commanders; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment relative to an increase in the force of the office of the Assistant Attorney-General, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HANSBROUGH subsequently, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported favorably the foregoing amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment proposing an appropriation of $10,000 to carry out the provision of the Senate resolution requesting the President to make such arrangements as may be necessary to secure at the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition, to be held at Omaha, Nebr., the attendance of representatives of certain Indian tribes, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PETTIGREW subsequently reported favorably from the Committee on Indian Affairs the foregoing amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $205.15 to pay Briscoe B. Bouldin, an agent of the internal-revenue service of the United States, for reimbursement of actual expenses incurred by him in account of wounds received by him from an outlaw while in the discharge of public duties, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,866.66 to pay Mrs. W. W. Ashby, widow of W. W. Ashby, late consul of the United States at Colon, this sum being the balance of one year's salary due her late husband, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF THE METHODIST BOOK CONCERN SOUTH.

On motion of Mr. TELLER, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Claims in the investigation of the claim of the Methodist Book Concern South be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

LETTER OF COMMODORE MELVILLE CONCERNING HAWAII.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer a resolution, and ask that it may be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the letter of Commodore Melville, Chief Engineer of the Navy, dated June 23, 1898, in the words following, be printed as a document for the use of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Let the letter be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY.
BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING,
Washington, D. C., June 23, 1898.

Sir: With regard to the value of the Hawaiian Islands, not only strategically in the defense of our coast, but also commercially, in their protection of the great trade routes of the Pacific Ocean, I desire to call your attention to the prize essay entitled "The protection of commerce during war," prepared for the Royal United Service Institution of London, by Captain Winter, governor-general of Canada's Foot Guards.

Referring to the sea road between Hongkong and Victoria, British Columbia, via Yokohama, and to that between Victoria, British Columbia, and Australia, via Hawaii, the essayist says:

"Both these routes under normal conditions during peace would be classed as of lesser importance, but, in the event of war, the control of both of them would be of the greatest value to Britain, forming as they do the father portion of the Canadian transcontinental route, one of the two great alternates to the Orient in the event of the Suez route being blocked or impracticable. The trade from Hongkong and Yokohama to Victoria is constantly expanding, and will, no doubt, ere long necessitate more steamers in addition to the Canadian Pacific Railway's Empresses. These three really fine vessels are all under admiralty subsidy and regulation, and can be counted on to do a good deal toward taking care of themselves in case of trouble. The run from Victoria to Sydney is a long one, and, as yet, few regular liners are on the route. An important feature in connection with these waters is the probable annexation of Hawaii to the United States, and the consequent possibility at any time of finding the islands hostile to us, as they were over one hundred years ago to our great navigator and explorer, Captain Cook, Royal Navy. Discovered by our officers and long friendly disposed towards our Government during the early part of this century, it does seem remarkable that these fertile islands should have been allowed to quietly slip through our hands into those of a few Yankee adventurers.

Of recent years their strategic value has been enhanced tenfold. They should be our coaling station and cable pier in the Pacific; but as they are not, and their value has been grasped and appreciated by others, we shall have to make the best of smaller and less valuable islands for our purpose. It is too bad, though, that the Sandwich Islands do not float the "Union Jack" to-day.

It will be noted that while the essayist prophesies that "in the event of war the control of both of these routes will be of the greatest value to Britain," he foresees as well as the lion in the path of this "control," the Hawaiian Islands under the flag of the United States—those islands whose strategic value in recent years he says "has been enhanced tenfold," and which, he adds, "should be Britain's coaling station and cable pier in the Pacific."

The essayist's testimony is wholly frank; it is surely disinterested, and is in entire accord with that of every naval and military expert who has given his views upon this question—a question which at this time concerns so vitally not only the defense of our western coast, but the expansion of our commerce through the island groups of the Pacific and upon the great Asian littoral beyond.

Faithfully, yours,

GEO. W. MELVILLE,
Engineer in Chief.

Senator JOHN T. MORGAN.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the adoption of the resolution, which provides that the letter shall be printed as a document for the use of the Senate.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

JOHN G. SPARKS.

Mr. LINDSAY. I move to recommit to the Committee on Pensions the bill (S. 4534) to grant a pension to Ovid G. Sparks. The bill was reported by me yesterday.

The motion was agreed to.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. HOAR. I call up the conference report on the bankruptcy bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts requests the present consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1035) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The report has been read. What action does the Senator from Massachusetts desire?

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the conference report.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FAULKNER. Before the yeas and nays are taken, I should like to have some explanation of the report. I have had no opportunity to read it. I have been generally opposed to the involuntary features of bankruptcy, but from what I learn of this conference report I believe, if I understand it correctly, that I can support it. I certainly expect the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] or the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], one or the other, to give us a brief statement of the report.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I am unwilling to take up the time of the Senate and delay matters unless Senators insist upon it. I am quite content to allow the report to be disposed of without debate; at the same time I am willing to make a brief statement by way of explanation. But I do not want to delay proceedings unnecessarily. Perhaps it is best for me to make a brief statement.

At the last session of Congress the Senate passed a bankruptcy bill. It was in its chief provisions a voluntary bill. It contained provisions for involuntary bankruptcy in two classes of cases—cases where a man made a transfer of his property with intent to defraud his creditors and cases where a man transferred his property with intent to prefer some of his creditors. Those two grounds were stated in general terms, but were ample to cover those two classes of cases.

When the bill went over to the House, they adopted as a substitute for it substantially, with some modifications, what has been known for years as the Torrey bill. The bill came back in that condition and went into conference on the 3d of March last, and we have been wrestling with it in conference from that time until about a week ago.

I may say, inasmuch as I was to some extent the author of the Senate bill, that I always felt that in the matter of procedure it was not as complete a bill as it ought to be. It left a good deal to be supplied by rules of court. The House bill, on the other hand, contained elaborate provisions as to administration and procedure. A good deal of it perhaps might have been well left to rules of court. The conferees, however, concluded that it was perhaps best to adopt what are known as the administrative and procedure features of the House bill.

The main contention between the two Houses and between the conferees of the respective Houses was in respect to three questions: First, as to the grounds of involuntary bankruptcy; next, as to the offenses for which a bankrupt could be imprisoned; and, thirdly, what limitation and restrictions should be placed upon discharge.

The House bill contained nine different classes of grounds for bankruptcy, put under eight distinct heads, one of them, the fourth, containing two grounds. Four of those grounds have been entirely eliminated by the conference, and the other five have been greatly modified. The five grounds for involuntary bankruptcy agreed upon by the conferees are these:

First, a transfer or concealment of property with intent to defraud one's creditors;

Second, a transfer of property while insolvent with intent to prefer one or more creditors over the other;

Third, a preference through legal proceedings, coupled with the fact that the alleged bankrupt must be insolvent and that he has failed to remove the embargo or preference that has occurred through legal proceedings five days before a sale of his property in the proceedings;

Fourth, where a man has made a general assignment to his creditors; and,

Fifth, where a man has admitted in writing his insolvency and his willingness to be put into bankruptcy on that ground.

It will be perceived that in respect of the last two grounds they are practically voluntary. If a man makes no general assignment to his creditors, he can not be put into bankruptcy; and if a man is in an insolvent condition, he has one of two options. He can either go into voluntary bankruptcy or he can make a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors; in either case his estate is administered in bankruptcy and he gets his discharge.

The fifth ground, of course, is purely within his control. It is admitting his insolvency and his willingness to go into bankruptcy on that ground. In other words, it amounts to this: The man says, "I do not care about being put to the trouble of going into bankruptcy. I admit I am insolvent. If my creditors care about it, they can put me into bankruptcy."

Practically, then, there are only three grounds of involuntary bankruptcy, and two of those—a transfer of property to defraud creditors and a transfer to preferred creditors—are substantially included in the Senate bill, though in more general terms. These two grounds are, moreover, wholly at the option and under the control of the bankrupt.

The only other ground is what is termed preference by legal proceedings; that is, if a man is insolvent and his creditors proceed against him by attachment, and through such process seek to take his property, in that case, if he is not able to discharge those proceedings before a final sale on execution, he can be put into bankruptcy.

It is to be observed in respect to this ground, considered in connection with other provisions of the bill, that the attaching creditor can easily be deprived of his preference. If bankruptcy proceedings are instituted within four months, his attachment is set aside and the property that he has attached goes into the general estate of the bankrupt for distribution among the creditors. Hence, while there may seem to be an apparent hardship in the eyes of those who are opposed to involuntary bankruptcy in this case, yet there is, on the other hand, a protection in it against the attaching creditor, for he will be slow to move when he knows that the other creditors can put the man into bankruptcy and vacate the attachment, and he will have nothing left but the expense of paying costs and attorneys' fees.

Mr. FAULKNER. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly; I should be very glad to answer the Senator.

Mr. FAULKNER. Is there any provision which affects the validity of a lien obtained in the usual and ordinary course of judicial procedure on a judgment against a party?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; within four months. Now, coupled with these grounds for involuntary bankruptcy which I have described is another thing that gives color to the whole matter and takes away the harshest features of those grounds. Under the House bill if a man had committed one of the nine classes of acts of bankruptcy, he could be put into bankruptcy on the petition of his creditors, even though he was solvent. In the conference bill we have made it a condition that no man, no matter what act of bankruptcy he has committed, can be put into bankruptcy unless he is insolvent.

Then we have adopted a new rule, a new definition of insolvency. Under the old bankruptcy law and at common law a man was deemed insolvent when he did not pay his debts in the ordinary course of business when they were due. I will read a brief citation from Bump on Bankruptcy, which is familiar to most lawyers. It will take just a moment:

Insolvency, within the meaning of the bankrupt act, means inability to pay debts in the ordinary course of business, as persons carrying on trade usually do.

That was the definition and rule which were applied under the old bankruptcy law. That is the definition and rule which is substantially applied in most cases under State insolvency laws. In the conference bill we have adopted a new rule or definition for insolvency. We say in this conference bill that a man is not insolvent if all his property, exclusive of what he has disposed of or concealed to defraud his creditors, at a fair valuation, is equal to his debts. We do not make it the criterion that a man can not pay his debts. He may be in default on his notes and his commercial paper, or his other dues, still if he can come into court and show that his property at a fair valuation, exclusive of what he has attempted to dispose of to defraud his creditors, is equal in value to his debts, then he is not insolvent and can not be put into bankruptcy.

But on account of adopting this new rule of insolvency we have in connection with it, from the necessity of the case, adopted a different order of proof. We require the alleged bankrupt to assume the burden of proving his solvency. Under the old rule and definition of insolvency it was very easy for the creditor to show that the bankrupt had not paid his paper when it was due. It was a simple thing, and hence it was fair to charge him with the duty of proving such insolvency. But under this new rule of insolvency it is more difficult, and the matter is to a large extent within the peculiar and special knowledge of the alleged bankrupt.

The question of insolvency under the new rule involves, first, the number, character, and amount of debts owed; second, the location, character, and amount of property owned. These are difficult matters to discover, ascertain, and prove for the creditor, but are easy of disclosure for the debtor. He can easily schedule and make known his property and his debts, and it is by comparing the property with the debts that the question of insolvency is determined. There is therefore no hardship in adopting this rule of proof.

In the case of the first ground of bankruptcy, that of disposing of property to defraud his creditors, we put the burden of proving solvency on the debtor in the first instance. In respect to the next two grounds we say that he shall be required to appear in court with his books and papers and give testimony as to his property and his debts, and then if he thus appears, the burden of proof is on the petitioning creditors. I am not quite sure that it was necessary to put this provision in the bill. We have simply applied a well-known rule of evidence which I will quote from Greenleaf. It is very brief.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to inquire why it is that the bill provides that any man who makes an honest and general assignment shall be put into bankruptcy?

Mr. NELSON. I will come to that point later on. I am now referring to another subject—the matter of evidence. Mr. Greenleaf, in his work on Evidence, which is familiar to all lawyers—but I will read it for the benefit of what I may call lay Senators—says:

But where the subject-matter of a negative averment lies peculiarly within the knowledge of the other party the averment is taken as true, unless disproved by that party. Such is the case in civil or criminal prosecutions for a penalty for doing an act which the statutes do not permit to be done by any persons, except those who are duly licensed therefor, as for selling liquors, exercising a trade or profession, and the like. Here the party, if licensed, can immediately show it without the least inconvenience, whereas if proof of the negative were required the inconvenience would be very great.

The following cases are also in point and apply the rule I invoke: Gales vs. Christie, 4 La., 295; King vs. Atkins, 33 La., 1065; Carroll vs. Malone, 28 Ala., 525; Wolfe vs. Noll, 62 Ala., 25.

We have simply applied this well-known rule of evidence to this case for the reason that we have adopted a new rule of insolvency.

I will now briefly answer the Senator from Alabama. First, to be very candid with him (and I believe here in the Senate we should be as candid as good Methodist brethren are with one another in camp meetings), I might say that the House conferees insisted very much on this clause, and for the life of me I could not see that it worked a great hardship. If a man has made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors, it simply means, to use a slang phrase, that he has thrown up the sponge, that he is insolvent. The creditors are desirous of putting him into bankruptcy on this ground for the reason that they think that there may be cases where a man who makes such an assignment may assign to some near and dear friend, who may stand off and annoy, harass, and delay creditors, especially those at a distance. That is their view of the case.

But there is one advantage to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Alabama. If a man has made a general assignment under State law or under common law for the benefit of his creditors, he can not get a general discharge from all his debts. His estate is distributed, but he is still holden for the unpaid debts; whereas if he goes into bankruptcy and has in other respects complied with the law, he gets a complete discharge. Whatever little burden there may be in the opinion of the Senator from Alabama and others of that way of thinking in putting a man in that condition into bankruptcy, it is more than made up in my mind by the fact that in bankruptcy he can get an entire release from all his debts and obligations and begin life over again a free man.

In respect to the matter of imprisonment, there were four grounds in the House bill authorizing the imprisonment of the bankrupt. We have reduced the grounds to two. The first is where a bankrupt has concealed his property from his trustee after proceedings have been instituted. That is a species of embezzlement. The other case is where a bankrupt has committed perjury in his statement, has sworn falsely to an account. I do not think it was necessary to incorporate that in this bill, for we have a general statute in relation to perjury, but it is put into the bill for the purpose of extra precaution and because the House conferees desired it.

We have provided punishment for the referee for maladministration, and so for the trustee. Then we have provided punishment in a case where a creditor makes a false claim. That is nothing but a form of perjury.

We have covered also another case. We have made it criminal for anybody to attempt to extort money for acting or forbearing to act in bankruptcy proceedings. In other words, we do not want it to be in the power of a creditor or a shyster lawyer to go to the wife or the relatives or friends of a bankrupt and say, "Here, I will put your relative or friend into bankruptcy unless you pay me so and so, unless you become responsible for his debts." We have made it a criminal offense in order to prevent a thing of that kind. So that, if a man is unfortunate enough to be insolvent and liable to bankruptcy proceedings, no unconscionable creditor or shyster lawyer can go to his wife, if she has a little property, or to his mother or father and say, "I will put him into bankruptcy unless you respond and settle up his debts." We have made it a penal offense to do that.

Coming, in the next place, to the matter of discharges, which to my mind is a very important matter, a bankruptcy law that is not liberal in the matter of discharges is a fraud and a delusion. The House bill contained nine grounds for denying a man his discharge in bankruptcy. Many of them related to acts committed before the petition was filed against him; in fact, if we had adopted all those grounds for denying a man his discharge, under the conference bill as we have framed it, with its limited grounds of involuntary bankruptcy, no man who is put into involuntary bankruptcy could have got his discharge; but in the conference bill we have removed seven of those grounds and reduced the grounds simply to two for denying a man his discharge.

First, if he has committed an offense punishable by indictment; and I have already shown the two offenses. The next is, if he has kept fraudulent books for the purpose of defrauding and cheating his creditors, so that they can not find out his true condition. In other words, if a bankrupt has not concealed his property from the trustee, if he has not committed perjury in the proceedings, and if he has not kept fraudulent books, he is entitled to his discharge. These are the only grounds on which a man can be denied his discharge, no matter whether he pays much or little on the dollar or does not pay a single cent. If he has not been guilty of committing those offenses, he is entitled to his discharge at all events.

Under the old bankrupt law of 1867 there were nine or ten different grounds for denying a bankrupt his discharge, and then, in addition to those, a man could not get his discharge unless he paid 50 cents on the dollar except by the consent of a majority in amount and number of his creditors. That is, fortunately, removed by this conference bill.

I venture to say that it is not possible to have a bankruptcy bill with any involuntary provisions in it more liberal than those contained in this bill. Anybody can go into voluntary bankruptcy except a corporation, anybody who owes any debts, no matter how large or how small—any man can go into voluntary bankruptcy.

In respect to involuntary bankruptcy, no farmer or wage-earner can be put into bankruptcy, no national bank or bank existing under State laws or incorporated banks, but private banks may, and then certain corporations, corporations engaged exclusively in manufacturing and mercantile pursuits, in printing and publishing, can be put into bankruptcy, but no other corporations can. Neither a farmer nor a wage-earner, neither a national bank nor a State bank, can be put into bankruptcy, and no other corporations except the ones I have indicated.

I am unwilling to take up the time of the Senate further in this matter. If, however, there are any Senators who desire to ask me any questions, I shall be glad to reply; but unless there are questions to be asked I shall not take up the time of the Senate further.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I should be glad to have the Senator supplement his very lucid and interesting statement by an explanation briefly made, as he certainly can make it, of the restrictions and limitations relative to charges, fees, and commissions in connection with this bill.

Mr. NELSON. We have made them so limited and so low compared with the old bankruptcy law that I think they ought to satisfy everybody. In the first place, I want to say I am glad the Senator interrupted me, because I had forgotten that point.

Under the old law there was a register in bankruptcy. He had a sort of monopoly and got rich out of it. He had a harvest under that law. We have, in place of the register, a referee; but the court is authorized, and it is made the duty of the court, to appoint referees in every county where there is any business to be done, so that no man gets a monopoly of the business, and the referee being practically a judge in chambers, attending to all interlocutory and default business, by these means the bankruptcy court is brought right home to a man's door in his own county.

The fees are substantially these: The referee gets a fee in every case of $10. Then, in addition to that, he gets a commission of 1 per cent on all dividends distributed. In a case of voluntary bankruptcy where there is no fund to be distributed—and there will be many of those cases—he only gets $10.

The trustees are nominated by the creditors. There may be from one to three, but if there be three the three combined can get no more fees than one would. They are entitled to a fee of $5 in each case and not to exceed 3 per cent on the first $5,000, and 2 per cent on the next $5,000, and 1 per cent on sums in excess of $10,000 distributed as dividends. These are substantially all the material provisions. In respect to the marshals and the clerks, they are the same as in other cases.

There is another provision, I might say, and that is that a poor bankrupt who has no means can get rid of paying the fees. He can go into bankruptcy and get his discharge without any fee if he makes a showing that he is a pauper or poor and unable to pay.

If there are any further questions, I shall be glad to answer them. If not, I ask that the vote may be taken on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Minnesota will turn to page 28 of the last print of the bill he will observe there:

c It shall be a complete defense to any proceedings in bankruptcy instituted under the first subdivision of this section to allege and prove that the party proceeded against was not insolvent as defined in this act at the time of the filing the petition against him, etc.

To what does that refer? What is the first subdivision of this section?

Mr. NELSON. It refers to the first ground of involuntary bankruptcy.

Mr. WHITE. That is, the limitation as to the character of the defenses enumerated in "c" only applies to No. 1, of section 3?

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no. I will call the attention of the Senator to another provision of the bill, on page 27, at the top, where the Senator will observe the words in italics:

A petition may be filed against a person who is insolvent and who has committed an act of bankruptcy.

A petition can not be filed against a man unless he is insolvent. That is made a sine qua non. That, I think, answers the Senator's question.

Mr. WHITE. I think it does.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this conference report, which has been submitted to the Senate and printed for several days, is practically a new bill. The House passed a bill, and the Senate passed a substitute for it which was an entirely different bill. The conference committee have presented us a still different bill. There has been no opportunity to examine this report as it ought to be examined, and nobody, I aver—I having read it with as much attention as I could give to it with the other duties pressing upon me here—can say what construction will be placed upon very many of the provisions of the bill.

I do not think we should pass bills in this way. I think the conference committee have taken great liberties with the bill, and that it would have been better that they should have adhered to either the Senate bill or the House bill. From what I have seen of the bill of the committee, with the defects which I think are in it, it is infinitely a better bill than the bill the House passed, and I much prefer it to the bill as passed by the House.

There are, however, so many things in the bill as now proposed that it is impossible for me to understand or to form an opinion as to what might be the construction of a court, if it should be submitted to a court, that I only desire to say that I shall record my vote against the acceptance of the conference report.

It may be that it is a better bill than I think it is, for, as I have said, I have not had time to thoroughly analyze and thoroughly consider its provisions, nor do I believe any member of the Senate has had the opportunity to do so, unless it may be the members of the committee of conference, in the brief time in which the report has been here and the manner in which it has been presented. For that reason I simply want to say that I desire to enter my vote against the adoption of the conference report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the adoption of the conference report, and the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], who is detained at home by illness in his family. Not being advised as to how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], but I will transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and vote "yea."

Mr. MALLORY (when Mr. PASCO's name was called). My colleague [Mr. PASCO] is unavoidably absent from the Senate. He is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. PLATT of New York (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY], but I am credibly informed that he would vote "yea" if here, and therefore I shall take the liberty to record my vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLAURIN], who is detained at home on account of sickness; but inasmuch as this is not a political question, I will exercise my discretion, and vote "yea."

Mr. TURLEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. I notice the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN] voted in the affirmative, and I voted in the negative. Both of our pairs are absent, and I suggest to him that we transfer our pairs and allow our votes to stand, inasmuch as we voted on different sides of this question.

Mr. SULLIVAN. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. MORRILL (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURNER], and I therefore withdraw my vote. I should vote in favor of the adoption of the conference report if he were present. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will announce the fact that my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] is paired on political questions with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY]. My colleague is unavoidably absent from the city. If he were here, he would doubtless vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted upon this question, but I have a general pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. Can the other Senator from Florida state how his colleague would vote if present?

Mr. MALLORY. I do not know. My colleague asked me to see that his pair was protected.

Mr. WILSON. Then I withdraw my vote. I can not announce how the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] would vote if present; but if I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. LINDSAY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN]; but I understand if he were present, he would vote "yea," and therefore I will let my vote stand.

Mr. BURROWS. My colleague [Mr. McMILLAN] would vote "yea" if present.

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. BACON. I have a pair with that Senator, and not knowing how he would vote, if present, I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I inquire if the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. CULLOM. I understood the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] was paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] on this question.

Mr. NELSON. That pair is only on the Hawaiian matter.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not so understand it; but if that was the understanding, and if the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is not paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], except on one question, I will ask to withdraw my vote. I have a general pair with that Senator. I want it understood, however, that I would vote for the bill if I were at liberty to vote.

Mr. BACON. I am informed by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] has stated to him that he would vote in the affirmative on this question, if present. I will therefore permit my vote, already cast in the affirmative, to stand.

Mr. CULLOM. I am now informed that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] instead of with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If no Senator has any different understanding about it, I will permit my vote to stand upon the record in favor of the adoption of the conference report.

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—43.

So the conference report was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask now to make a report from the committee of conference on the sundry civil appropriation bill, and ask that the action of the House of Representatives on the bill be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Chair will lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa if this is a final report on the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not a final report. There are four or five matters which are still in conference.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report of the committee of conference, but before concluding was interrupted by Mr. ALLISON. If this report can be printed in the RECORD and printed as a document, without further reading, I will ask that it lie over until to-morrow, and then I shall ask the Senate to take it up for consideration.

I will also ask the Senate to-morrow to take up for consideration the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The conference report has not been read, as I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. It has not been fully read.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Is it to be printed?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and printed also as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa that the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill be printed in the RECORD and printed as a document? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

The report referred to is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 17, 64, 65, 74, 75, 76, 97, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, and 224.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 15, 16, 18, 20, 93, 182, 183, 187, 230, and 271, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of said amendment strike out the word "naval;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 101: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 101, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Reimbursement of S. Bolton's Sons: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to S. Bolton's Sons the amount paid to the late collector of internal revenue for the Fourteenth district of New York in advance for internal-revenue stamps, which stamps were never delivered to said parties, $13,458.75."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 127: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 127, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of lines 1 to 29, inclusive, of said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 149: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 149, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Indian affairs: To enable the Secretary of the Interior to cause an examination and investigation to be made of outrages and injuries alleged to have been perpetrated on individual Indians belonging to the Seminole tribe by an armed mob or band of lawless persons who invaded the Seminole country during the months of December, 1897, and January, 1898, and if upon such examination and investigation, it shall appear that outrages and injuries have been so perpetrated, and that the United States is under treaty obligations to pay for such outrages and injuries, he shall ascertain the amount which should be properly paid said Indian or Indians, or their legal heirs or representatives, and pay such sum or sums as he may deem just and reasonable, and for such purpose a sum not exceeding $30,000 is hereby appropriated."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 180: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 180, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$35,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 247: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 247, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"Paris Exposition: The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a commissioner-general to represent the United States at the exposition to be held in Paris, France, commencing April 15 and closing November 5, 1900, and, under the general direction of the President, to make all needful rules and regulations in reference to the contributions from the United States, subject to the approval of the President, and to control the expenditures incident to and necessary for the proper installation and exhibit thereof; and the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall also appoint an assistant commissioner-general, who shall assist and act under the direction of the commissioner-general, and shall perform the duties of the commissioner-general in case of his death, disability, or temporary absence; and a secretary, who shall act as disbursing agent and shall perform such duties as may be assigned to him by the commissioner-general, shall render his accounts quarterly to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, and shall give bond in such sum as the Secretary of the Treasury may require.

"The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall also appoint twelve commissioners, who shall be subject to the direction and control of the commissioner-general and perform from time to time such service as he shall require. The commissioner-general shall employ such number of experts as may be needed, having special attainments in regard to the subjects of the group or groups in said exposition to which they may be assigned, respectively, and he may employ from time to time such other experts as he may deem necessary in the preparation and installation of such exhibits.

"The commissioner-general shall be paid a salary of $8,000 per annum; the assistant commissioner-general a salary of $6,000 per annum; and the secretary a salary of $4,500 per annum; which said sums shall be in lieu of all personal expenses other than actual traveling expenses while engaged in exposition work; and the terms of service of the commissioner-general, assistant commissioner-general, and secretary shall not exceed three years.

"The commissioners herein provided for shall serve during the entire calendar year 1900, and they shall be paid for such service $3,000 each, which payments shall be in full for all compensation and personal and traveling expenses. The necessary expenses herein authorized, and expenses for the proper installation and care of exhibits, together with all other expenses that may be authorized by the commissioner-general incident to the participation of the United States in said exposition, are hereby limited to the sum of not exceeding $650,000, including not exceeding $55,000 for clerk hire in the United States and in Paris.

"The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to prepare suitable exhibits of agricultural products of the States and Territories of the United States, including those mentioned in groups 7, 8, and 10 of the plan of said exposition, and shall exhibit the same under the direction and control of the commissioner-general, the total expenses of the said exhibits not to exceed in the aggregate $75,000, to be paid out of the aforesaid sum of $650,000; and reports respecting such exhibits, printed in the English, French, and German languages, shall accompany such exhibits, as the commissioner-general may direct.

"All officers and employees of the Executive Departments and of the Fish Commission and of the Smithsonian Institution, in charge of or responsible for the safe-keeping of exhibits belonging to the United States, may permit such exhibits to pass out of their possession for the purpose of being transported to and from and exhibited at said exposition, as may be requested by the commissioner-general, whenever authorized to do so, respectively, by the heads of the Departments and the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries and the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution; such exhibits and articles to be returned to the said respective departments to which they belong at the close of the exposition.

"It shall be the duty of the commissioner-general to report to the President, for transmission to Congress at the beginning of each regular session, a detailed statement of the expenditures incurred hereunder during the twelve months preceding; and the commissioner-general is hereby required, within four months after the close of said exposition, to make full report of the results thereof, as herein required, which report shall be prepared and arranged with a view to concise statement and convenient reference, and when printed shall not exceed six volumes octavo, containing an average of not exceeding 1,000 pages.

"Toward the expenses herein authorized, incident to the participation of the United States in said exposition, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $300,000, to be immediately available, and to remain available until expended, of which amount the sum of $30,000 may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in the preparation of the agricultural exhibit herein provided for."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 272: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 272, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference recommend to their respective Houses that the Clerk of the House be directed, in the enrollment of the bill to omit therefrom the matter inserted by Senate amendment numbered 243, to pay the Bering Sea awards, the same having been provided for by the act approved June 15, 1898.

On amendments numbered 13, 14, 156, 221, 222, and 233 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
A. P. GORMAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. G. CANNON,
WM. A. STONE,
JOSEPH D. SAYERS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope I can have some understanding that the two conference reports to which I have referred may be disposed of to-morrow.

Mr. DAVIS. So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I am not prepared to enter into any understanding on the subject; but possibly during the day we may do so.

HOOR OF MEETING.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I desire at this time to move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. DAVIS. I second that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion before the Senate is that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not insist on meeting at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Saturday is not a good day to begin to be extraordinarily industrious. As I have understood, a class of people which none of us would like to be following always become extra industrious on Saturday. We ought not to begin to be extraordinarily industrious in the latter part of the week.

Mr. ALLISON. There are four appropriation bills still undisposed of, which must be considered and disposed of between now and Friday next and receive the signature of the President.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We are ready to take them up.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that very well. I do not wish to interfere with the regular order of business, but desire that time may be given out of the hours we shall have between now and next Friday to consider these appropriation bills.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Neither do I wish to interfere with the regular business; and that is the reason I am objecting to meeting at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BURROWS. Is the motion debatable?

Mr. ALLISON. It is not debatable.

Mr. DAVIS. Is the motion debatable?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BURROWS and Mr. DAVIS. Regular order!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair supposed that debate was proceeding by common consent. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa, that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

ANNEXATION OF THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 259) to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let it be read in full.

The Secretary proceeded to read the joint resolution.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to raise a parliamentary inquiry. What is the status of the joint resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I simply asked to have it read.

Mr. WHITE. There was something said about reporting the joint resolution to the Senate. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY] is entitled to the floor, and the Senate knows that he did not hear what was said. I suppose there was no intention to take advantage of that fact.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Not the slightest.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Oh, no.

Mr. FAULKNER. If a Senator is on the floor when the Senate adjourns and has not completed his speech, when the matter is again laid before the Senate it is the rule always to recognize that Senator as entitled to the floor on the measure.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator if he will rise.

Mr. FAULKNER. Unfortunately the Senator from Louisiana could not hear, and he did not know the joint resolution was before the Senate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire to have the reading of the joint resolution completed.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. MCENERY. Mr. President, one question just behind the annexation of Hawaii is the conflict over labor. The situation in the Sandwich Islands in this regard seems to have been studiously ignored, as if it were something not desirable or prudent to consider; but it is there, as leprosy is there. Over thirty years ago Congress enacted a law prohibiting the importation of "coolies" from China, Japan, or any other oriental country, to be sold, disposed of, transferred, or held to service. (Revised Statutes, section 2158.)

In 1875 the law was made stronger. (Supplement to Revised Statutes, page 86.)

The statutes were not broad enough to reach other labor, and thereupon Congress in 1885 enacted a law making it unlawful to prepay the transportation, or in any way assist or encourage the importation of any alien under "contract" or agreement, parol or special, express or implied, to perform labor or service in the United States. (See supplement, supra, page 479.) Nor is it lawful to promise employment through advertisements, and all inhibited labor coming here is to be at once sent back. (Supplement, supra, pages 541, 633, 935.)

While such labor is prohibited, it is nevertheless proposed by "annexation" to incorporate it into or attach it to our system by annexation.

Of the 14,439 laborers on Hawaiian plantations in 1885, only 2,136 were natives, the remainder (12,303) was imported or "contract" labor, and the latter was of the poor and ignorant classes. The Portuguese especially, as a rule, could not read or write. (See House Executive Document 1, part 1, page 573, Fifty-third Congress, third session.) It was and is as nearly slave labor as it is possible to make it without having absolute ownership in man. Let us see from the evidence of those in Hawaii if this is not true.

Q. Suppose a "contract" laborer is idling in the field, what do you do?
A. We dock him. We give him one, one-half, or three-quarters of a day, and if he keeps it up we resort to the law and have him arrested for refusing to work.

Q. What do you accomplish by putting him in jail?
A. For the first offense he is ordered back to work, and he has to (eventually) pay the cost of court! If he refuses to obey orders, he is arrested again and a light fine is inflicted, which the planter can pay and take it out of his pay, or else he is put on the road to work. For the third offense he is likely to get three months' imprisonment! (Same document, pages 710, 740, 1000.)

So that we have here in "annexation" a system of Southern slavery, overseer and all, with the ball and chain or the jail substituted for the lash!

A recent report from the Hawaiian Sugar Planters' Association, sent to our State Department, states that the "contracts" of 2,017 persons in the islands will expire next year, and the number wanted will be 4,273, or an increase of 100 per cent! It becomes very evident that the sugar planters in the islands have no idea of giving up their "contract" labor system.

A San Francisco dispatch last January said:

The Japanese are pouring laborers into the island by the ship load, and they will certainly continue to do so as long as they can.

And yet, when the Dole Government supposed this "labor" matter would be a serious impediment to annexation, the attempt was made to arbitrarily shut out Japanese labor in Honolulu, and to rear upon that alleged fear of Japan. And yet this is all their own handiwork. "Contract" labor did not come to Hawaii voluntarily. It has been and is being brought there by special and liberal appropriation. Between 1874 and 1880 the sum of $1,181,320 was appropriated by the Hawaiian Legislature, at the instance of the Hawaiian "sugar trust," to obtain this "contract" labor. (Same document supra, pages 757, 997, 1139.)

And President Dole has said:

I have a belief that the United States will give us a separate law, so that we can get laborers here. (Same document, pages 973-974.)

On what he based that idea I do not know, but I do know that in the message of the President we find this:

What the conditions of such a union shall be, the political relation thereof to the United States, the character of the local administration, the quality and degree of the elective franchise of the inhabitants, the extension of the Federal laws to the territory, or the enactment of special laws to fit the peculiar condition thereof, the regulation, if need be, of the labor system therein, are all matters which the treaty has wisely relegated to Congress.

Once attach or annex the Hawaiian sugar planters' domain and will it not be said, "Now we are a part and parcel of you; our sugar industry has become a domestic industry by and through annexation; we can not successfully carry it on without cheap labor. You are protectionists, and you took from disaster?"

Only a few months ago Treasury Department to make the most of its active efforts to discover a few foreign laborers. The report was as follows:

The forty-eight Austrian stove cutters recently arrived in Mississippi for violation of the immigration laws in under contract to perform manual labor will be deported to Baltimore to-morrow.

And yet Congress proposes to "annex" over a thousand in Hawaii!

It became quite apparent that the annexation out encouragement to the sugar planters that to evade our "contract-labor" laws. Article "treaty" simply prohibits the entry into Hawaii of Chinese, but even to that there is a string. They may come "upon such conditions as are after be allowed by our laws!" This evidence of change of our laws prohibiting the Chinese.

An effort has been made to show that Japan "contract" labor into the islands. I have seen that has long been expending large sums to obtain and to protect it. Minister Toru Hoshi, of Japan.

An emigration law has been enacted, carefully framed to prevent him from going to countries where welcome. Japanese emigration to Hawaii involves conditions: That emigration was instituted upon the solicited the strictly guarded stipulations of a special treaty. The independence of Hawaii has never been endangered that treaty. On the contrary, Japanese immigration was encouraged in the islands until political contingency policy advisable. Japan did not seek the treaty, but induced to resort to Hawaii under the guarantees it provided.

The experience in our own history, with a possessed by our own people, with all the virtues, is that when they are confronted by conditions how deplorable, which affect the laboring population Saxon intellect and energy, in spite of its character, use it for its own purpose and for its own cupid war, when the multitude of slaves in the Southern National Government pretended to hold out its lift them up to a higher plane of intelligence civilization, we know that their condition was the protection of the Government through the Agency, and every negro who refused to carry out tracts made by that bureau was bucked and g by his fingers until he assented to carry out by the agent of the Freedmen's Bureau.

This is not a mere assertion of mine. It is history of the country and in the reports of committees of Congress. That occurred at our under the shadow of this Capitol. What would men go a distance of 2,000 miles from our islands to continue the contract system. It will be the accumulation of wealth and of power and the of the people, the injurious effects will reach the laborer will become but a minion, the slave of the

The Secretary read as follows:

[Article from the Cosmopolitan of March, 1898, on the the Hawaiian Islands.]

SHALL WE ANNEX LEPROSY?

By a Hawaiian Government school-teacher.

In the Hawaiian Islands one is never far removed from the Government, and the applicants for office are known persons foreign residents; hence affairs of state assume a personal character; the personal matters of citizens often become strange chinery of the Government.

Under such circumstances it naturally follows that to detract from the financial prosperity of the island foreign residents.

On the subject of leprosy I find the people extremely nearly all foreigners seem to have entered into a tacit agreement unless it becomes necessary and to dismiss it by a dispatch when it is introduced to their notice.

The subject is closely guarded by resident physicians. The island publications seldom mention it; made to it by them, it is of a vague and noncommittal give one a distinct idea of the true state of affairs. I made here by the people and press to prevent strange the fact that leprosy is a common thing on the island.

Tourists coming here for a short time can form no permanency, even though they come for the special purpose for the officials will see to it that no one gives information interests are identical with those of the islands.

Perhaps no one else has so many opportunities of observing the real state of affairs as the Government school-teacher.

As we neared the islands, on our way from California, we ran quite near the north coast of Molokai (Mō-lō-kī) (land of cliffs), and had a clear view of the peninsula and town of Kalanapapa, the latter being the largest leper settlement. The coast is very precipitous. Its walls of rock rise perpendicularly from the sea to a height varying from 1,000 to 3,000 feet in extreme grandeur and picturesque, and are slashed by immense ravines whose broad mouths form natural lawns down to the very sea waves.

On one of these green spaces, which extends about a mile along the shore, stand the whitewashed cottages and grass huts of the lepers. On either side the perpendicular "palis" rise gray and stern. Before them the blue Pacific stretches away unbroken for 2,000 miles, and behind them the mountains tower aloft to meet the clouds in indescribable, irregular, jagged peaks. Their form speaks at once of a violent and fiery origin, though they are now mostly clothed in robes of perpetual green.

In their savage roughness they serve as impassable guards on the south side of Kalanapapa, the only access to the peninsula being by the sea and by a slender path cut along the face of a cliff, so narrow and difficult that cattle can not be driven down it, and the settlement depends upon schooners for its supply of fresh meat.

In 1885 the Hawaiian Government chose this isolated spot for the centralization and segregation of leprosy. Hundreds of lepers were at that time scattered up and down the islands, living in the most intimate relations with their friends, who seemed perfectly unaware of or indifferent to the danger of infection. But laws were passed for their apprehension, and it became the painful duty of the marshal and board of health to make repeated voyages around the island and collect the victims.

The woes of those who were taken, the dismay of those who were left, and the agonizing partings, when friends and relatives clung to the swollen limbs and kissed the glistening, bloated faces of those who were exiled from them forever, formed a scene which, once witnessed, was never to be forgotten; and yet it is still a common one on the islands.

None ever returns from that home of hideous disease and slow-coming death. It is a community of doomed beings, socially dead, "whose only business is to perish;" beings who "have no more a portion in anything that is done under the sun;" condemned to watch the repulsive steps by which their fellows go down to a loathsome death, knowing that they, too, must pass by the same way.

We felt relieved when we had passed the settlement, though it looked harmless and peaceful enough in the distance, bathed as it was by the friendly sunshine and washed by the lazy waves.

Near Honolulu a temporary home for lepers has been established. To this place they are sent from the various islands of the group, and from there they are sent to Molokai, thus preventing the making of mistakes by unskilled physicians in the outlying districts. No one is permitted to visit this institution except by permission of the board of health, which is seldom granted.

I felt much interest in the subject and made many fruitless endeavors to learn the facts of the situation while I was in Honolulu, but no one had anything to say about leprosy, and all appeared so indifferent that I finally became so too.

Before leaving Honolulu I was advised by a friend to take my own bed linen and towels on the Kīkau (the interisland steamer), no definite reason being given except that natives often used its staterooms.

In the various outlying districts I found that foreigners live entirely apart from the natives. The Hawaiians are not fitted, morally or intellectually, for social intercourse with the respectable foreigners here. They have their own churches, with native pastors, and there are sixty-four native schools on the islands, with Hawaiian teachers only, who teach the Hawaiian language. It is impossible in many localities to secure foreign teachers, as there is no place for them to board except among the natives.

My native assistant teacher is considered a model for a Hawaiian woman, and yet she is scarcely more than half civilized. She has little opportunity of becoming familiar with the ways of well-ordered homes; consequently knows little of them. She knows nothing of cooking except to roast fish in the ground and boil beef over hot stones. She sits crosslegged on a mat to take her meals, and eats poi with her fingers from a calabash which is common to the whole family. She has absolutely no knowledge of books aside from text-books, and reading, writing, and a very little arithmetic are all she has gained from them.

Hawaiian women are not employed as house servants. Few families care to have one of them about their homes. So the Hawaiian people are cast out from all intimate relations with the respectable foreign population here, and, with a very few exceptions, have almost no opportunity of improvement except through the efforts of their foreign teachers, and the teachers work with them at the school buildings only.

When I expressed a desire to see and know more of the people in their homes, I was met by a polite stare and told that it would not be safe to visit some of their dwellings.

On visiting the schools I found the teachers wearing gloves in the school-room, and using various precautions against contact with the children. I found by degrees that neither their moral nor intellectual deficiencies served to bar this people from foreign society as did their physical foulness. Rumors of leprosy reached me more and more frequently and clearly. I found the teachers of the Government schools to be less reticent than other foreigners, as they have little financial interest in the islands, and are often here for but a short time.

Before the new administration, the laws for the segregation of lepers were much what they are at the present time, but so large a majority of the sheriffs and officers were natives that it was found to be impossible for the government physician to apprehend the lepers until they were too bad to be removed.

The native officials would warn them in time that they might be concealed. The lepers generally roamed about at will, afraid of the physician only. One met them in the highways and in the stores. No effort was made by the officials to secure them, but after the revolution of 1887 the present government physician was appointed, together with white sheriffs, and the work of segregation began in earnest.

The lepers of the district now became alarmed. Many of them fled to the mountains. Twenty-five formed a company and took up their abode in an isolated valley between some great palis. The spot faces the sea, and is almost totally inaccessible by any other route. The government physician allowed them to remain in this retreat until he found that they were coming out at various times to visit friends, and that they were making "awe" (their native intoxicating drink) for sale. This determined the physicians to make an effort toward securing them. Accordingly the plans were all laid to go by sea at night with a force of officers and secure them all. A native heard the sheriff read the names to the doctor, and at once discerned their intention. He stole a horse the same night, rode as far as possible, and scrambled the remainder of the way over those awful palis to inform his friends of their peril.

When the officers reached the valley they found the lepers' huts empty, with every evidence of a precipitate flight. The poor hunted lepers had not remained to secure even their most valued possessions. They have all been killed or taken since. God help them!

Some in our district who were known to be lepers remained in their homes and, by the timely intervention of friends, managed to elude the sheriff.

One wealthy Hawaiian woman, who lived in the house which adjoins my present dwelling, remained here for more than a year, in spite of the efforts of the physician to secure her, during which time she kept the disease in check by the assistance of the native healers, who sucked the poisonous blood from the leprous spots. One of her relatives was finally bribed to betray her.

The natives hide their friends in cane fields, caves, and gulches, or under mats in their own homes. Some have been discovered when their limbs were gone and only a bloated head and trunk remained. Such a case as this is at present only a short distance from me.

But, in the face of all this misery, nothing can be done to arouse fear of contagion among the natives. They will smoke the pipe of a leper, eat poi from his calabash, sleep in his bed, any wear his clothes. They become neither disgusted with his distorted and swollen features nor afraid of becoming infected with the disease. They seem perfectly indifferent as to the risk of contagion.

Although the Hawaiians' family ties are strangely weak, their gregarious or social instincts are exceedingly strong, and they herd together in a manner most repulsive to foreigners. This trait of character greatly aids the spread of leprosy. It has been disseminated by vaccination also and by the aid of flies and mosquitoes; but the exceeding immorality of the people has done more toward perpetuating this disease than any other cause.

Considering the number still at large and the 1,400 on Molokai, I estimate that about 5 per cent of all the inhabitants of these islands are lepers.

The schools are examined twice a year by a Government physician, and each child who is not infected by any contagious disease receives a health certificate.

I had one odd little boy in my room. He had a peculiar complexion generally, but was as bright as is usual with these Hawaiian children. He had a dark, slightly protruding mark on his chin, which I took to be a birthmark. When he had been in school a few weeks he had his arm broken on the playground. After school I went to his parents and found the arm unset and uncared for. They refused to have a physician. Such actions are characteristic of the natives. They preferred the weird incantations of kahunas (a law has been passed against their practicing) to anything more scientific.

I called an intelligent-looking native in from the road as he was passing, and with his help as an interpreter, I insisted on their sending for a physician, but nothing I could say would prevail upon them to do so. I visited them frequently, sitting in their house and handling the boy's hand and arm, with no suspicion that he was a leper. Yet such he was—hence their aversion to having the physician see him.

I noticed a white scar on one side of his nose, as if the skin had become dry and dead. The old crone with whom he lived tried to explain it to me, but I understood only a word now and then of her language.

The boy returned to school wearing a pair of long trousers, so uncommon an occurrence with these children as to attract my attention at once. One day as he sat in school his limb became exposed and I observed some ugly dark-brown spots upon it. The largest of them was nearly the size of a silver dollar. They looked like blood blisters somewhat, or like the top of a dark-brown mushroom; the skin appeared very thick and wrinkled. I thought he must suffer with such horrid-looking sores, but as nearly every child in school is afflicted with cutaneous eruptions of some sort, I did not yet think of leprosy.

As I watched him he drew up his limb and began squeezing and pressing the spots in an absent, careless manner. In answer to my questions he said that the spots were not sore, that they did not give him any pain; but he was disturbed and began to explain that the spot on his chin was done by a fall. I had stood over that child for weeks, guiding his hand in his first efforts to write, and yet I now felt an instinctive horror of touching him. I touched the spots with the end of my pointer and soon found them to be insensible and lifeless. I decided that unless the physician came the following day I should dismiss the boy from school.

While I was examining him, the tears rolled down his cheeks. He is but 6 years old, and yet seemed to understand fully the consequences of being discovered.

The physician came the next morning, but our patient did not make his appearance. The doctor feared that the child had been concealed, as he stated, that was a suspected family, the mother having died shortly before in that house of leprosy.

No warning had been given me, no instruction as to detecting disease if it appeared in that boy or in any other of the children.

Our Portuguese truant officer soon returned accompanied by the boy, his father (a stalwart Hawaiian in his prime), and his aged grandmother. The child had one limb bandaged, and what was my horror when the bandages were removed to find that the natives had gouged a great piece of flesh from his limb. They said they did it with a piece of glass, and that they would remove the other spots in like manner that evening.

They evidently think there is some virtue in the glass and that the doctor will deem a cure made if the spots are removed. The doctor said that it probably gave the child very little pain, as the flesh about a leprous spot is devoid of feeling almost entirely. One of the surest means of ascertaining the presence of the disease is to thrust a needle into the flesh. No pain will result if the disease is leprosy.

On glancing at the child, the doctor said, "He is in for it," and then I knew that it was leprosy. I felt faint and giddy; not so much from the sight of the horrid wounds or fear of personal injury as from the knowledge that I stood face to face with that most terrible of human ills. None of us mentioned the word. We said "it" and "that," but never "leprosy."

The child was almost a baby, and I pictured him leaving his home and friends to be lost amid the sighs and groans of Molokai. No mother to soothe his path to the awful death before him! I thought of it all in a moment, and my strength deserted me. The child's father lay prone upon the ground wailing dismally, while his aged grandmother clasped her knees and added her shrill voice to the same despairing cry.

After years of experience in the midst of leprosy this physician could only say that it is a strange disease. The father of this boy remained with his wife until her death and is apparently untainted still, while a half-caste woman here was married to three foreigners, each of whom went to Molokai. After each case she was examined for signs of the disease, but, none appearing, she went free until suddenly it appeared in its most malignant form, and she soon died. Thus it seems that all do not appear to be leprous who are lepers, nor do all who appear to be lepers prove to be so. The Hawaiian blood is very bad. The natives suffer from a great variety of diseases, some of them so nearly resembling leprosy as to be mistaken for it by the most experienced physician.

Some eminent scientists in Honolulu have been experimenting. They tried the virus on a man who was condemned to be hanged, and he was sent to Molokai as a leper.

A physician of large experience informed me that there is scarcely a city in the United States without some lepers, and that he has reason to believe that these islands contribute a majority of them all.

When a case of leprosy develops among the foreigners, it causes a short-lived stir, or is more often secretly sent to the States; but so long as it is confined to the natives—well, "It is only a native. He will be as well off on Molokai, where he will probably meet friends." He will scarcely have a second thought from the foreigners; but what must he feel who knows that the curse is laid upon him or his loved ones?

People in general think of leprosy as something vague and far away. They have read of it in the Scriptures or elsewhere, but they scarcely comprehend that it is an awful reality to-day. Even here, surrounded by it as we are and witnessing the misery it causes, we seldom think of fearing personal injury. It is not strange that people lose their fear of leprosy. Do not thousands of Americans degrade themselves and their families and die miserably every year from the effect of alcohol? And yet if you should warn a man to beware of it, and point to thousands of ruined lives to prove the justness of your warning, nine times out of ten you would be laughed at for your pains.

On Molokai the 1,400 lepers compose a regularly organized community. They have a court with a leprosy judge, a store with a leper keeper, leper officials, hospitals with many leper nurses (some of them are not), a school with a leper teacher, and a church with a leper pastor.

Their marriage laws are much like those of other communities, and there are forty children among them who have leprosy parents, yet show no signs of the dread disease themselves.

Mr. MCENERY. The colonial policy which I believe it is the intention of this Government to pursue will be disastrous to the farming interests of this country, upon which the whole prosperity of the country depends. It is proposed to depart from the traditional policy of this Government. I am not so committed to that policy that if in my opinion the interests and welfare of the country depended upon a departure from that policy inaugurated by Washington, by Jefferson, by Adams, or by any other of the great statesmen of this country, I would unhesitatingly give my assent to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 3698) for the restoration of annuities to the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of House joint resolution 259.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Can we not arrange it so that this action will not have to be taken every day and yet have Senate bill 3698 placed upon the Calendar as the unfinished business when this debate is over?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To be resumed as the unfinished business when the pending debate is closed?

Mr. DAVIS. I shall be perfectly willing to have such an understanding.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Of course I should be glad to have the bill considered before that time if it could be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the unfinished business being temporarily laid aside, to take its place again on the Calendar when the debate on House joint resolution 259 is over? If there is no objection, that order will be made.

Mr. PETTIGREW. With the understanding also that if opportunity should offer in the course of this debate, I shall undertake to get up the bill. This action is taken merely to save the trouble of having the bill laid before the Senate each day at 2 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will take its place on the Calendar as unfinished business when the joint resolution is disposed of.

Mr. MCENERY. Mr. President, I see no necessity for a policy to be inaugurated now different from that inaugurated by the fathers of the country. There are no conditions now existing which did not with equal force then exist which made home rule and home government the essential features of American republicanism. But we propose to follow the policy of Europe which has been in existence for four hundred years. We propose to inaugurate a military spirit and a military caste which will absorb all domestic questions and bring this country virtually under a military rule and military despotism.

In the first place, this colonial system will be expensive. Señor Sagasta, the premier of Spain, in an interview published a few days ago, said:

Our colonies have cost us dear. Within the last twenty-five years we have spent in them 3,000,000,000 francs in defensive works. Only the most important cities and points have been fortified, as we could not erect works everywhere. The cost would have been 7,000,000,000 or 8,000,000,000 francs.

Germany, also, finds colonies to be expensive. Her experience in this respect was recently stated in the Boersen Courier, of Berlin, as follows:

A heavy burden has been laid upon Germany by her colonial policy. About 11,000,000 marks is spent annually in this connection, and a further expenditure may be looked for in the future. The revenue derived from the colonies in no way offsets this expenditure.

The colonial system of this Government will cost far in excess of that of any other government. It will require us to have a navy that will cost us an enormous sum of money, reaching up to millions of dollars. It will require us to have a standing army constantly in readiness of not less than half a million men, and when you add to these the fortifications and necessary expense attending a colonial system, you can readily imagine what a burden it will be upon the taxpayers of this country.

But this system will immediately have one effect, and that will be to destroy one of the most promising industries of this country. Sugar produced by cheap labor and produced from sugar-producing countries can be brought to this country and sold at less than 8 cents a pound. When that is done, you stop 700 costly sugarhouses in the State of Louisiana; you stop a large number in the State of Texas, and some in Florida. You immediately destroy the beet-sugar industry in the West, which now promises to make rich between twenty and thirty States of this Union.

Suppose that the effect of the annexation of Hawaii would stop the spindles of 700 factories in New England, is there a New England Senator here who would favor it? Suppose the effect of the annexation would be to stop the manufacture of shoes in Massachusetts, is there a New England Senator who would advocate the destruction of such an industry as that? But I am speaking now of the effect of annexation—a disastrous one—which is as sure to come as the sun is to rise. We know the amount of importation from the sugar-producing countries, and it is but a simple calculation to find out how much it costs to bring sugars into this country and how much it costs to produce sugar here.

Why, then, destroy a promising industry in over twenty States of this Union? Why destroy what they have already gained, and then shut up forever 700 sugar houses in the State of Louisiana, houses that cost from $125,000 to $250,000 each? Under the recent tariff bill this industry has been greatly advanced in the West. Beet-sugar factories are already multiplying, and beet culture has vastly increased. There is going up now in California the largest beet-sugar factory in the world, and it is a fact that in less than five years the cane-sugar industry in Louisiana will be increased over double what it is at the present time.

When the revenue bill was before this honorable body, there were objections made to its provisions on various grounds, and one of the most prominent which was urged by Democratic Senators was the opportunities that were offered for the adding to the already overwhelming wealth of the rich corporations of this country. That involved only the issue of $500,000,000 in bonds, a small and insignificant amount compared to the vast sum of money, almost beyond calculation, that will be required not only to carry on this war, not only that which will follow the annexation of Hawaii, but which will follow our course in our process of colonization all along the line. Cuba, Puerto Rico, the Philippines, the Canaries, and there is no telling what territory may be within our grasp after we have made these acquisitions.

It was said that opportunities were given the bondholders and the rich corporations to enter into trusts and combinations to control the object and purposes of the Government by the issue of $500,000,000 of bonds, and that there was danger to the liberties of the people and a threatened subversion of the liberties of the people. If such be the fact, what will be the consequences of issuing bonds to meet all the expense of a colonial system? No taxation can reach it; it will have to be met by issuing bonds. I want to know of Senators, if that was the reason why they interposed an objection to what seemed to be an absolute necessity for the object and purposes of carrying on this war, what reason they have, then, for voting for the pending resolution, which will eventually lead to the consummation of a colonial policy that will cost this Government billions upon billions of money for which bonds will have to be perpetually issued?

Then there is another very serious objection. It may be sectional to urge it, but its effects will be injurious upon every industry of the South. We have been laboring there under disadvantages. We have been, however, making a strenuous effort in the way of progress. It was at first slow, but our steps have been gradually accelerated until we have approached the sealed springs of her prosperity. They have just been touched and her wealth revealed and she stands now in the gray dawn, and I hope that no Southern statesman will interpose an obstacle so as to obscure the sun of her coming splendor. Emigration has just commenced to go within our borders.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, I suggest the want of a quorum. The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANTLE in the chair). The lack of a quorum being suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Bacon,	Faulkner,	McBride,	Rawlins,
Bate,	Foraker,	McEnery,	Reach,
Burrows,	Frye,	Mallory,	Shoup,
Cannon,	Gallinger,	Mantle,	Stewart,
Carter,	Gear,	Money,	Teller,
Chilton,	Hanna,	Morrill,	Tillman,
Clark,	Hansbrough,	Pasco,	Turley,
Clay,	Harris,	Penrose,	Warren,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Perkins,	White,
Cullom,	Helfield,	Pettus,	Wilson,
Daniel,	Hoar,	Platt, Conn.	Wolcott,
Davis,	Kyle,	Platt, N. Y.
Eikins,	Lindsay,	Pritchard,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. McENERY. Mr. President, Northern capital, Northern energy, and Northern brains have in recent years been going into the South cultivating the waste places, building factories, school-houses, and churches; and at no distant day that section of the country will be teeming with wealth and with population. Already in Louisiana, within a very short period, 6,000 stalwart Western men have gone into the western borders of that State and have made the prairies bloom with verdure.

They have built cities, towns, villages; they have built canals, churches, mills, to that extent that a citizen from Iowa going through that community would see Northern architecture, evidences of Northern skill and energy all mingling with the soft sunshine, the sweet zephyrs, and the bright flowers of that favored climate. All this will cease the moment we commence a colonial policy. That population which is going within the limits of the South will be diverted. It is the characteristic of our people to go into new fields and to seek new ventures. The capital which has been adding to the wealth of that section will be diverted, enterprise will cease; and I say now that if a colonial policy is adopted every mill in the South will stop; there will not be a cotton factory within her borders.

Why do I say that? If I have been rightly informed, their market is a domestic one, principally within the limits of the United States. I base my assertion upon the proceedings of a meeting of cotton-mill men which I saw published in Boston in 1884. In that convention of manufacturers of cotton they discussed the question how to reach the West and compete with the cotton goods sent from the State of Georgia. They said it could only be done by cheapening freights on these cotton goods; that by reason of the climate, economy of clothing, cheapness of labor, and the length of the hours of labor the Georgia goods could be manufactured more cheaply than the same goods could be manufactured in New England. Consequently they had to devise some system of cheaper freights, so as to meet the Georgia goods in the West.

What would be the effect of annexation? No Southern goods are going to seek foreign markets. In the first place, we have no ships sailing from our Southern ports in which to send them to the East. New England will find sale for her manufactured goods there, the demand will be largely increased, the profits will be enhanced, and they will be placed in a position to go into the West and drive out the goods that are manufactured in North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia. That is my apprehension, and I do not believe it rests on baseless ground.

If we had confined our policy exclusively to the annexation of Hawaii, if we had prosecuted this war as we at first declared that we would do, truly in the interest of humanity and the freedom of the Cuban people, our fears would not be so great.

What I have stated might seem to be an exaggeration, but it is a fact, I think, beyond dispute; and our military operations prove it that we propose to take in all of the Spanish possessions in the West Indies, and in the Atlantic and in the Pacific, and even beyond these, as demands have already been made that we shall go to China and share in the distribution of that empire.

Mr. President, I think that this acquisition of territory will place in the hands of the Federal Executive and in the party in control of the Government such power that it means an indefinite prolongation of the rule of the Republican party. In my opinion, although unknowingly, every Democrat who votes for the annexation of Hawaii, and the approval thereby of a colonial policy, at once surrenders the organization of the Democratic party and commits its fate to the great uncertainties of the future.

What becomes of the silver question? I am one of those Democrats who believe that no prosperity will ever again be witnessed in this country of such degree and intensity as existed prior to 1873 until the act of 1873 demonetizing silver be repealed. What becomes of that issue? With the acquisition of new territory, which will keep the Republican party continually in power, with alliances made with people who are committed to the gold standard, that issue will become only a recollection; and even if the Democratic party survives this great onward march to imperialism, it will not bring with its resurrection any bimetallic policy, nor shall we ever hear again of the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1.

Mr. President, it was stated by the premier of England, speaking in the selfish interests of Great Britain, that an alliance with the United States would become a necessity on the part of Great Britain because of her complications with other European nations. That met with a response in this country, and the appeal of the premier was taken up from one end of the land to the other. The only sound that broke the acclaim was that which came from Irish voices denouncing any alliance with England as infamy. But it is bound to come if we get into any foreign complications, which we necessarily shall do in case we acquire foreign territory. It will be unavoidable. France, Germany, Austria, all have their community of interest. Political interest will drive Russia into it. Her interests will be adverse to ours. Conflict may come, and we shall be antagonized by those great Empires, and our only hope and our only refuge will be in seeking an alliance with our kinspeople beyond the sea.

What, then, becomes of the bimetallic policy? What becomes of the cry of 16 to 1? It will be heard only in that dark abyss, in that gloom which will overhang this country, as a dirge, a moan, a weeping for the loss of the liberties of the people and for the destroyed prosperity of the nation.

I do not believe that the Republican party wants to see the death and destruction of the Democratic party. I believe they would rather see it survive and by its opposition discipline into a healthy organization their own party.

I regret to know that Democrats are in favor of this colonial policy; and when I shall hear the call of the roll and Democrats answer to their names and their votes given in favor of this colonial policy, I shall feel that I am standing at the funeral of the party and hear only a last farewell given as the clods sound upon its coffin.

Mr. President, it has been urged that the annexation of Hawaii becomes a military necessity. When annexation was at first proposed under treaty, when it was proposed that we annex that Republic as a sovereign community, an amendment was offered that it might come in as a Territory. Then was revealed the whole weakness of the annexation scheme. The whole case was given up. There was no longer a commercial necessity, there was no longer a necessity for a political union in accordance with the declaration in the constitution of that Republic.

I am no military man, but I do not think that the future political policy of this country in its dealing with home relations and with a foreign people should be controlled or governed by the testimony of military experts. They are dangerous intermeddlers in a republic under all circumstances. They become doubly so when it is to their interest to largely increase the military establishment of the country. But it requires no military expert to see the absolute fallacy of any such theory as is here proposed. What would be thought of a general whose army occupied a certain line of defense, behind intrenchments, who would throw a redoubt in his front far beyond the reach of his artillery, so that an enemy could come between him and his line? Such a man would be dismissed from his command; he would be regarded as an imbecile.

Here is the line of our Pacific coast; away off 2,100 miles is an island, and it is said that we must fortify that island in order to protect our Pacific coast, thus giving opportunity for an enemy to come within a thousand miles between us and that military post. It would require us to keep an immense army, extensive fortifications, and a large navy to protect it. Even then the fortifications and fleets could be avoided in the limitless ocean and an enemy could reach our undefended coast long before a war vessel could come from Hawaii. After all, it becomes only necessary as a coaling station; and that is the only valuable part of the island.

On the 10th of May last, before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, General Schofield said, referring to his report on Pearl Harbor to Secretary Belknap in 1873:

Q. You thought it was wise to get the harbor because that was about the only thing valuable to us?

A. The only thing essential to us.

Q. You are still of the opinion that that harbor is the only thing essential to us?

A. From a military standpoint.

The only thing that is essential to us after all is Pearl Harbor. We have got that, and what more do we want? Make a coaling station there and it will be just as accessible as the harbor of Honolulu. It will require no greater amount of money to fortify it; no greater number of troops to protect it. We need not, then, venture upon the experiment of building a navy under the theory of these military men, for it would require the surrounding of this island with ships and at the same time the erection of fortifications on our coast with a line of ships defending it.

It can not be made a point for the anchorage of vessels so that they can start from that point and assail the enemy at any point in the Pacific, for we know that the ocean is limitless. A fleet or a single ship can evade an enemy for an indefinite period of time. The Alabama for three years eluded the vigilance of hundreds of Federal vessels, and we never could locate the Spanish fleet until it went within one of its own harbors. As a coaling station, then, it would be absolutely useless and valueless. Upon that point I will send to the desk and have read an extract as a part of my remarks.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE MILITARY ARGUMENT FOR HAWAII.

It may be justly said that the case for the annexation of Hawaii derives its strength chiefly from what is known as the military argument. Experts in the science of war, the foremost of whom is Captain Mahan, have declared that the possession of these islands and their fortification by the United States would very materially aid in the defense of our Pacific coast line in case of war, and that, for this reason, they should be classed strategically with Bermuda on our Atlantic side, which we do not possess, yet which it would be highly desirable for us to control. The Republican, although opposed to annexation, taking everything into consideration, is ready to do justice to this argument in the current discussion because nothing is gained in the end for any cause by misrepresenting or ignoring what may have force in the arguments of the opposition. Let us, therefore, consider the military argument in a spirit of the utmost candor and then judge whether it possesses sufficient weight to overcome the many objections to be urged against the annexation policy.

If anyone will examine a map of the Pacific Ocean, he will see that, although Hawaii is 2,089 miles from San Francisco, it is 3,300 miles from Japan, 4,917 miles from Hongkong, about 4,000 miles from Sydney, Australia, 2,230 miles from Samoa, 4,210 miles from the site of the proposed Nicaragua Canal, and over 6,300 miles from Cape Horn. Hawaii, then, is nearer to San Francisco than to any other strategic point of importance bordering on the great Pacific Ocean. And it follows that by so much it is of more consequence to us than to any other great power what nation may control the Hawaiian group. To be sure, Hawaii is 2,000 miles away from our coast line, but that fact matters little in a military sense. If we are to estimate the military importance of the islands, we must consider them in their relations to other continents and nations besides our own. Viewed in a relative sense, therefore, Hawaii from a military standpoint is more American than anything else.

The military argument then proceeds to point out that modern navies depend upon coal for their motive power, from which it follows that the radius of steaming by any war ship is limited. The coal is consumed and then the vessel must fall back upon some base to renew its supply. Now, Hawaii is so situated in the Pacific Ocean that were it sunk in the sea any navy attempting to operate against our Pacific coast, except that of Great Britain, would be thrown back several thousand miles more, or considerably beyond a steaming radius easily maintained, in order to replenish the coal bunkers of its vessels.

This embarrassment in securing coal for a belligerent—for be it remembered that coal is contraband of war and can not be secured in neutral ports—would render it exceedingly difficult for any power save Great Britain to harass the Pacific coast line. No sooner had a German or Japanese or French war ship reached our 8-mile limit than it would be short of coal and then it would be necessary to find a fresh supply. The maintenance of a fleet of coalers to feed the fleet would necessitate the steaming of enormous distances by the coalers and little would be gained in that way.

If, now, instead of being sunk in the sea, Hawaii were sealed up as a coal supply station to the possible antagonists of the United States in war, the same results would follow. And so the military argument clinches its point by claiming that the Hawaiian group should be brought under the control of the United States and so fortified as to prevent their use as a base by any other power. It is not a conclusive answer to say that the possession of Hawaii would weaken us because it would invite attack, since we should prefer that the enemy attack Hawaii rather than San Francisco.

According to the military argument the possession and fortification of Hawaii would throw back an enemy's assault 2,000 miles in the first instance; it would be equivalent to establishing a fresh line of defense for San Francisco 2,000 miles away. An enemy would find Hawaii fortified, and it would not be captured except after a long struggle. If finally the place fell, our Pacific coast would still be as fresh and strong as ever, because it would represent the second line of defense, whereas under present conditions, with unprotected Hawaii likely to be made a base by any nation at war with us, the enemy's attack would be made immediately upon that coast. Hawaii, in short, would be a buffer for the mainland, and so long as it could keep on buffing, the mainland would be practically secure.

Such is the military argument for the annexation of Hawaii, the strongest one that can be offered. Indeed Mr. Thurston, the Hawaiian agent at Washington, gives it first place in his list of five reasons in favor of the treaty. How can it be met?

In the first place, as has been intimated, Great Britain already has a fortified naval and coal station at Esquimaux, in British Columbia, which is very near to our Pacific coast cities. Of what use, then, would it be to annex and fortify Hawaii, so far as Great Britain is concerned? The annexationists pass this off by saying that in case of war between the United States and Great Britain, British Columbia "would be so speedily overwhelmed by invasion" that its ports would cut no "material figure as hostile bases of operation for any considerable length of time."

But this is an ill-founded assumption. England might lose all of Canada except Halifax and Esquimaux, retaining them because they are so well fortified. At least they would not be reduced "speedily," but would be defended well enough to make them of much use to the British navy for a considerable period. The possession of Esquimaux by England nullifies, it seems, the whole military argument for Hawaii so far as is concerned the only trans-Atlantic power with which the United States has ever engaged in war, and which, rightly or wrongly, very many people believe to be our only possible foe in the future.

With the weakening of the military argument one-half by the slipping from its coils of the most formidable naval power on earth, is it worth while to annex and fortify Hawaii against such powers as Japan, France, and Germany? We do not consider it necessary as a measure of defense for our Pacific coast for this reason. Our Government already owns in perpetuity the only inlet or sheet of land-locked water in the Hawaiian Islands that is at all fit for a naval and coal station. That is Pearl River Harbor, and, from a strategic standpoint, Pearl River Harbor is all there is to Hawaii. In that harbor we have got the kernel; of what use is the shell? Read what the London Times has said:

The narrow landlocked inlet or lagoon named Pearl River Harbor is, in itself, small in extent, but it is of incalculable value to any civilized nation possessing it and using it for naval purposes. In the deep waters of this sheltered lake not only the armed ships of the United States but of all countries may find space and perfect security. The maritime power which holds Pearl River Harbor and moors her fleet there holds also the key of the North Pacific.

Why should not the military strategists be satisfied? The United States Government has only to fortify Pearl River Harbor and it prevents any rival power from grabbing the "key of the North Pacific." And would not that do as a precaution against Germany, France, or Japan? Hawaii can not cede the harbor to any other power, and no nation hostile to us in war could get coal at Honolulu because Honolulu would be a neutral port. So long as the guns at the harbor's entrance were effective that station could not be captured, and thus we should still have a very fair buffer in Hawaii without actually exposing the population of Honolulu to bombardment or undertaking to govern the islands.

It is often said that if we again throw Hawaii aside some other power will obtain possession by the cunning methods of peaceful invasion. Some such power as Germany might repeat the performance at Kiao Chou Bay. But that will never be done if the United States chooses to maintain its historic policy of guaranteeing the independence of the islands—a policy which was inaugurated by Daniel Webster and is as firmly fixed in our diplomacy as the Monroe doctrine itself. That policy amounts almost to an American protectorate already, and in case some other nation attempted to grab the islands it would become in fact a protectorate, if we chose to interfere.

And now consider all the objections to absorbing such a population into our system and wrenching our peculiar form of government to make a place for an oligarchy in the mid-Pacific—what is there of weight in the argument from the military standpoint when now compared with the danger sure to come from such an innovation in our national development?—Springfield (Mass.) Republican, December 10, 1897.

Mr. McENERY. Mr. President, our policy has always been to stay at home and to strengthen our domestic relations, to improve our roads, build schoolhouses and churches, and it ought to have been, but it has been sadly neglected, to fortify all our exterior lines. Within we have strength and power, an inland country that would defy an invasion from any other. We have 75,000,000 people, 45 independent nationalities, each with more or less diverse interests, sufficient alone to occupy the time and the attention, the skill and the wisdom, of one republican form of government, enough to keep us at home and to keep us from going abroad with a chip on our shoulders seeking a fight on every sea. Our coasts require better protection, and we should not refuse a timely expenditure of money for coast defense and dry docks. We do not want to aggravate present conditions. We need money at home instead of sending it 2,000 miles away for profitless expenditure.

But, Mr. President, there is a sense of justice that ought to appeal to every American to stay his hand from violence upon the Hawaiian Republic. There is, as I have said, no authority whatever for that Government to give away the land, the rights, and the liberties of that people. We have always heretofore at least paid strict regard to the intentions of the people who proposed to become a part of the people of this country. We have laid violence on none except from the necessities of war, and they came in by conquest. A sense of justice ought to be just as strong in a nation as it is in the individual, for nations, like individuals, have moral obligations to observe, even when selfish designs may tempt them.

The dignity, character, and strength of nations as of men, and especially of a republic, depend, in the eyes of the world and of its own people, upon a rigid observance of justice and right, and it should refuse to embrace a policy of aggrandizement, especially where the people to be affected are not consulted. In this respect a republic like the United States, governed by the people, differs from monarchies and despotisms.

It is for this reason that when Hawaii comes to the United States with clean hands and the assent of the people, the United States will be in a position to listen, but not until that time. Jackson, in the case of Texas, adverted to the morality involved in the proposition to recognize her independence in his message of December 21, 1836, nine years prior to its admission:

The title of Texas to the territory she claims is identified with her independence. She asks us to acknowledge that title to the territory with an avowed design to treat immediately for its transfer to the United States. It becomes us to beware of a too early movement, as it might subject us, however unjustly, to the imputation of seeking to establish the claim of our neighbors to territory, with a view to its subsequent acquisition by ourselves.

In that case neither the United States nor its diplomatic or other agents had, at any time or in any way, interfered with or connived at the independence of Texas, and yet we see how scrupulously observant our Executive then was of the morality of a transaction involving the independence of a country, which was something very much less than a cession of territory.

It is said that Hawaii is a de facto State and that we treat with states and not with the people. Whence comes this doctrine, when a cession of the Government itself is involved, and especially when 20,000 native Hawaiians are and have, since 1893, been denying the right of those now proposing to cede to rule or govern?

In the case of our treaty with France for Louisiana in 1803 we were treating with an Emperor governing with despotic authority and power, and the will of the people finds no place for the exercise of protest or vote. The same may be said of our treaty in 1819 with Spain for Florida. And the same may be said of Alaska. Our California possessions were the result of conquest followed by treaty, and the principle has no application. But in other cases the United States has recognized the fundamental principle on which this Republic rests. Article 4 of the Dominican treaty provided that—

The people of the Dominican Republic shall, in the shortest possible time, express in a manner conformable to their laws their will concerning the cession herein provided for; and the United States, until such expression shall be had, shall protect the Dominican Republic against foreign intervention in order that the national expression shall be free.—Appendix, Congressional Globe, Forty-second Congress, first session, page 43.

The explanation made of the presence of our war ships in the harbor of Santo Domingo was that they were there to see that there was a fair vote of the people on the question of "annexation."

In March, 1870, the people of Dominica voted 1,006 for to 9 against annexation, and yet the Senate rejected the scheme!

In July, 1866, Secretary Seward proposed to purchase of Denmark the islands of Santa Cruz, St. Thomas, and St. Johns. In May, 1867, Denmark replied, among other things, that she would not cede them without the consent of the inhabitants, and the people voted in favor of the proposed cession. But even that treaty failed. (Wharton, volume 1, pages 416-417.)

Mr. Thurman frankly conceded in the debate on the Santo Domingo resolutions, December 21, 1870 (Congressional Globe, page 263, Forty-first Congress, third session), that "it is against the spirit of this age for a government to annex any people without their consent;" that Napoleon, despot as he was called, did not annex Savoy and Nice to France until the people of Savoy and Nice had voted in favor of annexation.

Senator Edmunds, page 263, said:

We ought not to annex the people of Dominica without their consent.

All this is in strict accord with the view which the United States has always taken in the matter of even recognizing the independence of governments.

Secretary Frelinghuysen said in 1884 that the State Department would—not recognize a revolutionary government, claiming to represent the people in a South American State, until it is established by a free expression of the will of the people.—Wharton's Digest, section 70.

Our action toward the Republic of Brazil in 1889 was contained in instructions to our minister to recognize the new Government "as soon as a majority of the people should have signified their assent to its establishment and maintenance."

In the case of Chile, our minister was instructed in 1891 to recognize the new government "if it was accepted by the people;" and in the case of Venezuela, in 1892, we conditioned our recognition of the new government on the fact that "it must be fully established, in possession of the power of the nation, and accepted by the people."

There never was a proposition on the part of the United States to accept a cession of the Hawaiian Islands without the consent of the people. When, in 1854, a cession was contemplated, Secretary Marcy said:

I understand that the measure proposed by the people, and that in which the present rulers are disposed to concur, is annexation, as distinguished from protection. (House Executive Document No. 1, part 1, Fifty-third Congress, third session, page 132.)

And ex-President Johnson, in alluding to the same subject in 1898, was evidently looking for the voice of the people in Hawaii; their voluntary application, and not the desire of a mere oligarchy. (See same document, page 146.)

In his first message President Hayes, in 1877, said:

It has been the custom of the United States when revolutionary changes have occurred in Mexico to recognize the de facto government as soon as it shall appear to have the approval of the Mexican people.—Wharton, page 548.

The people of Texas voted for admission, as it was practically provided that they should in the joint resolution of our Congress of March, 1845, submitting conditions to the people of Texas.

Who will now say, if the people of Texas, as they were required to do by the conditions of that resolution, had refused to assent to admission by the vote taken October 13, 1845, of 4,174 "For" to 812 "Against," that Congress would have admitted her?

And yet the commissioner sent to Hawaii by the United States to investigate and report the facts, in a letter to our Secretary of State dated May 24, 1898, said:

I have put this question to several leading annexationists: * * * "If the question of annexation were submitted to the people of these islands who were qualified to vote for representatives under the constitution of 1887 under the Australian ballot system, which has been adopted by your Legislature, what would be the result?"

Answer: "They have, almost without exception, declared that annexation would certainly be defeated. * * * There is not an annexationist in the islands, so far as I have been able to observe, who would be willing to submit the question of annexation to the popular vote."

Secretary Gresham, in October, 1893, correctly and concisely stated the objection to the cession of Hawaii in 1893, and it affects the morality of a cession to-day. He said:

The provisional government (now the oligarchy) was not established by the Hawaiian people, nor with their consent or acquiescence, nor has it since existed with their consent. * * * After a patient examination the President was satisfied that the movement against the Queen, if not instigated, was encouraged and supported by the representative of our Government; that he promised in advance to aid her enemies in an effort to overthrow the Hawaiian Government and set up by force a new government in its place, and that he kept this promise by causing a detachment of our troops to be landed from the Boston on the 18th of January and by recognizing the "provisional government" the next day. * * * —House Executive Document No. 1, part 1, Fifty-third Congress, third session, page 1190.

This historical sketch just quoted shows conclusively that this Government has invariably pursued a policy in accordance with the principles of freedom, in accordance with the consciences of the people, their sense of right and justice, and that they will not unwillingly impose a government upon a people against their will.

The constitution of Hawaii was never submitted to the people of the Hawaiian Islands. It was born of a revolutionary movement. It was an usurpation, pure and simple, by an insignificant minority of the people organizing themselves into a Government, framing a constitution which perpetuated the power of those who had organized the Government, and they never submitted it to the people.

To this day there never has been a proposition coming from the great body of the people of Hawaii to be annexed to the Republic of the United States of America. It would be spoliation on the part of this Government to take possession of that island. It is a piece of unblushing larceny. We have been educated to believe that all usurpation in government is tyranny, and that it is the object and mission of this Government to discountenance all tyranny and to aid in the destruction of all imperialism. A sense of justice among the people of this country will, when they understand this question, denounce the robbery of the territory of the Republic of Hawaii, and a sense of justice to our own people should control our action in this matter.

We have promised the inhabitants of certain sections of this country that if they engage in certain industries they shall be protected. They have invested millions of dollars and are pursuing a course that will enrich the sections of the country in which they have invested their money. The annexation of this Republic will bring to the block all the property that they own, and it will go under the auctioneer's cry at a mere song. They will leave their homes, their plantations, their dwelling places in sorrow and humiliation, with the promise of this country ringing in their ear and misery and misfortune before them.

Mr. TURLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. PETTIGREW. There are only four or five Republican Senators present, and I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Deboe,	Hoar,	Pettus,
Bacon,	Elkins,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, Conn.
Baker,	Fairbanks,	Jones, Nev.	Platt, N. Y.
Bate,	Faulkner,	Lodge,	Roach,
Berry,	Foraker,	McBride,	Shoup,
Cannon,	Frye,	McEnery,	Stewart,

RELIEF OF MINERS FROM ASSESSMENT WORK.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4439) to relieve owners of mining claims who enlist in the military service of the United States for duty in the war with Spain from performing assessment work during such term of service.

The amendments of the House were, on page 1, line 9, after "claims," to insert "or parts of claims;" on page 1, line 10, after "Army," to insert "or Navy;" on page 1, line 12, after "claim," to insert "or any part thereof;" on page 1, line 13, to strike out all after "recorded" down to and including "aforesaid," on page 2, line 4, and insert:

Shall be subject to forfeiture for nonperformance of the annual assessments until six months after such owner is mustered out of the service, or, if he should not survive the war, then six months after his death in the service.

SEC. 2. That those desiring to take advantage of this act shall file, or cause to be filed, a notice in the clerk's office where the location certificate of said mine is recorded before the expiration of the assessment year, giving notice of his enlistment and of his desire to hold said claim under this act.

SEC. 3. That if any such enlisted soldier or sailor has a coowner or co-owners in any mining claim, and who are not in the Army or Navy, and such coowner or coowners fail to do such a proportion of $100 worth of work per annum as the interest of such nonenlisted person or persons bears to the whole claim, then such interest shall be open to relocation by any other qualified person or persons by their doing the necessary work thereon and filing an affidavit of labor showing the forfeiture and that the relocators had done the annual work required of such nonenlisted persons and succeeded them in right under this act, which work may be done at any time after the expiration of the assessment year and before the former owners resume work thereon. The work and affidavit aforesaid shall operate as a transfer of said forfeited interest from the former owners to said relocators.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act to relieve owners of mining claims who enlist in the military or naval service of the United States for duty in the war with Spain from performing assessment work during such term of service."

Mr. SHOUP. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

A bill (H. R. 10477) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the county of St. Louis, in the State of Minnesota, to build, or authorize the building of, a foot and wagon bridge across the St. Louis River between Minnesota and Wisconsin, at a point near Fond du Lac, in said State of Minnesota," approved June 11, 1896.

The bill (H. R. 10509) to authorize the Missouri and Kansas Telephone Company to construct and maintain lines and offices for general business purposes in the Ponca, Otoe, and Missouri Reservation, in the Territory of Oklahoma, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

HANNAH G. STRONG.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4773) to increase the pension of Hannah G. Strong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire if the bill is on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions this morning, and it is not on the Calendar; it is in the Secretary's office. It is a bill, I will say, which ought to be passed, and I trust unanimous consent will be given for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been sent for.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I understand the bill is now here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Mississippi?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hannah G. Strong, widow of William L. Strong, late private, Company F, First Mississippi Volunteers, Mexican war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Hannah G. Strong."

ANNEXATION OF THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Mr. DAVIS. I call for the regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 259) to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States.

Mr. TURLEY. Mr. President, I have no doubt that every Senator realizes that the question now pending before the Senate is as important as, if not more important, than any that it has ever been called upon to act on. It is proposed now to abandon a governmental policy to which we have strictly adhered since the beginning of our national life and under which we have grown great and prosperous; and not only that, but to do it in a way never heretofore attempted.

In June of last year a treaty was agreed upon between the United States of America and the Republic of Hawaii; and I believe on June 18, 1897, that treaty was transmitted to this body for its action, and here it has been pending ever since.

The object of that treaty was to annex the Hawaiian territory to the United States upon the terms and conditions set forth in the treaty. After that treaty had been considered for months, within the last few days a joint resolution has been sent from the other House to the Senate proposing to do by Congressional action, by legislative action, just exactly what the treaty contemplated.

In other words, this Government, through its treaty power, was seeking to accomplish a certain object; and while the treaty is still pending undisposed of, it is now proposed to accomplish exactly the same object through a joint resolution, through the legislative action of both Houses of Congress. Such an attempt, I repeat, has never been made before in the history of our Government.

It is claimed that the annexation of the State of Texas by joint resolution was a precedent for this action. That point has been so fully and thoroughly discussed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] that I do not propose to take up the time of the Senate now in drawing the particular distinction between those resolutions and the resolutions now under consideration. I will advert to it briefly a little further on. But never before has an attempt been made to acquire foreign territory by the legislative action of Congress either in the form of a bill or in the form of a joint resolution.

In the first place, I wish to discuss whether these resolutions are constitutional, whether Congress under the Constitution has the power to accomplish this object through the passage of resolutions like these. In making this argument I will have to travel to some extent over the ground already occupied by the Senator from Georgia; but this is a question of so much importance, of such paramount importance, that I think it can not be dwelt upon too carefully, nor can we devote too much time to fully understanding its scope and effect.

When we come to the Constitution of the United States, it will be found that the only mention it makes of any extension of the territory of this Government is in that provision in which it is provided that Congress may receive new States. That is the only direct reference to the acquisition of any territory in addition to that which was possessed by the United States at the time the Constitution was adopted. If, then, there is power to acquire additional territory, to acquire foreign territory, which does not come to us clad in the panoply of a State ready to take its place in this Union, it must be found in the treaty-making power. It can be found nowhere else.

Mr. President, when you come to construe any instrument, be it constitution, statute, or contract, you construe it with reference to the accepted meaning then existing of the terms used in it. In determining in what sense the word "treaty" is used in the Constitution of the United States we must look to the meaning given to it in international law and between the civilized nations of the world at the time the Constitution was adopted.

In an instrument of that sort it is impossible to go into detail. The terms used are to be taken in their ordinary signification just as they are understood at the time when they are placed in such instrument.

A treaty is a compact between sovereign states, just as a contract is a compact between individuals. It is so defined in all works on international law and by our own statesmen. I quote now from Glenn's International Law, chapter 9, on page 140:

ESSENTIALS OF A VALID TREATY.

101. The essentials of a valid treaty or contract between two or more independent states are:

- (a) Capacity of the parties to contract.
- (b) Duly empowered agents to act on behalf of the states.
- (c) Freedom of consent.
- (d) The object of the contract must be in conformity to law.

Here we see how every essential and elemental principle which marks contrasts between individuals likewise distinguishes a treaty between two sovereign states.

This author, proceeding, says:

Every independent state is capable of entering into treaties with another state or states, but the fundamental law of the state may impose certain restrictions upon the method of entering into such agreements, which must be taken into consideration by the parties to the contract. In the United States and other confederations the executive or treaty-making power can not finally conclude treaties without the consent of the legislative bodies. The latter have to concur, and up to the time that this final consent of the concurring body has been obtained the other parties to the contract can withdraw their assent, unless this right has been waived.

POWERS OF THE AGENTS OF THE STATE.

In every state certain agents can, under given conditions, bind their state by their contracts. If, however, these agents exceed their powers their state is not bound. But where their acts are not ratified, and their state has received some material advantage as a result of the agreement entered into by them, or where the other state has performed acts in pursuance of the agreement, it is the duty of the state receiving the benefits, or the action of whose agent caused the performance of the acts mentioned, to either make proper compensation or restore the former status as far as practicable. Of course, if the agent has clearly exceeded his powers in such a manner that this fact should have been known to the other party, there is no obligation upon the agent's state.

Then he says with reference to "freedom of consent:"

There can not be the same strictness in regard to the freedom of consent in the treaties of states as in the contract of individuals, because of the difference in the mode of redress of wrong. In international law this consists mainly in the use of force, which, if a proper means of redress, can not be made to vitiate the contract resulting from its use. The assumption that consent is freely given by a state in many cases is a fiction. A state can enter into a perfectly valid contract which has been forced upon it—as a result of a war, for instance—whatever be the cost to it, or however disadvantageous its terms may be, provided it does not part with its independence. The parting with independence as a result of constraint no state can be supposed to be willing to consent to, and when this results the contract is assumed to be vitiated by the constraint.

This assumption of consent to a contract imposed by a successful state at the conclusion of a war is said to be in the interest of peace, and is allowed for the further reason that the successful state should be compensated for past wrongs. Again, unless such contracts are declared valid, wars would all end either in the complete subjugation of one of the parties or the utter exhaustion of both. In case constraint be imposed upon the sovereign of the state, or upon a commander, or upon an agent authorized to negotiate a treaty, the state which they represent is in no manner bound by their acts and all such contracts are absolutely void. Fraud through which the consent of a state agent is obtained also vitiates the contract resulting therefrom.

This illustrates how nearly analogous the contract and the treaty are. In the case of a treaty, of course, growing out of the different relations of the contracting parties, freedom of consent is not so absolutely necessary as in the case of a contract, but yet to a great extent it is necessary.

In tracing this subject a little further, at the time the Constitution was adopted by what method could one sovereign state acquire territory from another sovereign state? Only by treaty or by conquest. Of course at that time, and for many years prior thereto, there were large portions of the earth, as there may be to some extent still portions of the earth, which a sovereign state could acquire by occupation or discovery; but when it comes to acquiring territory from another sovereign state, it can not be accomplished except by treaty or by conquest. No man who is familiar with the subject can imagine any other method.

In this discussion the only suggestion I have heard as distinguishing this transaction from that of a regular treaty is that by the treaty the Republic of Hawaii ceded its entire territory, or is willing to cede its entire territory and cease to be a sovereign state. But that distinction can make no difference, because it all rests in the compact at last.

How does the Hawaiian Republic give up her territory? How does she cede her sovereignty? She proposes to do it by this compact, by this agreement, which between two nations has always been known as a treaty. The fact that after the treaty is consummated the Republic of Hawaii ceases to be a sovereign state among the other states of the world does not at all militate against the idea that the result is accomplished by the agreement between the two contracting parties, and has its whole foundation in the treaty itself.

Treaties of this kind are not unknown. A well-defined distinction in international law in classifying treaties is equal and unequal treaties. There are many instances where a more powerful nation has made a treaty with a weaker power by which the weaker power ceded portions of its sovereignty, by which it denied itself the right to declare war, by which it denied to itself the right to negotiate with other nations and other powers, by which it practically became a dependency of the stronger power.

Those treaties are similar to contracts which, under the civil law, allowed the freeman to contract away his freedom. Indeed, the essential fact is that it all rests in compact; and the agreement is not changed because in one instance the result may transfer the whole territory and sovereignty of one nation to another.

What difference would it make, Mr. President, if this treaty, instead of being to cede the whole of the Hawaiian territory to the United States, had left one little island over which the Government of that country could still exercise some independent power and authority?

As illustrating this subject, I wish to call attention to what is said in 2 Wharton's Digest of International Law, on pages 7, 8, and 9. I read first from Mr. Adams, who was Secretary of State, and was writing to Mr. Lowndes on the 10th of December, 1819. He says:

I have the honor to state that the President considers the treaty of 22d February last as obligatory upon the honor and good faith of Spain—

It was a treaty with reference to the cession of Florida—

not as a perfect treaty (ratification being an essential formality to that), but as a compact which Spain was bound to ratify—as an adjustment of the differences between the two nations, which the King of Spain by his full power to his minister has solemnly promised to approve, ratify, and fulfill. This adjustment is assumed as the measure of what the United States had a right to obtain from Spain, from the signature of the treaty.

The principle may be illustrated by reference to municipal law relative to transactions between individuals. The difference between the treaty unratified and ratified may be likened to the difference between a covenant to convey lands and the deed of conveyance itself. Upon a breach of the covenant to convey, courts of equity decree that the party has broken his covenant, shall convey, and further shall make good to the other party all the damage which he has sustained by the breach of covenant.

As there is no court of chancery between nations, their differences can be settled only by agreement or by force. The resort to force is justifiable only when justice can not be obtained by negotiation—and the resort to force is limited to the attainment of justice. The wrong received marks the boundaries to the right to be obtained.

Here, then, we have the similarity between contracts between nations and contracts between individuals strongly pointed out.

Mr. President, if I am correct in the proposition that one sovereign state can not acquire territory from another sovereign state except by treaty or conquest, then it seems to me undoubtedly these resolutions are without the pale of the Constitution of our country. Either this treaty itself, which has been pending here for so many months, is unconstitutional, or the resolutions are unconstitutional, because no man will claim that the power which is the foundation of the treaty and the resolutions alike is intrusted to two different branches of our Government.

Mr. President, it will throw some light on this subject, remembering that this is an attempt now by Congress in its legislative capacity to do what has heretofore always been done through the exercise of the treaty power, to examine a little into the proceedings of the convention by which the Constitution was adopted. It will be seen, when we come to examine the proceedings of the convention, that the distinction as to the treaty-making power and the reasons for placing it where it has been placed are clearly marked out.

When the convention met the first plan was submitted by Mr. Randolph. That plan will be found on pages 126 and 127 of the Madison Papers. In that plan the treaty power does not seem to be mentioned. It is left as one of the general powers of the Government, without any particular branch of the Government being intrusted with its exercise.

The next plan submitted was by Mr. Charles Pinckney, and in article 7 of that plan it was provided:

That the Senate shall have sole and exclusive power to declare war, and to make treaties, and to appoint ambassadors and other ministers to foreign nations and judges of the Supreme Court.

Then Mr. Hamilton presented a plan, which will be found on page 205. His plan was "the Senate to have the sole power of declaring war; the power of advising and approving all treaties; the power of approving or rejecting all appointments," etc.

Then Mr. Wilson's plan will be found on page 245. I quote from it:

Mr. Wilson did not mean to repeat what had fallen from others, but would add an observation or two which he believed had not yet been suggested. Every nation may be regarded in two relations: First, to its own citizens; secondly, to foreign nations. It is therefore not only liable to anarchy and tyranny within, but has wars to avoid and treaties to obtain from abroad. The Senate will probably be the depository of the powers concerning the latter objects.

Then the report of the committee on detail, on page 379, was in the following words, so far as this subject is concerned:

The Senate of the United States shall have power to make treaties and to appoint ambassadors and judges of the Supreme Court.

After that Mr. Gouverneur Morris moved to amend by providing "but no treaty shall be binding on the United States which is not ratified by law." That motion was lost by an even vote.

Then, on page 507, the committee of eleven, to whom certain motions had been referred, reported as follows:

The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall have power to make treaties.

Mr. Wilson then moved the following amendment:

After the word "Senate" to insert "and House of Representatives;" so as to make the clause read:

"The President, by and with the advice of the Senate and House of Representatives, shall have power to make treaties."

Thus seeking to incorporate into the Constitution the very idea which is suggested in these resolutions, and upon which they stand, if they can stand at all. Here in the convention itself the proposition was to make every treaty depend upon the consent of both Houses of Congress, the House of Representatives as well as the Senate. That motion was lost; there was only one vote in its favor, and finally the Constitution was adopted in the terms in which we now have it. It provides that treaties may be made by the President by and with the consent of two-thirds of the Senators present.

In following through these discussions in the convention it will be seen that the reasons why the treaty-making power was left entirely with the President and the Senate are fully set forth—the fact that the Senate was a more permanent body, that the terms of Senators were longer, that they were more apt to be fully informed on foreign relations and the conditions of this country with reference to other countries, and that the secrecy necessary in making treaties could be more easily observed.

Mr. President, almost as soon as the Constitution was adopted the question as to the power of Congress to control on the question of treaties arose. The Jay treaty between this country and England was adopted in 1796. It was ratified by the Senate, and the fact of its ratification was proclaimed by the President early in February, 1796.

As soon as the proclamation of the President was issued notifying Congress of the fact that the treaty was in full force, having been approved by two-thirds of the Senators present, the House of Representatives called upon President Washington for papers and information with reference to the treaty. His reply has already been quoted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], but it is so pertinent on this point that I beg leave to requote it. This is the answer transmitted to the request for the papers and information:

Having been a member of the general convention and knowing the principles upon which the Constitution was formed, I have ever entertained but one opinion on this subject, and from the first establishment of this Government to this moment my conduct has exemplified that opinion, that the power of making treaties is exclusively vested in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur, and that every treaty so made and promulgated thenceforward became the law of the land.

It is thus that the treaty-making power has been understood by foreign nations, and in all the treaties made with them we have declared, and they have believed, that, when ratified by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, they became obligatory. * * * As, therefore, it is perfectly clear to my understanding that the assent of the House of Representatives is not necessary to the validity of a treaty; as the treaty with Great Britain exhibits in itself all the objects requiring legislative provision, and on these the papers called for can throw no light; and as it is essential to the due administration of the Government that the boundaries fixed by the Constitution between the different departments should be preserved, a just regard to the Constitution and to the duty of my office, under all the circumstances of this case, forbid a compliance with your request.

Now, as I go a little further it will be seen that no member of the House of Representatives, no member of the Senate, no man connected with the Government of the United States claimed that the House of Representatives had any right to participate in the first instance in making a treaty or claimed that when the subject was a proper one to be dealt with by treaty that Congress itself could by general legislation usurp the treaty-making power. No claim of that sort was made. No such claim, I repeat, has ever been made.

The sole question which was made then and has been made often since, as I will show, was the claim that whenever the execution of a treaty involved the expenditure of money or involved the doing of any act over which Congress, in its legislative capacity, had jurisdiction by the Constitution, then Congress, in its legislative capacity, could determine whether or not it would make the appropriation or do the other requisite act necessary to carry out the treaty.

It did amount to this claim, that Congress in its legislative capacity, whenever the execution of a treaty required the appropriation of money or the doing of some other act, might render a treaty ineffectual, but it never amounted to a claim that Congress itself could by a bill or by a joint resolution in substance make a treaty.

It is well to see just how the members of Congress at that time, many of whom had been members of the Constitutional Convention, looked upon this subject. Mr. Wharton, in his second volume, at the bottom of page 16 and the top of page 17, states just what the contention was. He says:

Jay's treaty was approved by the Senate by the requisite two-thirds majority. Its ratification was proclaimed by the President on February 29, 1796, and this proclamation was communicated to the two Houses of Congress on March 1, 1796. On the one side it was maintained that the power of the President and Senate as to treaties was absolute, and that the House of Representatives was bound, under the Constitution, to make the appropriations necessary to carry the treaty into effect.

On the other side it was contended that under the Constitution the consent of the House was requisite to pass appropriations to carry the treaty into effect, and that this was as much known to the other contracting party as was the consent of the Senate to the preliminary adoption of the treaty. On the latter assumption the House, on March 24, 1796, called on the President for the facts relative to the treaty. On March 30, 1796, the President declined to give such information.

His reasons being stated in the passage I have already read.

Mr. Madison goes on and gives a history of the discussion. In a letter which he wrote to Mr. Jefferson during the discussion he said:

We are at length embarked in the discussion of the treaty, which was drawn in rather abruptly by a proposition calling on the President for papers. The point in debate is the constitutional right of Congress in relation to treaties. There seems at present strong reasons to conclude that a majority will be in favor of the doctrine that the House has a constitutional right to refuse to pass laws for executing a treaty and that the treaty power is limited by the enumerated powers.

Whether the right ought in the present case to be executed will be a distinct question on the merits of the treaty, which have not yet come into the discussion. I understand that the treaty party expects success on this question, but despair on every other.

Then he says, in another letter to Mr. Jefferson:

The newspapers will inform you that the call for the treaty papers was carried by 62 against 37. You will find the answer of the President herewith inclosed. The absolute refusal was as unexpected as the tone and tenor of the message are improper and indelicate. * * * I think there will be sufficient firmness to face it with resolutions declaring the constitutional powers of the House as to treaties, and that, in applying for papers, they are not obliged to state their reasons to the Executive.

Then, further, to Mr. Jefferson:

This measure of the Executive produced two propositions, asserting the right of the House to judge of the expediency of treaties stipulating on legislative subjects, and declaring that it was not requisite in a call for papers to express the use to be made of them. It was expected that a long and obstinate discussion would have attended these defensive measures. Under that idea, I entered into a free but respectful review of the fallacy of the reasons contained in the message, and the day being nearly spent, the committee rose and an adjournment succeeded.

The next morning, instead of a reply, the question was called for and taken without a word of argument on the subject. The two resolutions were carried by 57 against 35, and six members who, not foreseeing the early call for the question, had not taken their seats, soon appeared and desired to have their names added to the majority. This was not permitted by the rules of the House.

The resolution which was adopted by Congress as a reply to the President's message to furnish information and papers in relation to the treaty, and which had the sanction of Mr. Madison, then a member of the House, is as follows:

Resolved, That it being declared in the second section of the Constitution that the President shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur, the House of Representatives do not claim an agency in making treaties; but that when a treaty stipulates regulations on any of the subjects submitted by the Constitution to the power of Congress, it must depend for its execution as to such stipulations on a law or laws to be passed by Congress; and it is the constitutional right and duty of the House of Representatives in all such cases to deliberate on the expediency or inexpediency of carrying such treaty into effect and to determine and act thereon, as in their judgment may be most conducive to the public good.

It was further resolved "that it is not necessary to the propriety of any application from this House to the Executive for information desired by them, and which may relate to any constitutional functions of the House, that the purposes for which such information may be wanted, or to which it may be applied, should be stated in the application."

Now, it is well to note what Mr. Jefferson's view was on this subject and to compare that view with these resolutions. Mr. Jefferson says, and this will be found in his Manual of Parliamentary Practice:

By the Constitution of the United States this department of legislation—
Referring to the treaty power—

By the Constitution of the United States this department of legislation is confined to two branches only of the ordinary legislature, the President originating and the Senate having a negative. To what subject this power extends has not been defined in detail by the Constitution, nor are we entirely agreed among ourselves. (1) It is admitted that it must concern the foreign nation party to the contract or it would be a mere nullity, res inter alios acta. (2) By the general power to make treaties the Constitution must have intended to comprehend only those objects which are usually regulated by treaty, and can not be otherwise regulated. (3) It must have meant to except out of these the rights reserved to the States, for surely the President and Senate can not do by treaty what the whole Government is interdicted from doing in any way. (4) And also to except those subjects of legislation in which it gave a participation to the House of Representatives. This last exception is denied by some on the ground that it would leave very little matter for the treaty power to work on. The less the better, say others.

Now, I wish to call attention to the attributes which he describes as pertaining to this power. He says:

It is admitted that it must concern the foreign nation party to the contract, or it would be a mere nullity, res inter alios acta.

If there is a foreign nation with which this country is dealing, then it must be through a treaty. A resolution, as he says, would be a mere nullity. It would have no operation beyond the limits of this country. It would create no obligation. It would create no rights. If there are two nations, then it must be a treaty. It must be a compact.

To illustrate a little further, Congress has the right to regulate commerce and it may pass laws under which all nations derive great benefit in their trade with us or under which certain nations may be favored. Other nations may have similar laws. These are the independent acts of the different governments, not connected with each other in any way. If our Government chooses to repeal or alter those laws, no other government has any right to complain. It may resort to retaliatory legislation; it may by its own laws deny us rights which had been freely granted to us before; but it has no just cause of complaint against us.

Legislation in itself, whether by resolution or by a bill, on such subjects and as between nations, creates no rights. When rights are sought to be acquired, the principles of justice, the principles of reason pervade all transactions, alike those between individuals and those between nations. When rights are sought to be acquired, they must be acquired through a treaty, through a compact, through a trade, through an agreement where there are mutual considerations moving one from another.

Just as I have illustrated in these commercial regulations, if the same rights had been created by a treaty, rights given by us under a treaty for which we received a benefit, a consideration, from the other contracting party, then if we changed that treaty it would be a breach of the contract, an act of injustice which might be a cause for war. It would give the other country the right to claim satisfaction and assert its rights to satisfaction by force, just as the violation of a contract between individuals would entitle the wronged party to apply to the courts for relief.

Hence it is that Mr. Jefferson, in defining the treaty power, says that it pertains to transactions between nations, to trades between nations; that it must be with a foreign nation a party to the contract or it would be a mere nullity.

Now, notice further, the next qualification is that the Constitution, by giving the general power to make treaties, intended to comprehend only those objects which are usually regulated by treaty and can not be otherwise regulated. I come back to the proposition, How can the acquisition of territory be accomplished? I have not heard in this discussion, and I would gladly hear any explanation, how foreign territory can be acquired, except as I said a while ago, by treaty or by conquest.

We are not proposing, in this instance, to acquire territory by conquest. Then we must rest our right to acquire the territory of the Hawaiian Republic upon a treaty. There is no other way known amongst civilized nations under the rules of international law. The joint resolution could not invest us with a particle of right to one foot of territory in the Islands of Hawaii. It could not give us a scintilla of right. I will notice the form and phrase of the joint resolution a little further, showing that it begins by the enunciation of a statement which is untrue.

Now, remembering these qualifications as given by Mr. Jefferson, notice again what the House of Representatives said in the resolutions which they passed in reply to the message from the President denying them information on the Jay treaty. They say:

The House of Representatives do not claim an agency in making treaties.

If the principles laid down by Mr. Jefferson are correct, and if foreign territory, so far as the subject now before the Senate is concerned, can be acquired only by treaty, here we have the enunciation of the House of Representatives that it can not participate in the treaty, and yet by the joint resolution now under consideration we have the House sending us what they call a perfect treaty, on its face adopting every provision of the treaty which is now pending before the Senate.

Let us go a little further and we will see that this question came up again in 1803 upon the occasion of the treaty for the cession of Louisiana. Mr. Wharton, in his second volume, page 19, says:

Mr. Jefferson, who was then President, had maintained, as was well known, the position, as above stated, that whenever Congress, in its legislative action, is called upon to make appropriations to carry out a treaty, it had a full constitutional right to refuse its assent.

Not that it had a right to participate in the making of the treaty, but that after the treaty was made and perfected, if it came to the House for an appropriation, the House under the Constitution had a right to determine whether or not it would grant the appropriation. Mr. Wharton says:

He took care not to appear in any way, when asking for action on the Louisiana treaty, to invade the prerogatives he had so fully recognized in 1796. He sent in a special message communicating the requisite papers "for the purposes of the consideration of Congress in its legislative capacity" or "for the exercise of their functions as to those conditions which are within the power vested by the Constitution in Congress;" and so far from assuming that this power was to be exercised as a matter of course, he said, "You will observe that some important conditions can not be carried into execution but with the aid of the Legislature." The measures proper for the execution of the treaty were voted without, however, any reassertions of the principle of independent responsibility laid down by the House of Representatives in 1796.

Now, in 1816 the Senate passed a bill to carry into effect the commercial convention of 1815 with Great Britain. The bill so passed provided that so much of any existing act as might be contrary to the provisions of the convention should be deemed and taken to be of no effect. The House of Representatives, on the other hand, passed a bill enacting seriatim the provisions of the treaty.

In this case the treaty had been adopted. The treaty was adopted in 1815, and in 1816 the Senate passed a bill to carry out the treaty. When it went to the House, the House then seemingly for the first time asserted the right to participate in the making of the treaty. It passed a bill enacting the treaty, reciting that the treaty was adopted and accepted.

The Senate refused to concur, on the ground that the treaty was operative of itself and therefore that the act should be declaratory only. On the other hand, the House insisted that legislation was necessary to carry the treaty into effect. A committee of conference, of which Rufus King was chairman of the managers on the part of the Senate and John Forsyth chairman of the managers on the part of the House, agreed on a bill, which was then adopted. The principle upon which this adjustment was made was thus explained by Mr. Forsyth: "Your committee understood the committee of the Senate to admit the principle contended for by the House, that whilst some treaties might not require, others may require, legislative provision to carry them into effect; that the decision of the question, how far such provision was necessary, must be founded upon the peculiar character of the treaty itself."

The same question was somewhat discussed in 1831 on the treaty with France. That treaty was consummated by both the contracting parties, and then the French Chamber of Deputies refused to appropriate the necessary amount to pay the claims due the United States. The President sent a message on that subject. Mr. Wharton, in commenting on the question which arose then, on page 20 says:

It must be remembered, however, that the case of the action of the French Chamber of Deputies in refusing the appropriation under the treaty of 1831 was not that of a mere refusal to approve a treaty relating exclusively to the future, as was the case with Jay's treaty. The debt which the French Chamber refused to pay was one which had been for many years claimed earnestly, almost to the point of a formal declaration of war, by the United States, and had been over and over again admitted to be due by France. When President Jackson, therefore, advised Congress to resort to reprisals to compel payment of this debt, this was not because the French Chamber of Deputies refused to approve a treaty which had been negotiated between the two Governments, but because the French Government had repudiated a debt which the United States had declared to be incontestable and which the French Executive had admitted.

Reprisals for repudiation of a debt solemnly acknowledged are recognized by the law of nations, and this was a case of repudiation of a debt solemnly acknowledged. There was no discussion, on the part of President Jackson, of the question as to how far the consent of the French Chamber of Deputies was necessary, under the then French constitution, to the validity of a treaty. All that President Jackson did or said may be regarded as limited to the following position: "You owe this money; we have already pushed our claim to the verge of war, and you have admitted it to be due. You must pay; your admission you can not dispute, since it was made by your Executive, who is the only authority with whom, under the law of nations, we can negotiate."

As far as we have gone we still see that there is no claim recognized or asserted that the House of Representatives, through its legislative power, can participate in the beginning in the execution of a treaty. The only claim is that when, the treaty being perfected, it requires an appropriation or constitutional legislative action on the part of Congress in its legislative capacity, then Congress can determine whether the appropriation will be made or whether the necessary legislation will be enacted.

As showing how far this treaty power has been exercised by our Government, I refer to the treaty of 1843 with Great Britain. Mr. Wharton, on page 25 of his second volume, says:

The disputed northeastern boundary between Great Britain and the United States involved the territory of the State of Maine, in which Massachusetts also had an interest. The line established by the Ashburton treaty of 1842 differed from that claimed by Maine and ceded parts over which Maine had exercised jurisdiction. Still the treaty was a sovereign act of the United States with Great Britain and operated as an international settlement. Neither of the States of Maine or Massachusetts was in any way party to it, or named in it, except in the fifth article, in which the United States agreed to receive and pay over to those States certain portions of a common fund established by consent for the care of the territory while under dispute, and to pay to those States a further sum on account of their assent to the line of boundary described in this treaty.

Lord Ashburton disclaimed all responsibility of Great Britain for any matters between the United States and the individual States referred to in that article. Commissioners on the part of Maine and Massachusetts gave their assent to the treaty before it was concluded by the Government; but that was an internal matter, and did not concern Great Britain. Neither is the fact that the United States chose to secure the consent of Massachusetts and Maine conclusive upon the much canvassed question of its constitutional power to have made the treaty without their assent.

Now, here is a case where, under the treaty-making power, our Government ceded a part of the territory of the United States. That establishes, so far as we are concerned, the proposition which I have asserted, that the cession of territory by one government and the acquisition by another is the subject-matter of treaty, and I again repeat that if it is the subject-matter of treaty, then under the Constitution it belongs to the President and the Senate, and no other power, no other department of the Government, can take any control over it. Now, I proceed further:

In 1843 Mr. Wheaton negotiated a commercial treaty with the German States. The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations reported adversely to this treaty, on the ground of the "want of constitutional competency" to make it; and the Senate laid the subject on the table indefinitely. Mr. Calhoun, then Secretary of State, comments thus on this act: "If this be a true view of the treaty-making power, it may be truly said that its exercise has been one continual series of habitual and uninterrupted infringements of the Constitution. From the beginning, and throughout the whole existence of the Federal Government, it has been exercised constantly on commerce, navigation, and other delegated powers."

And right here I might add that under this treaty-making power, with the exception of the State of Texas, the territory of the United States has been extended from the limits which existed at the time the Constitution was formed to the Gulf of Mexico and to the Pacific Ocean. A territory many times greater than originally possessed by this Government has been added to it constantly, and constantly by the exercise of the treaty power.

Never has one foot of territory been acquired by any other power except solely in the State of Texas, and as to that the distinction has already been marked out. That State came fully panoplied with a constitution and government, ready to take its place with its other sisters in this Union, and it was admitted under another clause in the Constitution.

This question came up again in 1868 on the occasion of the treaty with Russia for the cession of Alaska, and I will read to some extent what Mr. Wharton says on this subject on pages 21, 22, and 23 of his second volume:

In that treaty it was provided that the territory should be transferred on the exchange of ratifications (article 4), and that Russia should be paid an indemnity of $7,200,000. The treaty was ratified by the Senate on May 28, 1867, there being but two voices in the negative. On June 20, 1867, President

Johnson issued a proclamation in which, after reciting the treaty, he declared: "Now, therefore, be it known that I, Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, have caused the said treaty to be made public to the end that the same and every clause and article thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof."

The territory was transferred by Russia to the United States on October 18, 1867. When, however, the question of appropriation came before Congress at the ensuing session, it was at once seen that there was a marked division of opinion. The majority of the Committee of Foreign Affairs in the House of Representatives reported as follows: "The committee reports to the House the following bill, making an appropriation to carry the treaty into effect, with a recommendation that it be enacted into a law: 'A bill to enable the President of the United States to fulfill the treaty between the United States and Russia of March 30, 1867. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives, that there be, and hereby is, appropriated $7,200,000 in coin to fulfill the stipulations contained in the sixth article of the treaty with Russia, concluded at Washington on the 30th day of March, 1867.'" A minority report was made, in which the worthlessness of the territory ceded was asserted, and in which the rejection of the purchase was recommended.

The majority report, while conceding that there were cases in which the assent of the House to a treaty might be properly withheld, limited such right to cases plainly inconsistent "with the fundamental principles, purposes, or interests of the Constitution." It was further asserted that "where a treaty is limited to objects consistent with the interests of the Government, its first and highest duty is to enact such measures as are necessary to carry the treaty into effect." It was urged that as the Alaska treaty had infringed no constitutional sanction, laws to carry it into execution should be passed. (As to prior negotiation, see infra, section 150.) Protracted debate ensued, beginning on June 30, and proceeding through July, the discussion relating far more to the constitutional rights of the House in such issues than as to the expediency of the purchase of Alaska.

The tendency of the majority of the House was evidently to sanction the Alaska purchase, but to couple the approval of the treaty with a reservation of the right of the House to approve or disapprove in all cases in which the sanction of the House is necessary to execute a treaty. The following amendment, adopting this view, passed the Committee of the Whole by a vote of 98 to 49, and the House, on July 14, 1867, by a vote of 113 to 43:

"Whereas the President of the United States, on the 30th of March, 1867, entered into a treaty with the Emperor of Russia, by the terms of which it was stipulated that, in consideration of the cession by the Emperor of Russia to the United States of certain territory therein described, the United States would pay to the Emperor of Russia the sum of $7,200,000 in coin; and

"Whereas it was further stipulated in said treaty that the United States shall accept of such cession, and that certain inhabitants of said territory shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights and immunities of citizens of the United States; and

"Whereas the subjects thus embraced in the stipulations of said treaty are among the subjects which by the Constitution of the United States are submitted to the power of Congress, and over which Congress has jurisdiction, and it being for such reason necessary that the consent of Congress shall be given to the said treaty before the same shall have full force and effect, having taken into consideration the said treaty and approving of the stipulations therein, to the end that the same may be carried into effect: Therefore

"SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the assent of Congress is hereby given to the stipulations of said treaty."

Now, that resolution took the position that Congress, including the House, of course, could, under the Constitution, and ought, under the Constitution, expressly give its assent to the ratification of any treaty.

The Senate, on July 17, restored the bill to its original shape, in this way rejecting the distinctive position of the House that the consent of Congress as a legislative body is necessary to the payment of money and the incorporation of territory when provided for in a treaty. This conflict of opinion between the two Houses led to the two bills being sent to a conference committee, the Senatorial members of which insisted that the House was absolutely bound to carry out the stipulations of a treaty which was duly ratified by the Senate. (See Congressional Globe for 1867, pages 4031, 4159, 4302.) The committee, however, finally unite on the following measure:

"An act making an appropriation of money to carry into effect the treaty with Russia of March 30, 1867.

"Whereas the President of the United States on the 30th of March, 1867, entered into a treaty with the Emperor of Russia, by the terms of which it was stipulated that in consideration of the cession by the Emperor of Russia to the United States of certain territory therein described the United States should pay to the Emperor of Russia the sum of $7,200,000 in coin; and

"Whereas it was further stipulated in said treaty that the United States shall accept such cession and that certain inhabitants of said territory shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights and immunities of citizens of the United States; and

"Whereas said stipulations can not be carried into full force and effect except by legislation to which the consent of both Houses of Congress is necessary: Therefore

"Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $7,200,000 in coin to fulfill stipulations contained in the sixth article of the treaty with Russia concluded at Washington on the 30th day of March, 1867."

This measure, which was adopted in the House by a vote of 91 to 48, has the features of compromise strongly impressed upon it. All that it gives specific legislative assent to is the appropriation of $7,200,000. The preamble asserts, not merely that $7,200,000 is to be paid for the purchase, but that certain inhabitants of the territory should be admitted to certain privileges. The resolution says nothing about the privileges and confines itself to the appropriation. So far, therefore, as Congress was concerned, there was no action which might be regarded as taking the position that the House has the prerogative of affirming or rejecting, at its discretion, execution of a treaty when such execution is dependent on its action. This right, however, is implied in the resolution of the House adopted on July 14, 1867.

On all this history, from the beginning of the Jay treaty down to this time, Mr. Wharton makes this note at bottom of page 28:

The question, therefore, which was agitated in 1796, whether Congress can, under the Constitution, refuse, in its legislative capacity, to pass acts for the execution of treaties duly ratified, remains still open. Yet two positions may be regarded as accepted in the practical working of our Government. One is that without a Congressional vote there can be no appropriation of money which a treaty requires to be paid. The other is that it should require a very strong case to justify Congress in refusing to pass an appropriation which is called for by a treaty duly ratified.

The result of all the Congressional action on this subject, if applied to this particular case, would simply mean that after the Senate had ratified by two-thirds of the Senators present the treaty which is now before it, then the House in its legislative capacity could determine whether or not it would make the appropriation necessary to carry it out. From beginning to end there is no assertion of the right on the part of the House of Representatives to participate in the making of a treaty or to accomplish by legislation that which can only be accomplished by a treaty.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, in view of the fact that we are to meet at an early hour to-morrow, I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that he allow the Senate to adjourn or proceed to executive business.

Mr. DAVIS. Has any motion been made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PENROSE in the chair). There has been no motion made.

Mr. FAULKNER. It was merely a suggestion.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggested to the Senator from Minnesota that he might move either to adjourn or have an executive session in view of the early hour at which we are to meet to-morrow, it being now 5 o'clock.

Mr. DAVIS. I should prefer not to make either of those motions just now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears objection.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FAULKNER. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will let us have an executive session.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection. I will withdraw the motion if the Senator wishes to move to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Arkansas will yield—

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to call up the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection.

Mr. TURLEY. I merely wish to state that I shall take very little more time, but it is quite warm this evening, and I am tired. I should like to have a few minutes in the morning, just to close up.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives upon certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6897) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. There are but a few items in the bill now undisposed of. The first conference agreed to a great number of items and disagreed as to some. One of the disagreements was upon amendment No. 12, which relates to the municipal free library in this District. After the disagreement the House of Representatives receded from amendment No. 12 and proposed to agree to it with an amendment striking out the Senate amendment and inserting a provision which I shall not ask to have read unless some Senator desires that it be read.

Mr. TELLER. What amendment is it?

Mr. ALLISON. Amendment No. 12, which relates to the municipal library in this District.

Mr. TELLER. It has not been agreed to by the conferees?

Mr. ALLISON. No; we have not agreed to it. I want now to move to disagree to that amendment. I ask that the amendment proposed by the House of Representatives may be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amendment numbered 12: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment and insert:

"Free public library: For librarian, $2,000; first assistant librarian, $900; second assistant librarian, $720; and for rent, fuel, light, fitting up rooms, and other contingent expenses, $3,160; in all, $6,780: Provided, That whenever said library shall be opened for public use such books, periodicals, and papers in the existing libraries in the several Executive Departments and offices of the Government in the city of Washington as in the judgment of the head of the Department, bureau, or office affected are not required for the special official use of said Department, bureau, or office shall be transferred as a loan to the free public library and reading room for its use, and it is hereby made the duty of the head of each Department, bureau, or office in which a circulating library is maintained for the use of employees of the Government to deliver all such books, periodicals, and papers, without delay, as a loan to the free public library and reading room, and thereafter no general circulating library, but only such library as is required for its special official use, shall be established or maintained by any Department, bureau, or office of the Government in the District of Columbia; but the books, periodicals, and papers so loaned shall be and remain the property of the United States and shall be labeled in such manner as to show such ownership."

Mr. ALLISON. The purpose and aim of this new and rather singular amendment is to so legislate as to compel the several heads of Departments to turn over or loan to this municipal library all the books that are not necessary for immediate use in the several Departments, which I think is a sweeping provision that ought not to be agreed to in a conference report. Therefore I move that the Senate disagree to that amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hope the motion of the Senator from Iowa will prevail, and that the Senate may by such an emphatic vote sustain it as will let it be understood that the Senate means what it says.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Iowa restate his motion?

Mr. ALLISON. My motion is that the Senate disagree to the amendment proposed by the House to amendment of the Senate numbered 12.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER. Unanimously.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unanimously.

Mr. ALLISON. The House also proposed a long amendment in the nature of radical legislation to amendment No. 74. If any Senator desires to hear that read, I am willing that it shall be read.

Mr. FAULKNER. Is that what is called the Pitney amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. It is the amendment proposed in the House for legislation relating to conduits in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FAULKNER. A subject over which the Committee on the District of Columbia has been working for several years, and it is a matter which was brought to the attention of the conferees without ever having been before the Senate at all for its consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. It has never been before the Senate.

Mr. FAULKNER. The amendment of the House ought to be rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate disagree to that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the motion?

Mr. ALLISON. I move to disagree to the amendment proposed by the House to amendment No. 74.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, in order that the two Houses may reach a conclusion and may be more nearly together upon this subject, the Senate conferees who considered this question recommend to the Senate that it recede from amendments Nos. 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, and 74, being all the amendments made by the Senate relating to the subject of electric lighting. If this recession is agreed to, it will leave the provision relating to electric lighting as it originally passed the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate recede from its amendments Nos. 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, and 74. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa, before we pass from this question, are those the amendments which provided for the removal of overhead wires?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes. The amendments were originally put on the bill by the Senate. The House of Representatives, after a conference on the subject, present to us an entirely new scheme of conduits in this city, to be constructed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, under a plan, a reading of which plan, I think, will show that it is impracticable of adoption, at least upon a conference report. The idea of the committee is that this whole matter shall rest as the House placed it and be dealt with more at large by the Committee on the District of Columbia in this body and by the proper committee in the House of Representatives next winter, when these matters can be debated and understood in both Houses as they can not be in a conference report.

Mr. LODGE. The reason I asked the question was because I have understood—and the Senator will correct me if I am wrong—that there is now legislation on the statute book—I think reported by the then Senator from Vermont, Mr. Edmunds—preventing the erection of overhead wires within certain city limits. There have been poles and wires put up by the Western Union Telegraph Company on Fourteenth street and they have recently put up a new set on Thirteenth street. They are putting up poles disfiguring the streets, and, so far as I can see, they are absolutely violating the law.

I introduced a resolution of inquiry here some months ago to the District Commissioners, asking for an explanation in regard to this subject, of which resolution the Commissioners have taken absolutely no notice so far as I am aware. It seems to me that the law ought to be enforced, and that we ought not to allow a well-considered policy of that kind to be set aside by these telegraph and electric-light companies.

Mr. FAULKNER. The electric-light companies are not doing it, I will state; and the Western Union Telegraph Company claim a perfect right to do what they have done.

Mr. ALLISON. They claim that they have a perfect right to come within this jurisdiction. Whether that be true or not I do not know; but in removing the Western Union Telegraph office from the corner of Fifteenth and F streets to the corner of Fourteenth and F streets it was found necessary to rearrange to some extent their overhead wires, which they claimed the right to erect under existing law.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Do they claim the right to do it all over the city?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand not.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I see that telegraph poles are being put up along the alleys of the city in a number of places.

Mr. ALLISON. Most of those, I think, or a great number of them, are being put up by the District Commissioners. We have a local telephone and telegraph system for the police.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It seems to me there is a very large number of wires for any private enterprise of that sort. I do not know anything about it except that I see that wires are being put over the house tops in all directions.

Mr. LODGE. They have put some new poles on Thirteenth street as well as on Fourteenth street recently, and there seems to be no regard paid to the law to which I have referred, which I thought was an extremely wise one. It seems to me the committee should take some action about it, and I thought these amendments would cover that difficulty.

Mr. ALLISON. They cover a portion of that difficulty. They cover all wires used for electric-lighting purposes, which are to be taken down within a year. They require also that all telephone wires shall be taken down in eighteen months.

After we have agreed to this bill and after we have had one conference upon it, we are projected into a plan which looks to the erection of a complete system of conduits for all wires which shall be erected in nearly the entire business and residence portions of this city, which conduits are to be placed there by the District Commissioners taxing or assessing the people who are willing to rent or occupy the wires and providing a large number of ducts in the conduits for future purposes.

It is probably a good scheme, but it is entirely too big a scheme to be dealt with in a conference report within five days of the 1st day of July, the beginning of the fiscal year. Therefore, after looking it over, those who have had charge of this matter during the session believe that it is wiser to relegate the question to the next session of Congress; and in order to bring the two Houses together, I move to recede from the amendments I have named which were made to this bill by the Senate.

Mr. FAULKNER. That has already been done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That motion has been agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I also, for the same reason, move to recede from amendment No. 128, which is a part of the provision relating to the taking down of the poles.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa to recede from Senate amendment No. 128.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The House of Representatives still insist upon their disagreement to amendments Nos. 143 to 167, inclusive, which are all amendments relating to charities in this District. It will be borne in mind that the House of Representatives appropriated a lump sum for these charities, whilst the Committee on Appropriations recommended specific appropriations for the various charities as heretofore. The House disagrees to our amendments in that regard and insists upon their disagreement, and I now move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments Nos. 143 to 167, inclusive.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I further move that the Senate agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives upon amendment No. 13 and upon amendments Nos. 143 to 167, inclusive, these being the only matters now in difference between the two Houses after the vote of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

Mr. TELLER. Before this question is disposed of, I merely want to say a word. We have had many conference reports coming in of late. I do not mean the conference reports on the amendments which have been attempted to be put into these bills, but we had before us to-day a conference report which came in a few days ago, and we have passed a bankruptcy bill which I will venture to say not one-fifth of the members of the Senate have ever read, and I will venture to say, further, that there are not three men in the Senate who know what that bill means. I did the best I could with it with several hours' work, and I do not yet know what it means, and I do not suppose if I should have given six hours more to its consideration I should have known very much about it. This is a vicious way for us to legislate.

Here comes a proposition to change the library system of the city of Washington. Nearly all the Departments have libraries for the benefit of their employees. I believe under a properly constituted scheme it would be well to consolidate all these various libraries into one library, but it can not be done intelligently and decently in this way. When such a bill comes here, it should go before the proper committee, which can take time to consider it in all its bearings and details, and then the Senate should have an opportunity to deal with the bill. The same is true in relation to this question of charities, which can not be properly dealt with on an appropriation bill, and ought not to be dealt with on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CULLOM. You mean the legislative provisions.

Mr. TELLER. I mean that there is too much legislation necessary in regard to the system of charities to make it proper to be put on an appropriation bill. We can make the bare appropriations. That, however, is not what is in controversy, as I understand now.

I merely desire to enter my protest and to express the hope that the Senate committee will stand up to the rules which ought to govern us with reference to conference amendments and conference changes, and this vicious legislation by conference committees of which the Senate and the House have no knowledge or control.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand at the Secretary's desk it is not thoroughly understood that I moved to recede, and that the Senate did recede, from amendment No. 74. I named that amendment particularly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion was that the Senate recede from amendments Nos. 69 to 74, inclusive.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so stated from the desk and took the numbers down as they came from the lips of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I so understood.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion was to recede from amendments Nos. 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, and 74.

Mr. ALLISON. That was my motion.

MARTHA E. FLESCHERT.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3697) for the relief of Martha E. Fleschert, to report it favorably without amendment. It is a very small matter, and one which has heretofore passed the Senate in a different form. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Martha Elizabeth Fleschert, née Stevenson, of St. Louis, Mo., $212.50, for services rendered by her as hospital matron in and for One hundred and thirtieth and One hundred and seventeenth regiments of Illinois Volunteers for seventeen months, from October, 1862, to March, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CASSIUS G. FOSTER.

Mr. DAVIS. On behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, I ask the Senate to proceed at this time to the consideration of the bill (S. 4786) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the judicial district of Kansas.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That Cassius G. Foster, United States judge for the district of Kansas, may, at his option, resign as such district judge at any time after the 1st day of September, A. D. 1898, and thereupon he shall receive the same salary during the remainder of his natural life as he is now receiving, and in the same manner as if he had reached the age of 70 years at the time of his resignation, as provided by section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Cassius G. Foster."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, June 25, 1898, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 25, 1898.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, there being less than a dozen Senators present, I think the roll should be called.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest that the absentees be called.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators.

The following Senators having answered to their names:

Allen,	Davis,	Jones, Ark.,	Penrose,
Albion,	Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Pettus,
Bacon,	Faulkner,	McBride,	Platt, Conn.,
Baker,	Frye,	McEnery,	Sewell,
Bate,	Gallinger,	Mantie,	Shoup,
Berry,	Gorman,	Milla,	Sullivan,
Burrows,	Hale,	Mitchell,	Teller,
Cannon,	Hansbrough,	Morgan,	Tarley,
Clark,	Hawley,	Morrill,	White,
Clay,	Hoar,	Nelson,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. CULLOM and Mr. LINDSAY entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. BURROWS. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER, Mr. DEBOE, Mr. ROACH, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. PERKINS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE-PRESIDENT (at 11 o'clock and 19 minutes a. m.). Forty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings will be read.

On motion of Mr. CULLOM, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

INDEMNITY TO STATES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting draft of a bill to indemnify the governors of States for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDNANCE STORES AND SUPPLIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting additional supplemental estimates of appropriations for "Ordnance, ordnance stores, and supplies" required for the use of the War Department for the first six months of the fiscal year 1899, $2,590,200; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM C. EATON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia submitting an estimate of appropriation to pay an additional judgment against the District of Columbia in favor of William C. Eaton, amounting, with costs, to $1,551.80; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FREEMAN CARY.

Mr. ALLEN presented a paper in support of the pension claim of Freeman Cary, of Ewing, Nebr.; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

TIMBER SEIZURES IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I present a statement signed by a number of citizens of Batesville, Ark., showing the facts in connection with the seizure of timber at Batesville. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TILLMAN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1498) for the relief of George M. Smith, late acting third assistant engineer, United States Navy, submitted an adverse report thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2673) granting an increase of pension to Diana Clark, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9732) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Walker, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 4138) to restore the name of Charles L. Summers to the pension roll; and

A bill (H. R. 1373) granting an increase of pension to Frances P. Trumbull.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 6427) for the relief of Clarissa A. Dunham; and

A bill (H. R. 8501) for the relief of Corydon G. Crafts.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2497) to increase the pension of James E. Eaton, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 4818) granting an increase of pension to Leander J. White; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4819) granting a pension to Lafayette Davis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4820) granting a pension to James Brown; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4821) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds to Albert V. Conway, substituted trustee, for certain registered United States bonds redeemed or assigned by the Government upon forged assignments; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 4822) for the relief of the Citizens' Bank of Stuart, Holt County, Nebr.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CANNON introduced a bill (S. 4823) granting an increase of pension to Phineas L. Squires; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MCBRIDE introduced a bill (S. 4824) to amend section 2275 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by an act approved February 28, 1891; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PETTIGREW introduced a bill (S. 4825) granting an increase of pension to Charles L. Summers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPOONER submitted an amendment proposing to pay $238.75 to Michael Conlan, being the difference between the compensation of a laborer and that of a messenger from December 2, 1889, to March 31, 1890, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAFFERY submitted an amendment relative to the salaries of employees at the mint at New Orleans, La., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCBRIDE submitted an amendment proposing to pay A. W. Patterson $249.07, being balance of salary from July 31 to December 1, 1897, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

VERONA E. POLLOCK.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 153.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 153) for the relief of Verona E. Pollock.

Mr. ALLEN. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendments of the House and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLEN, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. MARTIN were appointed.

APPOINTMENT OF MILITARY SECRETARY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business appears to be closed.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to proceed—

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to call up a bill which I should like to have passed? It will take but a moment, I think.

Mr. ALLISON. I am under pressure from the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. If he yields to the Senator from New Jersey, I will yield.

Mr. SEWELL. It will take only a few minutes. It is a military bill which I reported some days ago.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4742) providing for the appointment of a military secretary to the Secretary of War.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The amendments were, in line 9, to strike out "lieutenant-colonel" and insert "major;" in line 13, after the word "law," to strike out "and who may be assigned to other duty in the discretion of the Secretary of War;" and to add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided, however, That when said office shall once have been filled and become vacant through death, resignation, or retirement, the provisions of this bill shall thereupon become null and void.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to select a person whom he may consider to be especially well qualified for the performance of the duties of the office by reason of long and faithful service in the War Department, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to appoint him in the Army to be military secretary to the Secretary of War, who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major, and who shall perform such duties in the Department of War as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War or may be required by law: Provided, however, That when said office shall once have been filled and become vacant through death, resignation, or retirement, the provisions of this bill shall thereupon become null and void.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. The report has been read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report has been read. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, there are only a few items, I understand, still in disagreement and left open between the two Houses—four or five I think. There are two items relating to public buildings, one for a post-office building at Butte, Mont., and the other for a post-office building also at Annapolis, Md. The item in relation to Annapolis is for the erection of a post-office building at the capital of the State. Maryland is the only one of the original States, and I believe the only one of four or five States in the Union, that has not had provision made for a building for post-office and other public purposes at its capital. It has been the custom to place items for post-office buildings at the capitals of States on the sundry civil appropriation bill. Twice before this item has been placed upon the sundry civil bill and withdrawn in the Senate at my suggestion because of complications growing out of a disagreement between the two Houses.

I understand the appropriation is objected to elsewhere because at the present session of Congress no public-building bill has been considered by the coordinate branch. But it is manifestly unjust to Maryland and Montana in these two cases. I do not care to have a vote on the question to-day, but I give notice that when we come back to the consideration of this measure, if there shall be further disagreement on it, all the facts connected with it and all the facts connected with other appropriations in the bill where the same rigid rule has not been applied will be brought to the attention of the Senate, and in defense of the people whom I in part represent I shall show that a great discrimination has been made against them. The matter has been considered now for three or four years. I merely desire to say so much at present, but if it shall become necessary hereafter, I propose to go very much further into the subject.

Mr. MANTLE. Mr. President, I want to say just a word in line with what the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] has just stated respecting the public-building items that are now in dispute between the two Houses of Congress. I wish to say at the outset that I have no fault whatever to find with the Senate conferees. On the contrary, I owe to them my sincerest thanks, which I gladly tender, for the effort which they have put forth in connection with the item respecting a public building at Butte City, Mont. I know that they have made every effort to secure the adoption of the amendment. I know the fact that the matter is still in disagreement is no fault of theirs. But I do believe that an examination of many matters relating to appropriations during the last session, and perhaps some items during this session, will disclose the fact that all have not been treated fairly.

I am aware it is said that this is not a public-building Congress, and therefore no appropriations shall be made for the purpose of public buildings. Mr. President, it seems to me that it is not a good argument. I think that all questions relating to the appropriation of public moneys should rest purely and solely upon the merit of the item involved; it makes no difference whether it shall be for a public building or for any other purpose. The only question which ought to be taken into consideration should be whether the appropriation is necessary, whether it is demanded by the public necessities.

Mr. President, I am quite certain, and I believe I have convinced the Appropriations Committee of this body, that there is an absolute public necessity for this appropriation in the case of Butte City, Mont. I do not intend at this time to enter into a discussion of the merits of the matter. If I did, I could very easily convince every member of this body of the truth of what I say. It is an exceptional case, unusually so. There is an urgent, absolute, and immediate necessity for a public building in that great and growing city of the Northwest.

Just here, that it may go into the RECORD, and perhaps with the hope that it may catch the eye of some in the other branch of Congress who may be interested, I wish to say that the State of Montana is divided by the main range of the Rocky Mountains, and the two divisions are known as western Montana and eastern Montana. Western Montana contains a majority of the population of that State. It contains a majority of the wealth and of the votes of the State. The city of Butte—for which this appropriation is asked for the purpose of purchasing a site for a public building—contains within its limits, and within a radius of 5 miles of its city hall, more than one-fourth of the entire population of the State of Montana. It is a great, growing, thriving, prosperous community. There is not another one like it in the Northwest, nor indeed in the United States. Its population is now 50,000, and it is increasing at the rate of from 500 to 1,000 per month. The receipts of the post-office are increasing yearly at the rate of $10,000 per year.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Montana allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANTLE. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. Is there not a term of the Federal court held at Butte?

Mr. MANTLE. There is; and the accommodations are wholly and utterly inadequate to meet the necessities of the court.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact—because I served upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for some years—that it has always been the rule that the Federal courts should at the earliest possible time be held in Federal buildings, independent of questions of population and post-office requirements.

Mr. MANTLE. What the Senator says is true, and the accommodations at that point for the internal-revenue offices, the Federal courts, and the post-office are wholly insufficient and inadequate.

Mr. President, it is not an unfrequent sight in passing by the post-office in the city of Butte to find a line of applicants waiting to get their mail at the general delivery extending out of the doors of the post-office across the sidewalk and along the edge of the sidewalk—waiting to get inside the office in order to get their mail; and there is absolutely not room for the patrons of the office who have boxes of their own to turn around after getting in.

Another fact is that the citizens themselves are to-day compelled, and have been for years, to pay the rent for such post-office accommodations as they have, the Government actually refusing to pay enough to secure quarters at all commensurate with the needs of the people.

The town is growing; it is growing in every direction. The people are putting up handsome buildings, five and six stories in height. They have waterworks which have cost over $2,000,000. They have a splendid sanitary system. Their streets are paved. They have a million dollars invested in handsome and substantial public school buildings. They have a beautiful public library building, which has cost over $100,000, and nearly 25,000 volumes of high-class books, which are read. Everything is progressing in that locality over which the city and private enterprise has control. The only thing that is at a standstill and behind the times is the public building, which is controlled by the General Government.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate any longer at this time, but I certainly shall ask my colleagues here, in view of what I have stated and of much more which I could state, to stand by this amendment. It will be recalled that when the amendment was adopted it was done by the unanimous consent of the Senate. I did not care to take advantage of the fact that my amendment was in order, but preferred to submit it to the consideration of the Senate, and not to attach it except by unanimous consent.

A bill for this purpose has already passed the Senate twice. A like amendment has twice been attached to a sundry civil appropriation bill; and to-day there seems to be great danger, because of the opposition of the conferees on the part of the House, that the amendment will again be defeated, notwithstanding the oft-expressed wish of the Senate.

Mr. President, I submit this matter to the Senate, and I ask Senators to stand by and sustain the amendment, and especially in view of the fact, as I stated before, that not a dollar of the public moneys has been appropriated for what is called western Montana. During my brief service in this body I have asked for nothing special; I have not asked a dollar for anything of this sort except in this particular case; nor would I press this subject now with such urgency were it not that this building is an absolute public necessity for the people of Butte.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to inquire with regard to amendment No. 127, relative to forest reservations.

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment the Senate conferees receded from. The Senate conferees receded from amendment No. 127, excepting so much of it as is found on page 71, within lines 5 and 16, if the Senator has the bill before him. That was really a separate amendment, and it ought to have been so marked in the bill. But it was not done.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What is the proposition of the Senator from Iowa? I did not understand him.

Mr. ALLISON. I was responding to an inquiry made by the Senator from South Dakota, who asked what had become of amendment No. 127. I stated that the amendment had been receded from by the Senate conferees, except that portion of it between lines 5 and 16, inclusive, on page 71.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, with regard to this amendment, it provides:

That the Executive orders and proclamations dated February 22, 1897, setting apart and reserving certain lands in the States of Wyoming, Utah, Montana, Washington, Idaho, and South Dakota as forest reservations, be, and they are hereby, suspended, and the lands embraced therein restored to the public domain the same as though said orders and proclamations had not been issued, but nothing herein contained shall be construed as abridging in any way the right of the President to set apart and reserve forest reservations as provided by the act approved March 3, 1891: Provided further, That the provisions of the "Act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes," approved June 4, 1897, authorizing the settler or owner of land included within the limits of a public forest reservation to select other land in lieu thereof, are hereby extended and made applicable to any State or Territory to which public lands have been or shall be granted, reserved, or pledged for the use of schools, colleges, or other purposes therein.

The orders made by President Cleveland without any examination of the areas whatever set apart over 20,000,000 acres of the public domain as forest reservations. In the State of South Dakota they embraced an area of 1,000,000 acres, occupied by 15,000 people, occupied by over 20 post-offices, with a county seat having 1,200 inhabitants, with farms, and mills, and mines by which 15,000 people earned a livelihood. Now, without any modification, that is allowed to remain, to the detriment, to the injury, to the ruin of those people.

One year ago last spring the Senate passed an amendment to the sundry civil bill vacating the improvident and ignorant orders creating the reservations. In conference it was agreed that they should be suspended until the 1st of last March, and in the meantime it was expected that something would be done to adjust their boundaries, so as to exclude from their areas vast sections of country that had no timber and upon which thousands of people were living. Partial surveys have been made; something of an investigation of this question has been had by the Secretary of the Interior, but it is incomplete. The consequence is that no relief has been granted and nothing has been done.

Owing to this fact, the Senate placed this amendment in the bill, vacating the order, but especially reserving to the President the right to make new orders, so as to embrace those areas which might properly be embraced within a forest reservation. The House refuses to agree to that proper provision. I wish to call the attention of the people of the West, and particularly the people of South Dakota, to this fact, and to the political complexion of the House that refuses to grant this just and fair relief.

For my part, I do not think the bill ought to pass at all. The sundry civil appropriation bill ought to fail if the House of Representatives refuses to do justice to those people. Some of the people who went into that country twenty-three years ago have raised families; they have raised boys there who now have become voters; they have lived all their lives upon this land; and yet by this Executive order that entire country is closed and they are shut in a reservation without any reason for it, without any public good in it.

The people of that region are willing to have the forests embraced within the reservation. They would be glad to have it done. They are glad to have the forest preserved and they are willing to do their part to assist in their preservation. They are more interested in it than any other people in the world and more anxious to have it done. But to have cities and towns and farms and hundreds of thousands of acres upon which there is not a tree embraced within a forestry reserve, to have this hardship imposed upon those people and nothing whatever done to give them relief, is an outrage that ought not to be tolerated.

The committee ought to have insisted upon this amendment, or at least upon a suspension of the order until the boundaries could be properly adjusted. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether any effort was made to have the orders suspended until an adjustment of the boundaries of the reservations could be secured.

Mr. ALLISON. The contention on the part of the House was that it is within the scope and power of the President of the United States to modify these orders from time to time to meet the difficulties of the situation in the States as respects the reservations; that they knew—that is their contention—the Secretary of the Interior is only awaiting the action of Senators and Representatives from those States to present such a modification as is desirable in the States; and that that would be done at any time when such representation was made. They said that the term having expired March 1, 1898, they would not again enter into the question of closing up the reservations when it was within the power of Senators and Representatives and the people affected by the reservations to secure a modification of them in accordance with justice as regards those who are settlers upon them.

I will say to the Senator that the Senate conferees urged as well as we could, imperfectly, of course, the arguments which have been presented for the vacation of the orders. But we found the House resolute upon the subject, the House conferees stating that all this matter is to be easily adjusted through the executive department.

Mr. PETTIGREW. One year ago we appropriated, I think, $150,000 to survey these reservations under the direction of the Geological Survey, for the purpose of determining what areas should be forest reservations and what areas should be opened up.

Mr. WILSON. That is where we made the mistake.

Mr. PETTIGREW. We were told that within one year, or before the 1st of March, 1898, under that provision, absolute justice would be done. March came and nothing had been done, the surveys had not been completed; and now we are told that it is the fault of the Senators from the States in which the reservations are located.

Mr. ALLISON. No; I do not—

Mr. PETTIGREW. How can we tell just what boundaries, just what townships, just what sections of land shall be vacated? We paid for a survey for that purpose and have not the report.

Mr. ALLISON. The conferees on the part of the House insisted that this whole matter is open not only to Senators and Representatives, but to the representations of the people interested, and that the matter would be adjusted by Executive order when the representations were made. That was their contention.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The representations have been made. They have been made for a year constantly, as far as we were able to make them. But we were told all last session, "Wait until the survey has been made;" and to-day nothing has been done. Fifteen thousand people are embraced within this reservation; at least 150,000 or 200,000 acres of land are embraced in it upon which there is not a tree.

Mr. CULLOM. Is the survey going on?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not know. There is a town—the city of Custer—in that country with 1,200 people. It has been an organized town for twenty-one years. There are voters there who were born there. They are embraced in a forest reserve, and we get no relief. I say the committee should have insisted upon a vacation of this order until that relief came, until a proper adjustment of those boundaries was had. We have pressed this matter constantly, and yet we get no relief whatever. The representatives of those States have not been derelict in their duty in this matter. We have visited time and again and urged and pleaded for justice in this connection.

Mr. SHOUP. We have been to the President and to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PETTIGREW. As the Senator from Idaho says, we have been to the President and to the Secretary of the Interior. Now, here is given as the reason why they will not do anything, because it is in our power to secure the relief, and if we will not do it they will not do it. So it goes on, and the property of those people is destroyed and their prosperity blighted and their rights as American citizens taken away.

We encourage the pioneers to go to the frontier and build homes and conquer the wilderness, and carry the American flag and American civilization, and build schools and churches, and when we have done it we embrace them within a forest reserve without reason or sense, without investigation, without a hearing, for these reservations were created without any notice to any representative from any State affected. Not one of us was consulted; there was no advertisement; no one went there to look at it.

A junketing expedition was sent out in a palace car, which was occupied by five so-called scientists. They never entered the area in my State which was made a reservation. They went across the corner of the State on the Burlington road; they went to the Yellowstone National Park and stopped at the hotel at the Great Springs, and then wrote back to Washington and asked the Department to furnish them franked envelopes with which to write letters. When they got through there they went up to the State of Washington. They visited Puget Sound and Mount Tacoma, or Mount Rainier, and saw the glaciers. Then they came back and reported that the Olympian Mountains ought to be embraced within the forest reservation, so as to preserve the water, so that the rainfall would not be decreased—a region where the rainfall is 13 feet a year. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. Twelve feet?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes; where the rainfall is 12 feet each year. They embraced that region in the forest reservation and still insist upon its being embraced in a forest reservation in order that the rainfall shall not be decreased, when it is so wet there that when a forest gets on fire the tops of the trees only burn; the forest is so dense that the fire runs through the tops and never burns down within 200 feet of the ground, and yet they made that a forest reservation in order to conserve the water supply of that country!

They made a reservation in Wyoming. The commissioner of Wyoming visited their palace car at Sheridan. They were in sight of the Big Horn Mountain. There is scarcely a tree from that point in sight of the Big Horn Mountain. There is a little timber in the ravines and upon the top of the mountain. The Wyoming commissioner urged them to stop and go with him and visit the area where the forest was, but they were in too big a hurry to get to the Yellowstone National Park, and so they would not go with him and never did go; and from that park, 30 miles away, they marked out the boundaries of a forest reservation which contains hundreds of thousands of acres of land upon which a tree never grows.

Mr. CULLOM. Who were these scientists?

Mr. PETTIGREW. They were some arboriculturists from Boston. A man by the name of Sargeant was one of them, but I do not remember the names of the others.

We have tried to remedy this injustice. We passed an amendment on the sundry civil appropriation bill a year ago vacating these improvident and ignorant reservations. We were told that the matter would be investigated, and therefore we amended our provision at the instigation of the House of Representatives and gave to the 1st of March to investigate. A partial investigation has been made, but nothing has been done. These scientific gentlemen have never made a report.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator why these reservations were made in the first instance, if he knows?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think I can give the Senator a more detailed history than I have of that matter. In the first place, these scientific gentlemen evidently wanted a trip. So they began corresponding with the Secretary of the Interior about preserving the timber in the Western mountains so as to preserve the water supply. It was finally arranged that they should make an investigation. Then they said it would take $25,000 to pay the expenses of the trip; and Congress made an appropriation of $25,000 for an investigation, and these people got a private car and made the trip I have just described. They spent the $25,000.

What did they do with the money? They have never made a report, and yet they have reserved and marked out the boundaries of 21,000,000 acres of land that they never visited and never saw and called it a forest reservation; and Cleveland issued the order under the authority of the statute of 1891, in the passage of which I was instrumental, because I wanted a forest reserve established in that country to preserve the forests and because the people of the West wanted those forests preserved. Therefore, in that statute, we gave the President the power to set apart these reservations.

But, Mr. President, we did not count upon the junketing rascality of science or suppose for a moment that ignorance would ever be President of the United States. In that regard we were in error. We ought not to have passed a law giving this authority. If the law had been intelligently administered, no more vigilant and earnest supporters of the policy could be found than the people of the West. Now, because the authority is ignorantly exercised, we are attacked and called robbers, and they say we want to steal the timber and plunder the public domain. The Eastern newspapers are full of falsehoods in regard to our position; and these scientific frauds, who spent our money and never made a report, are having interviews and publishing articles in the Eastern journals to show what timber thieves the Western representatives are.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, these men ought not to be in ignorance of that section of the country, for any person who has traveled over it knows very well that 75 per cent of it is sagebrush land without any timber on it and the other 25 per cent grows simply a scraggy pine, the trees 10 or 12 rods apart and fit for nothing except stove wood and possibly large enough occasionally to make railroad ties.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In the State of South Dakota in the area embraced within this forest reserve there are, in my opinion, 600,000 acres of land upon which the Rocky Mountain pine grows, which will renew itself when cut off. It is a pine which grows very rapidly when the forest is destroyed either by fire or by the ax. There are 400,000 or 500,000 more acres which are not embraced in the reservation that ought to be in it, but there are 400,000 acres embraced in it that ought not to be in it. That is the situation.

Mr. WILSON. Where is the 1,440,000,000 feet, board measure, of lumber which has been referred to by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] as being in the Black Hills?

Mr. PETTIGREW. What the Senator said is true in regard to at least 400,000 acres of the area embraced in this reservation, but there are about 600,000 acres which are covered with a young forest of Rocky Mountain pine, which is very fair timber.

Mr. WILSON. Not to do any injustice to that section, I will say they have some very valuable timber.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes, and also in the Dakotas; and not embraced in the forest reservation is the best forest we have, which ought to be embraced.

Mr. ALLEN. I was speaking more particularly in regard to the Big Horn Mountain country.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Every word the Senator has said about the Big Horn Mountain country is true; but there is practically nothing of value embraced within the forest reservation. It lies in an altitude of from 6,000 to 10,000 feet. In South Dakota and in Wyoming a forest reserve can be made intelligently by honest men, embracing 1,100,000 acres, which would be a blessing to that country in preserving its timber, cutting the ripe trees, planting where they are too thin, and letting the young timber grow—pursuing the policy of Austria and of France.

Napoleon, who was one of the greatest civil administrators in the world—a greater civil administrator than he was a soldier—inaugurated a policy for the preservation of the forests of France in all its details, and it is the law of France to-day. He provided that those forests should be surveyed; that every tree should be examined and marked; that no tree below a certain size should be cut; that only timber which was ripe, which had ceased to grow larger and had reached the point where it began to deteriorate, should be taken from the forest. The result is that they have an income in France of millions of dollars a year, and their forests grow better every year.

So it is in Austria, where they have an income of $5,000,000 a year from their forests; and their forests are far superior to-day to what they were fifty years ago. Masts for ships have been cut from trees which have been planted and are already large enough for use. They have splendid forests, with every kind of timber known to that country. We can do the same thing, if we wish to do it, and we ought to do it with the native forests of the Rocky Mountains, but we ought to do it with some intelligence and honesty. It is the lack of honesty and the lack of intelligence that we complain of in this connection. We have the remedy in our own hands, and we ought to insist upon it that this injustice ought not to be allowed.

This reservation has been made where there is a mining town where they cast 400 votes. Three hundred and seventy-five of them, however, were for Bryan, and perhaps that was the trouble. That area was embraced within this forest reservation, where gold mining is in progress; and yet, being embraced within that forest reservation, they can not cut a tree. There are two organized counties there, a portion of four counties, and nearly the whole of the county of Custer, and the city of Custer, with 1,200 people, is embraced in the reservation. There are 20 post-offices and 60 miles of railroad, and the wood supply of 15,000 people is drawn from this area for the great mining plants around Deadwood. They should draw their wood supply and pay for it.

Trees should be marked and designated, officers should be placed in charge, and those trees sold, and the mining companies are anxious to have that done. They want it done because otherwise they would have to buy the wood of people who slash down the timber so that the tops are not cleaned up and fire runs through it. The investigations of the Geological Survey show that in the Black Hills more than fifty times more timber has been destroyed by fire since the settlement of that country than by the ax.

We want forest reserves, but we want some intelligence manifested in selecting the forest areas, and therefore we want this order modified. This amendment should go back and this conference report should be rejected, and we should insist at least upon a continuance until next January, so that the areas can be modified and so that some intelligence can be exercised in creating these reservations. I therefore ask the Senate to reject this report and send it back to conference for that purpose.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I believe this is the third time I have been compelled to make some observations upon these forest reservations. I think it is a fact that the largest area withdrawn in any single section of the country was in the State I have the honor in part to represent. I have said almost everything that could be said on the subject; I have visited the President in regard to these matters in conjunction with other Senators; I have talked with the Secretary of the Interior and with the Commissioner of the General Land Office; I have filed statements showing that counties, towns, and mining claims have all withdrawn and that many of the people living within those areas were in despair.

I think, however, Mr. President, that the mistake we have made—and I should like to have the attention of the Senator from South Dakota—that the mistake we have made in this matter is that we have depended entirely too much upon the Geological Bureau. As stated by the Senator, we have made an appropriation of $150,000 for that Bureau for the purposes of making the survey and attempting to determine whether the boundaries set apart by the order of President Cleveland were the true and correct and accurate boundaries, or whether they could be modified in any degree.

The result is a report from that Bureau which reaches no conclusion, which gives us only facts in regard to how much timber is in these reservations, their area, the old timber, the burnt timber, and the young timber. That is about all they state. They do not, in any single instance that I have been able to find in this report, say whether any reservation may be diminished, as is demanded by the Senator from South Dakota or as is demanded by the people in Clallam County, in the State of Washington, where they have already surveyed the land which is occupied; and I have a letter here, which I have had printed, from the pastor of the Methodist Church, which, if it were read to the Senate, would show what a great hardship has been perpetrated upon those people.

Mr. President, on yesterday I had an interview with the Secretary of the Interior along lines somewhat different. What he desires to do is this—and I think I am authorized to speak for him in this respect—to immediately upon the passage of this bill and its signing by the President to appoint men to take charge of the reservations. First, to take three districts, if I may illustrate his plan, in the State of Washington, and he puts one general supervisor over the three districts. Then he appoints for each district an inspector of forests; and they appoint in turn their axmen, and reduce this entire area to sections, townships, and ranges for examination and report upon what should be eliminated and what should be retained; and these appointments are to be made, as very properly suggested to me by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], from the actual localities which surround these forest reservations; in other words, in their midst.

Mr. GALLINGER. How about the money?

Mr. WILSON. I will reach that point about the money in one moment.

This seemed to me to be a practical way to determine what shall be forest reservations and what shall not be. Unfortunately, the appropriation, in my judgment, is not large enough. We appropriated $150,000 for the Geological Bureau; and that Bureau, in my judgment, can get more money than any other bureau in this Republic at all times and under all circumstances and do less with it of benefit to the American people. But, nevertheless, $150,000 has been appropriated for that purpose; and when we come to the point of an appropriation to take charge of over 22,000,000 acres of land, to determine what is dead-and-down timber, to determine what can be sold and what can not be sold, to eliminate a portion of these reservations and to retain a portion of these reservations, we are to receive $75,000.

Mr. President, we are face to face with a condition. If our Eastern friends, if the people of the East who have the control of this matter, are to arrange for these forestry reservations, they must be prepared, without begging, without solicitation, without annoyance of the Appropriations Committee, to make a reasonable appropriation to carry these matters into full force and effect, and instead of having $75,000 this year, we ought to have $300,000 to start this work with, and get it determined at as early a date as possible what shall be forestry reservations and what shall not be. It is going to take—

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President—

Mr. WILSON. I want to state, before I yield to the Senator from Arkansas, that it is going to take $20,000,000 to fix up these reservations as these scientific gentlemen have started out to do; and a mere $75,000 appropriation for 8,000,000 acres of land out in the heart of our State seems to me exceedingly unjust, unwise, and ungenerous. Now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator has made a study of this question, and I want to ask if he has made any calculation of the annual saving, the annual amount of money which would go into the Treasury from the sale of timber, which, if left in the condition it is now, would likely be destroyed? How much is likely to go into the Treasury annually from the sale of this sort of timber that would otherwise be lost if it is not economized by some intelligent system?

Mr. WILSON. It is almost impossible to answer the Senator's question, for now all the reservations in my State, for illustration, if the Senator will permit me, are so far remote from the avenues of trade and commerce that they have but little merchantable timber in them outside of Clallam County. The forestry reservation known as the Olympic Forest Reservation is an unexplored country in large measure, and they might very properly have taken up a million acres there and accomplished the purpose they desired by the withdrawal of a million acres; but instead of that they withdrew in that one reservation nearly 2,000,000 acres, and in Clallam County—an organized county, with a county seat, and people living throughout the county, the land all surveyed along the border, composed in round numbers of a million acres of land in the county—they withdrew for a forest reservation over 900,000 acres, leaving the county absolutely crippled.

The Secretary of the Interior—and I have had many conversations with him upon this subject—has been extremely solicitous and anxious to do something at the earliest date; but, unfortunately for us, I think that where we made a mistake is that we started out with a survey of this land by the Geological Bureau and have got a scientific report. I would prefer to have had a report from people who thoroughly understand the subject, who live in the immediate vicinity, and know what is right and proper.

We want to conserve the timber of our State as much as possible. It is our great wealth. We understand that as well as any people on earth. We want the boundaries located so that no injustice will be done to the settler and no injustice will be done to the miner, giving an opportunity for commerce and trade to pass through these reservations. In my State they have withdrawn 8,000,000 acres out of the heart of the State. Every railroad which crosses my State will have to come to Congress to get a right of way over this reservation. We are asking for water for our cities. If these reservations are to stand, we will have to come to Congress to get water for those cities.

All these things enter into this contest. We must be prepared to go forward, as I said a few moments ago, and make liberal appropriations, because you can not and you must not, and, if we have the power, you shall not, set apart these reservations, and then not give us the money to carry them into full force and effect.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, this question has been so often presented to the Senate that it does not seem necessary at this time to challenge attention to it at any great length. Prior to 1891 timber was available for mining and other domestic purposes on the public domain only when cut upon mineral lands. The question as to what lands were mineral and what were not mineral constituted always a question of fact. Persons who were found cutting timber upon the public domain in many cases were arrested, indicted, and prosecuted by the United States for trespass. In other cases actions were commenced for a recovery of damages, but I do not now recall an instance of a conviction in a criminal prosecution, and rarely, if ever, save as the result of a compromise, was a verdict obtained in a civil suit. The juries always believed that the timber had been cut upon the mining lands, and that therefore no wrong had been done under the law.

These prosecutions, however, and actions at law to recover damages were not only very expensive to the United States, but constituted a source of great annoyance and continual expense to the people, who were driven by necessity to cut timber for the improvement of their homes and the development of their mining property.

To obviate or dispose of such constantly increasing lawsuits and prosecutions, a certain section was incorporated in the act of March 3, 1891, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior, under certain conditions, to grant permits to individuals to cut timber on the public domain. The law did not authorize the Secretary of the Interior to collect any stumpage charge or to sell the timber; it merely authorized him to grant permits in particular cases to cut the timber and carry it away, not beyond the limits of the State or Territory, however.

Mr. President, in pursuance of that brief section of law, the Interior Department promulgated certain rules and regulations, and permits were granted. This permit system worked very well, but it did not yield any revenue to the United States. Large bodies of timber were cut down and disposed of, in some instances in the open market, and the United States received no part or portion of the benefit arising from the transaction.

In the same law the President of the United States was authorized to create forest reservations. In connection with that section of law certain rules and regulations were provided by the Department looking to the creation of forest reservations with the least possible injury to the country and the least possible friction with the settlers. It was provided, for instance, that where a forest reservation was to be set apart public advertisement of the fact should be made in the newspapers published nearest the land proposed to be set apart as a reservation, and all persons having ought to say for or against the proposed reservation were invited to come forward and say what they had to say either in favor of or against the contemplated action.

Thus it was that the settler who discerned from the description of the land proposed to be embraced in the reservation notice that his own land was to be included could in due and proper course of time file his protest and have his day in court.

The law administered under such rules and regulations did not result in any serious embarrassment either to the Government or to the people. The case now under consideration, which has challenged the attention of the Senate continuously since 1897, arose from a plain disregard by the Department of its own rules and regulations. No notice was given to the people in the sections of country where the reservations were to be created; no notice was given to the State authorities or the Territorial authorities, and no notice whatever was given to the Senators or Representatives from the respective States. The first notice the people of Montana, Washington, South Dakota, or Wyoming had that millions upon millions of the area of the respective States named were thenceforward to be included in reservations came when the proclamations were announced defining the exterior boundaries of those reservations. The same may be stated of Idaho and the other States included within that order, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] wisely and properly suggests to me.

Mr. President, having failed to give the people their day in court or an opportunity to protest, it was found after the reservations were created that whole communities, school districts, organized townships, organized cities and towns, organized mining districts and camps, were embraced within the limits of a forest reservation—places, as the Senator from South Dakota has suggested, where from four to six hundred votes were cast in the election immediately preceding. Those persons found they stood upon the same status before the law, practically, as the great North American Indian. They had been placed by an Executive order upon a reservation.

The result of this was the discovery of the fact that inadvertently the President of the United States had undertaken by Executive order to compress an incompressible force. An American citizen will not be put upon a reservation and be kept there by Executive order or any law that can be passed, unless he shall have been regularly convicted of crime before a jury of his peers and sentenced to serve his term in a penitentiary or some reservation set apart for the punishment of criminals. In the omission to observe the plain rules of the Department by the President of the United States in these orders issued all this difficulty arose. We have been contending with it ever since, and I apprehend that we will, in one form or another, continue to be annoyed by this matter until the wrong shall be righted, the reservations set aside, and the proceeding commenced by the United States de novo under the proper rules and regulations promulgated to govern it, unless the reservation lines are promptly readjusted under the direction of practical men familiar with the conditions.

After ascertaining that these reservations, so extensive in area and so recklessly bounded by descriptions, had been set apart, Senators and Representatives from the States affected undertook in one way and another to relieve their people from the heavy burden thus imposed. Meetings were called. We had a conference with the present Secretary of the Interior. I think every Senator who was present will bear witness to the fact that the Secretary of the Interior manifested not only a willingness, but an anxiety to do whatsoever he could under the law to ameliorate the condition of the people who had been included within the reservations.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] reminds me of an incident very clearly illustrating the difficulties connected with this inadvertent line of Executive action. Some years ago we were camped together south of the Yellowstone Park. We there gained knowledge of a number of persons who had come from far South to settle in that section of the country. They were building their homes. They were preparing to open up their farms, preparing to build the schoolhouse and the church and to lay the foundation of the civilization that the American people so well understand how to establish.

Within the period of a few months after those people had settled in that country with their all, carried by the wagons they had driven there, they were startled by the announcement that the President of the United States had placed that country within a forest reservation. Nothing was left for those poor people but to pack whatever was left of their earthly goods and go elsewhere. If a notice had been published that such action was contemplated, these good people could have been heard. It would have been possible for the Senator from Wisconsin and myself, conversant by practical observation with their condition, to go before the Department to plead their cause and ask that they be excluded, with their homes and families, from the reservation limits.

Mr. President, as the result of a conference with the Secretary of the Interior after the orders of February 22, 1897, were promulgated it was practically agreed and understood that the Secretary would promulgate rules and regulations looking to the administration of the law relative to forest reservations in a manner agreeable to the people of the country affected, and, further still, that the work of surveying the boundaries for the purpose of excluding portions that ought not to be included would be prosecuted with vigor.

I think probably a mistake was made, as suggested by the Senator from Washington, in the instrumentality employed to make the survey. Two years have passed or thereabouts, and yet the surveys have not been made to any appreciable extent. No one knows how soon they will be made. I believe, however, it would have been wiser at that time to have accepted the understanding with the Secretary of the Interior, to have cooperated with him—his good will was beyond question—in attempting to exclude from the reservations, by Executive orders issued from time to time with reference to each, such portions of land as ought not to have been included. That course, however, was not pursued.

I think it would be instructive at this time to include in my remarks, and I will ask the privilege of including therein, the section of the law then agreed upon with the Secretary of the Interior, introduced as an amendment by the Senator from South Dakota and passed into a law as a part of the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898.

The text of the law then agreed to is as follows:

[Public—No. 2.]

An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, for the objects hereinafter expressed, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, namely:

For the survey of the public lands that have been or may hereafter be designated as forest reserves by Executive proclamation, under section 24 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," and including public lands adjacent thereto, which may be designated for survey by the Secretary of the Interior, $150,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That to remove any doubt which may exist pertaining to the authority of the President thereunto, the President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to revoke, modify, or suspend any and all such Executive orders and proclamations, or any part thereof, from time to time as he shall deem best for the public interests: Provided, That the Executive orders and proclamations dated February 22, 1897, setting apart and reserving certain lands in the States of Wyoming, Utah, Montana, Washington, Idaho, and South Dakota as forest reservations, be, and they are hereby, suspended, and the lands embraced therein restored to the public domain the same as though said orders and proclamations had not been issued: Provided further, That lands embraced in such reservations not otherwise disposed of before March 1, 1898, shall again become subject to the operations of said orders and proclamations as now existing or hereafter modified by the President.

The surveys herein provided for shall be made, under the supervision of the Director of the Geological Survey, by such person or persons as may be employed by or under him for that purpose, and shall be executed under instructions issued by the Secretary of the Interior; and if subdivision surveys shall be found to be necessary, they shall be executed under the rectangular system, as now provided by law. The plats and field notes prepared shall be approved and certified to by the Director of the Geological Survey, and two copies of the field notes shall be returned, one for the files in the United States surveyor-general's office of the State in which the reserve is situated, the other in the General Land Office; and twenty photolithographic copies of the plats shall be returned, one copy for the files in the United States surveyor-general's office of the State in which the reserve is situated; the original plat and the other copies shall be filed in the General Land Office, and shall have the facsimile signature of the Director of the Survey attached.

Such surveys, field notes, and plats thus returned shall have the same legal force and effect as heretofore given the surveys, field notes, and plats returned through the surveyors-general; and such surveys, which include subdivision surveys under the rectangular system, shall be approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office as in other cases, and properly certified copies thereof shall be filed in the respective land offices of the districts in which such lands are situated, as in other cases. All laws inconsistent with the provisions hereof are hereby declared inoperative as respects such survey: Provided, however, That a copy of every topographic map and other maps showing the distribution of the forests, together with such field notes as may be taken relating thereto, shall be certified thereto by the Director of the Survey and filed in the General Land Office.

All public lands heretofore designated and reserved by the President of the United States under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1891, the orders for which shall be and remain in full force and effect, unsuspended and unrevoked, and all public lands that may hereafter be set aside and reserved as public forest reserves under said act, shall be, as far as practicable, controlled and administered in accordance with the following provisions:

No public forest reservation shall be established, except to improve and protect the forest within the reservation, or for the purpose of securing favorable conditions of water flows, and to furnish a continuous supply of timber for the use and necessities of citizens of the United States; but it is not the purpose or intent of these provisions, or of the act providing for such reservations, to authorize the inclusion therein of lands more valuable for the mineral therein, or for agricultural purposes, than for forest purposes.

The Secretary of the Interior shall make provisions for the protection against destruction by fire and depredations upon the public forests and forest reservations which may have been set aside or which may be hereafter set aside under the said act of March 3, 1891, and which may be continued; and he may make such rules and regulations and establish such service as will insure the objects of such reservations, namely, to regulate their occupancy and use and to preserve the forests thereon from destruction; and any violation of the provisions of this act or such rules and regulations shall be punished as is provided for in the act of June 4, 1888, amending section 5388 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

For the purpose of preserving the living and growing timber and promoting the younger growth on forest reservations, the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, may cause to be designated and appraised so much of the dead, matured, or large growth of trees found upon such forest reservations as may be compatible with the utilization of the forests thereon, and may sell the same for not less than the appraised value in such quantities to each purchaser as he shall prescribe, to be used in the State or Territory in which such timber reservation may be situated, respectively, but not for export therefrom. Before such sale shall take place notice thereof shall be given by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, for not less than sixty days, by publication in a newspaper of general circulation, published in the county in which the timber is situated, if any is therein published, and if not, then in a newspaper of general circulation published nearest to the reservation, and also in a newspaper of general circulation published at the capital of the State or Territory where such reservation exists; payments for such timber to be made to the receiver of the local land office of the district wherein said timber may be sold, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe; and the moneys arising therefrom shall be accounted for by the receiver of such land office to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in a separate account, and shall be covered into the Treasury. Such timber, before being sold, shall be marked and designated, and shall be cut and removed under the supervision of some person appointed for that purpose by the Secretary of the Interior, not interested in the purchase or removal of such timber nor in the employment of the purchaser thereof. Such supervisor shall make report in writing to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and to the receiver in the land office in which such reservation shall be located of his doings in the premises.

The Secretary of the Interior may permit, under regulations to be prescribed by him, the use of timber and stone found upon such reservations, free of charge, by bona fide settlers, miners, residents, and prospectors for minerals, for firewood, fencing, buildings, mining, prospecting, and other domestic purposes, as may be needed by such persons for such purposes; such timber to be used within the State or Territory, respectively, where such reservations may be located.

Nothing herein shall be construed as prohibiting the egress or ingress of actual settlers residing within the boundaries of such reservations, or from crossing the same to and from their property or homes; and such wagon roads and other improvements may be constructed thereon as may be necessary to reach their homes and to utilize their property under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. Nor shall anything herein prohibit any person from entering upon such forest reservations for all proper and lawful purposes, including that of prospecting, locating, and developing the mineral resources thereof: Provided, That such persons comply with the rules and regulations covering such forest reservations.

That in cases in which a tract covered by an unperfected bona fide claim or by a patent is included within the limits of a public forest reservation, the settler or owner thereof may, if he desires to do so, relinquish the tract to the Government, and may select in lieu thereof a tract of vacant land open to settlement not exceeding in area the tract covered by his claim or patent; and no charge shall be made in such cases for making the entry of record or issuing the patent to cover the tract selected: Provided further, That in cases of unperfected claims the requirements of the laws respecting settlement, residence, improvements, etc., are complied with on the new claims, credit being allowed for the time spent on the relinquished claims.

The settlers residing within the exterior boundaries of such forest reservations, or in the vicinity thereof, may maintain schools and churches within such reservation, and for that purpose may occupy any part of said forest reservation, not exceeding 2 acres for each schoolhouse and 1 acre for a church.

The jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, over persons within such reservations shall not be affected or changed by reason of the existence of such reservations, except so far as the punishment of offenses against the United States therein is concerned; the intent and meaning of this provision being that the State wherein any such reservation is situated shall not, by reason of the establishment thereof, lose its jurisdiction, nor the inhabitants thereof their rights and privileges as citizens, or be absolved from their duties as citizens of the State.

All waters on such reservations may be used for domestic, mining, milling, or irrigation purposes, under the laws of the State wherein such forest reservations are situated, or under the laws of the United States and the rules and regulations established thereunder.

Upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, with the approval of the President, after sixty days' notice thereof, published in two papers of general circulation in the State or Territory wherein any forest reservation is situated, and near the said reservation, any public lands embraced within the limits of any forest reservation which after due examination by personal inspection of a competent person appointed for that purpose by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be found better adapted for mining or for agricultural purposes than for forest usage, may be restored to the public domain. And any mineral lands in any forest reservation which have been or which may be shown to be such, and subject to entry under the existing mining laws of the United States and the rules and regulations applying thereto, shall continue to be subject to such location and entry, notwithstanding any provisions herein contained.

The President is hereby authorized at any time to modify any Executive order that has been or may hereafter be made establishing any forest reserve, and by such modification may reduce the area or change the boundary lines of such reserve, or may vacate altogether any order creating such reserve.

Approved June 4, 1897.

Mr. CARTER. I will also ask the privilege of inserting, for the instruction of those who may desire to ascertain the facts through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the circular letter of the Department construing this law.

The letter is as follows:

[Circular.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 20, 1897.

1. Under the authority vested in the Secretary of the Interior by the act of Congress, approved June 4, 1897, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes," to make such rules and regulations and establish such service as will insure the objects for which forest reservations are created under section 24 of the act of March 3, 1891 (25 Stat., 1095), the following rules and regulations are hereby prescribed and promulgated:

OBJECT OF FOREST RESERVATION.

2. Public forest reservations are established to protect and improve the forests for the purpose of securing a permanent supply of timber for the people and insuring conditions favorable to continuous water flow.

3. It is the intention to exclude from these reservations, as far as possible, lands that are more valuable for the mineral therein, or for agriculture, than for forest purposes; and where such lands are embraced within the boundaries of a reservation, they may be restored to settlement, location, and entry.

PENALTIES FOR VIOLATION OF LAW AND REGULATIONS.

4. The law under which these regulations are made provides that any violation of the provisions thereof, or of any rules and regulations thereunder, shall be punished as is provided for in the act of June 4, 1888 (25 Stat., 166), amending section 5336 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows:

"That section 5336 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows: 'Every person who unlawfully cuts, or aids, or is employed in unlawfully cutting, or wantonly destroys or procures to be wantonly destroyed, any timber standing upon the land of the United States, which, in pursuance of law, may be reserved or purchased for military or other purposes, or upon any Indian reservation, or lands belonging to or occupied by any tribe of Indians under authority of the United States, shall pay a fine of not more than $500 or be imprisoned not more than twelve months, or both, in the discretion of the court.'

This provision is additional to the penalties now existing in respect to punishment for depredations on the public timber. The Government has, also, all the common-law civil remedies, whether for the prevention or redress of injuries, which individuals possess.

5. The act of February 24, 1897 (29 Stat., 594), entitled "An act to prevent forest fires on the public domain," provides—

"That any person who shall willfully or maliciously set on fire, or cause to be set on fire, any timber, underbrush, or grass upon the public domain, or shall carelessly or negligently leave or suffer fire to burn unattended near any timber or other inflammable material, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the same, shall be fined in a sum not more than $5,000 or be imprisoned for a term of not more than two years, or both.

"SEC. 2. That any person who shall build a camp fire, or other fire, in or near any forest, timber, or other inflammable material upon the public domain, shall, before breaking camp or leaving said fire, totally extinguish the same. Any person failing to do so shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the same, shall be fined in a sum not more than $1,000, or be imprisoned for a term of not more than one year, or both.

"SEC. 3. That in all cases arising under this act the fines collected shall be paid into the public-school fund of the county in which the lands where the offense was committed are situated."

Large areas of the public forests are annually destroyed by fire, originating, in many instances, through the carelessness of prospectors, campers, hunters, sheep herders, and others, while in some cases the fires are started with malicious intent. So great is the importance of protecting forests from fire that this Department will make special effort for the enforcement of the law against all persons guilty of starting or causing the spread of forest fires in the reservations in violation of the above provisions.

6. The law of June 4, 1897, for forest-reserve regulations also provides that—

"The jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, over persons within such reservations shall not be affected or changed by reason of the existence of such reservations, except so far as the punishment of offenses against the United States therein is concerned, the intent and meaning of this provision being that the State wherein any such reservation is situated shall not, by reason of the establishment thereof, lose its jurisdiction, nor the inhabitants thereof their rights and privileges as citizens, or be absolved from their duties as citizens of the State."

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE USE.

7. It is further provided that—
"Nothing herein shall be construed as prohibiting the egress or ingress of actual settlers residing within the boundaries of such reservations, or from crossing the same to and from their property or homes; and such wagon roads and other improvements may be constructed thereon as may be necessary to reach their homes and to utilize their property under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. Nor shall anything herein prohibit any person from entering upon such forest reservations for all proper and lawful purposes, including that of prospecting, locating, and developing the mineral resources thereof: Provided, That such persons comply with the rules and regulations covering such forest reservations.

"The settlers residing within the exterior boundaries of such forest reservations or in the vicinity thereof may maintain schools and churches within such reservation, and for that purpose may occupy any part of the said forest reservation, not exceeding 2 acres for each schoolhouse and 1 acre for a church.

"All waters on such reservations may be used for domestic, mining, milling, or irrigation purposes under the laws of the State wherein such forest reservations are situated or under the laws of the United States and the rules and regulations established thereunder."

8. The public, in entering, crossing, and occupying the reserves for the purposes enumerated in the law, are subject to a strict compliance with the rules and regulations governing the reserves.

9. Private wagon roads and county roads may be constructed over the public lands in the reserves wherever they may be found necessary or useful, but no rights shall be acquired in said roads running over the public lands as against the United States. Before public timber, stone, or other material can be taken for the construction of such roads, permission must first be obtained from the Secretary of the Interior. The application for such privilege should describe the location and direction of the road, its length and width, the probable quantity of material required, the location of such material, and its estimated value.

10. The permission to occupy public lands in the reserves for schoolhouses and churches, as provided for in the law, is merely a privilege, and is subject to any future disposition that may be made of such tracts by the United States.

11. The right of way in and across forest reservations for irrigating canals, ditches, flumes, and pipes, reservoirs, electric-power purposes, and for pipe lines will be subject to existing laws and regulations.

12. Under the term "to regulate their occupancy and use," the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to grant such licenses and privileges, from time to time, as may seem to him proper and not inconsistent with the objects of the reservations nor incompatible with the public interests.

13. The pasturing of live stock on the public lands in forest reservations, will not be interfered with so long as it appears that injury is not being done to the forest growth and the rights of others are not thereby jeopardized. The pasturing of sheep is, however, prohibited in all forest reservations, except those in the States of Oregon and Washington, for the reason that sheep-grazing has been found injurious to the forest cover, and therefore of serious consequence in regions where the rainfall is limited. The exception in favor of the States of Oregon and Washington is made because the continuous moisture and abundant rainfall of the Cascade and Pacific coast ranges make rapid renewal of herbage and undergrowth possible. Owners of sheep are required to make application to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for permission to pasture, stating the number of sheep and the location on the reserves where it is desired to graze. Permission will be refused or revoked whenever it shall appear that sheep are pastured on parts of the reserves specially liable to injury or upon and in the vicinity of the Bull Run Reserve, Crater Lake, Mount Hood, Mount Rainier, or other well-known places of public resort or reservoir supply. Permission will also cease upon proof of neglect as to the care of fires made by herders or of the violation by them of any of the forest reserve regulations.

RELINQUISHMENT OF CLAIMS.

14. The law provides that where a tract within a forest reservation is covered by an unperfected bona fide claim, or by a patent, the settler or owner may, if he so desires, relinquish the tract to the United States and select in lieu thereof a tract of vacant public land outside of the reservation, open to settlement, not exceeding in area the tract relinquished. No charge is to be made for placing the new entry of record. This is in consideration of previous fees and commissions paid. Where the entry is in lieu of an unperfected one, the necessary fees in the making of final proof and issuance of certificate will be required. Where the entry is based on an unsurveyed claim, as provided for in paragraph 17 hereof, all fees and commissions attending entry must be paid, none having been paid previously.

15. Where an application is made for change of entry under the above provision, it must be filed in the land office for the district in which the lieu selection lies. The application must describe the tract selected and the tract covered by the unperfected entry, and must be accompanied by a formal relinquishment to the United States of all right, title, and interest in and to the tract embraced in said entry. There must also be filed with the application an affidavit, corroborated by at least two witnesses cognizant of the facts, showing the periods and length of claimant's residence on his relinquished claim, as credit for the time spent thereon will be allowed under the new entry in computing the period of residence required by law. Residence and improvements are requisite on the new entry, the same as on the old, subject only, in respect to residence, to a deduction of the period covered by the relinquished entry.

16. Where final certificate or patent has issued, it will be necessary for the entryman or owner thereunder to execute a quitclaim deed to the United States, have the same recorded on the county records, and furnish an abstract of title, duly authenticated, showing chain of title from the Government back again to the United States. The abstract of title should accompany the application for change of entry, which must be filed as required by paragraph 15, without the affidavit therein called for.

17. In case a settler on an unsurveyed tract within a forest reservation desires to make a change of settlement to land outside of the reservation and receive credit for previous residence, he should file his application as provided for in paragraph 15, including the affidavit as to residence therein required, and describing his unsurveyed claim with sufficient accuracy to enable the local land officers to approximately determine its location.

18. All applications for change of entry or settlement must be forwarded by the local officers to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for consideration, together with report as to the status of the tract applied for.

LOCATION AND ENTRY OF MINERAL LANDS.

19. The law provides that "any mineral lands in any forest reservation which have been or which may be shown to be such, and subject to entry under the existing mining laws of the United States, and the rules and regulations applying thereto, shall continue to be subject to such location and entry," notwithstanding the reservation. This makes mineral lands in the forest reserves subject to location and entry under the general mining laws in the usual manner.

20. Owners of valid mining locations made and held in good faith under the mining laws of the United States and the regulations thereunder are authorized and permitted to fell and remove from such mining claims any timber growing thereon for actual mining purposes in connection with the particular claim from which the timber is felled or removed. (For further use of timber by miners, see below, under heading "Free use of timber and stone.")

FREE USE OF TIMBER AND STONE.

21. The law provides that—

"The Secretary of the Interior may permit, under regulations to be prescribed by him, the use of timber and stone found upon such reservations, free of charge, by bona fide settlers, miners, residents, and prospectors for minerals, for firewood, fencing, buildings, mining, prospecting, and other domestic purposes, as may be needed by such persons for such purposes; such timber to be used within the State or Territory, respectively, where such reservations may be located."

This provision is limited to persons resident in forest reservations who have not a sufficient supply of timber or stone on their own claims or lands for the purposes enumerated, or for necessary use in developing the mineral or other natural resources of the lands owned or occupied by them. Such persons, therefore, are permitted to take timber and stone from public lands in the forest reservations under the terms of the law above quoted, strictly for their individual use on their own claims or lands owned or occupied by them, but not for sale or disposal, or use on other lands, or by other persons: Provided, That where the stumpage value exceeds $100, application must be made to and permission given by the Department.

SALE OF TIMBER.

22. The following provision is made for the sale of timber within forest reservations in limited quantities:

"For the purpose of preserving the living and growing timber and promoting the younger growth on forest reservations, the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, may cause to be designated and appraised so much of the dead, matured, or large growth of trees found upon such forest reservations as may be compatible with the utilization of the forests thereon, and may sell the same for not less than the appraised value in such quantities to each purchaser as he shall prescribe, to be used in the State or Territory in which such timber reservation may be situated, respectively, but not for export therefrom. Before such sale shall take place, notice thereof shall be given by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, for not less than sixty days, by publication in a newspaper of general circulation, published in the county in which the timber is situated, if any is therein published, and if not, then in a newspaper of general circulation published nearest to the reservation, and also in a newspaper of general circulation published at the capital of the State or Territory where such reservation exists; payments for such timber to be made to the receiver of the local land office of the district wherein said timber may be sold, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe; and the moneys arising therefrom shall be accounted for by the receiver of such land office to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in a separate account, and shall be covered into the Treasury. Such timber, before being sold, shall be marked and designated, and shall be cut and removed under the supervision of some person appointed for that purpose by the Secretary of the Interior not interested in the purchase or removal of such timber nor in the employment of the purchaser thereof. Such supervisor shall make a report in writing to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and to the receiver in the land office in which such reservation shall be located of his doings in the premises."

The sale of timber is optional, and the Secretary may exercise his discretion at all times as to the necessity or desirability of any sale.

23. While sales of timber may be directed by this Department without previous request from private individuals, petitions from responsible persons for the sale of timber in particular localities will be considered. Such petitions must describe the land upon which the timber stands by legal subdivisions, if surveyed; if unsurveyed, as definitely as possible by natural landmarks; the character of the country, whether rough, steep, or mountainous, agricultural or mineral, or valuable chiefly for its forest growth; and state whether or not the removal of the timber would result injuriously to the objects of forest reservation. If any of the timber is dead, estimate the quantity in feet, board measure, with the value, and state whether killed by fire or other cause. Of the live timber, state the different kinds and estimate the quantity of each kind in trees per acre. Estimate the average diameter of each kind of timber, and estimate the number of trees of each kind per acre above the average diameter. State the number of trees of each kind above the average diameter it is desired to have offered for sale, with an estimate of the number of feet, board measure, therein, and an estimate of the value of the timber as it stands. These petitions must be filed in the proper local land office for transmission to the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

24. Before any sale is authorized, the timber will be examined and appraised and other questions involved duly investigated by an official designated for the purpose, and upon his report action will be based.

25. When a sale is ordered, notice thereof will be given by publication by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in accordance with the law above quoted; and if the timber to be sold stands in more than one county, published notice will be given in each of the counties, in addition to the required general publication.

26. The time and place of filing bids, and other information for a correct understanding of the terms of each sale, will be given in the published notices. Timber is not to be sold for less than the appraised value, and when a bid is accepted a certificate of acceptance will be issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the successful bidder, who, at the time of making payment, must present the same to the receiver of public moneys for the land district in which the timber stands. The Commissioner of the General Land Office must approve all sales, and he may, in sales in excess of $500 in value, make allotments of quantity to several bidders at a fixed price, if he deems proper, so as to avoid monopoly. The right is also reserved to reject any or all bids. A reasonable cash deposit with the proper receiver of public moneys, to accompany each bid, will be required.

27. Within thirty days after notice to a bidder of an award of timber to him payment must be made in full to the receiver for the timber so awarded. The purchaser must have in hand the receipt of the receiver for such payment before he will be allowed to cut, remove, or otherwise dispose of the timber in any manner. The timber must all be cut and removed within one year from the date of the notice by the receiver of the award; failing to so do, the purchaser will forfeit his right to the timber left standing or unremoved and to his purchase money.
